15) Whereas they are in grace because their sins are forgiven (Rom. 5, 1. 8, 1.), and therefore should rejoice in the Lord.

(16) Yes, they admit no real sin, and yet they cry out piteously, asking for God's mercy, as seen in the Psalms.

The Lord's Prayer, prescribed by the Lord Himself to His saints and believers [Matt. 6:9], is a piece of repentance and a teaching that contains much of the Law.

(18) For he who prays the Lord's Prayer rightly confesses with his own mouth that he has sinned against the law, and that he is sorry for it.

19 For whoever asks that God's name be sanctified confesses that God's name is not yet fully sanctified.

20 And whoever asks that God's kingdom come, confesses that he is still partly in the devil's kingdom, which is opposed to God's kingdom.

(21) He who asks that God's will be done confesses that he is largely disobedient to God's will and that he is sorry for it.

22. But zero teaches God's law that the name of God should be sanctified; the one who asks for it confesses that he has not fulfilled this law.

(23) And he that abhorreth that which is left of the kingdom of Satan in him, the same germinateth that he hath not fulfilled the law, especially the law of the first table.

(24) And whoever asks that God's will be done in him confesses that he is not obedient to God's will.

25 Now this prayer must be prayed by the whole Church until the end of the world, and by every saint until death.

26 For the whole church is holy, recognizing that it has sin and must repent without ceasing.

For this reason, the Lord's Prayer itself teaches that the law is before, under, and after the gospel, and that repentance must begin with the law.

28 For he that asketh confesseth beforehand that he hath not what he asketh, and expecteth that it shall be given him.

29 Now it is the law that shows us beforehand what we do not have, and yet must necessarily have.

30 From this it follows that these enemies of the law must also renounce the Lord's Prayer where they renounce the law.

(31) Yes, they must also take away most of the preaching of our Lord Christ Himself from evangelical history.

32 For he himself, Matth. 5, 17. ff., not only states the law of Moses, but also fully interprets it and teaches that it should not be dissolved,

33 And instructing the Pharisee of the noblest and greatest commandment of the law, he confirmed the law, saying, "Do this, and thou shalt live." [Luc. 10:28.]

34 The Lord also punishes, reproves, threatens, terrifies everywhere in the Gospel and exercises the same office of the law,

(35) So that there have never been, nor will there ever be, more insolent men than these who teach that the law must be abolished.

36 Namely, the wretched people are ashamed to teach and do what the Lord Himself has done and taught.

(37) Suppose sin could be recognized by something other than the law, which is impossible:

(38) Should we therefore reject the law if it has the same effect that we could have elsewhere, namely, the knowledge of sin?

39 And although the law could be done away with according to grammar or the dead letter (materialiter) (for this must necessarily be their opinion),

40. But who will eradicate the living law, which is written in the hearts, and the handwriting, which was made by statutes, and is contrary to us, which is the same as the law of Moses? [Col. 2, 14.]

The fourth disputation of D. Martin Luther against the antinomians.

[January (?) 1538.]

Every Christian should beware of the papist doctrine of repentance; but much more of the doctrine of the antinomians, who allow no repentance at all in the church.

1) There has not been a more pernicious doctrine against penance in the Church (except the Sadducian and Epicurean) than that of the Papists.

(2) For it has taken away the whole and true repentance, not allowing the forgiveness of sins to be sure.

For they have taught that man (even he who repents) must be uncertain whether he is in God's grace and whether his sins are forgiven.

4. but have directed the poor man to the merit of his renege, confession, pardon, and finally to purgatory.

(5) And yet they have determined neither the measure nor the end of repentance, confession, atonement, nor even of purgatory.

(6) But why do you want to repent for a long time, if you are not sure whether your sins are kept or forgiven?

(7) In this way, the impenitent and secure are not taught that they must begin to repent.

(8) But those who are frightened and have begun to repent must fall into final impenitence.

(9) Christ is of no use to those who repent in this way, because they must doubt whether Christ died for their sin.

(10) Even the finite impenitence of those who despair is more dangerous than the impenitence of those who are sure.

The impenitence of the secure is a contempt of God; the final impenitence is a blasphemy against the Holy Spirit.

(12) Therefore, one must beware of the papist doctrine of repentance, as of hell and the devil himself.

(13) But much more must one beware of those who allow no repentance at all to remain in the church.

014 For they that say that the law ought not to be taught, intend that there should be no repentance at all and in fact.

15 This proof: "What is not necessary for justification, neither in the beginning, nor the means, nor the end, is not to be taught" 2c. is of no use at all.

First of all, if you were to ask what these lofty words: beginning, middle, end, mean? you will find that they themselves do not understand.

(17) As if you were to conclude thus: That a man is dead in sins is not necessary to justification, neither in the beginning, nor in the means, nor in the end; therefore this is not to be taught.

18. to honor parents, to live chastely, to abstain from murder, adultery, theft is not necessary for justification, therefore such things should not be taught.

(19) The fact that man is obliged to serve in the municipal and domestic regimes is not necessary for justification; therefore such a law must be abolished.

20 Such conclusions have been ridiculed and mockingly called by the Sophists in former times: A' baculo ad angulum. 1)

If this is the opinion of the syllogism, that this should not be taught as necessary for justification, then what is new?

(22) It does not follow that the law should be abolished or not taught, although it is of no use for justification.

23. in the subordinate clause (minore) the experience of Paul and Barnabas is falsely attracted, by whose ministry the Gentiles were justified without law. [Acts 13.]

(24) For Paul proves that all men are sinners (which is the office of the law) by the very fact that he teaches that they must be justified by Christ alone. (Apost. 13, 38.)

(25) Now he that is yet to be justified is a sinner without qualification, and not yet justified, and is convicted by the law alone that he is a sinner.

26. "Without law" is to become dust everywhere with Paul, as Augustine rightly interprets it: without the help of the law; which we have always followed.

(27) For the law does not help it [the law] to be fulfilled, but requires us to fulfill it.

28 And it demands even with such severity that, as Christ himself testifies, he will not let even a useless word go unpunished.

29. and, as the Lord again testifies, "not the smallest letter, nor one tittle, of the law can pass away until all is done." [Matth. 5, 18.]

In short, the debt must be paid to the last penny [Matth. 5, 26], if Christ is not set against this strict admonisher, the law.

The grace and forgiveness of sins do not make people safe from sin, death and the law, as if they were nothing anymore,

(32) But rather make us diligent and careful to overcome them daily through Christ our Savior.

For the law is not with us by any necessity on our part (nulla nostra necessitate), but is with us in fact, even without our will, before we are justified, and in the beginning, means, and end of justification, and after it.

34. for from the beginning of the sin which Adam committed, it wants to be taught, to be known and to reign, until it is fulfilled through Christ as the victor.

But faith in Christ alone justifies [Rom. 3:28], it alone fulfills the law, it alone does good works without the law,

For he alone receives forgiveness of sins and voluntarily does good works through love.

(37) It is true that after justification good works follow voluntarily without law, that is, without the help nor constraint of the law.

38 In sum, the law is not useful nor necessary for justification, nor for any good works, much less for salvation;

39 But vice versa: the justification,

1) This expression: Imeulo aä anAulum is used by an unrhymed conclusion: That fits like a glove. Cf. Walch, old edition, vol. VIII, 1662, § 152.

Good works and blessedness are necessary for the fulfillment of the law. 1)

For "Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost" [Luc. 19, 10.], and "to bring all things again", as St. Peter [Apost. 3, 21.] speaks.

(41) Therefore the law is not abolished by Christ, but restored, that Adam may be as he was, and even better.

The fifth disputation of D. M. Luther against the antinomians.

In the month of September [Sept. 13] 2) 1538.

1. "The law rules over man as long as he lives" [Rom. 7, 1.).

(2) But he shall be loosed from the law when he dieth.

Therefore, it is necessary for man to die if he wants to get rid of the law.

4 If the law rules over a man as long as he lives, sin also rules over him as long as he lives.

Therefore, if man wants to be free from sin, he must die.

For "the power of sin is the law, but the sting of death is sin" [1 Cor. 15:56].

These three, law, sin and death, are inseparable.

8 Therefore, as far as death is still in man, so far is sin and the law also in man.

(9) Apart from Christ, we receive the law, that is, the letter, which has not yet been fulfilled, and yet must necessarily be fulfilled by us.

(10) In Christ the law is fulfilled, sin is destroyed, death is destroyed,

(11) That is, if we have been crucified and have died in Christ through faith, these things [those mentioned in Thesis 10] are also truly with us.

1) Marginal gloss of the German Jena edition: Here the Christian reader sees publicly what M. Luther thinks of the Majoristic proposition, as if good works should be necessary for salvation, which testimony the Adiaphorists always boast of.

2) This date is derived from the Tischreden, Cap. 37, § 86, Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 1062.

(12) But if we live, we are not yet in Christ, but live apart from Christ under the law, sin and death.

(13) Now the matter itself and experience testify that even the righteous are still daily delivered to death, 14 Therefore, if they are under death, they must also still be under the law and sin.

15. they are definitely inexperienced people and deceivers of souls who want to take away the law from the church.

16 For this is not only foolish and ungodly, but also utterly impossible.

17 For if you want to take away the law, you must also take away sin and death at the same time.

For death and sin are present through the law, as Paul says: "The law kills" [2 Cor. 3, 6.] and: "The law is the power of sin" [1 Cor. 15, 56.).

19 But because you see before your eyes that the righteous are dying daily, it is very great foolishness to think that they are without law.

20 For if there were no law, there would be neither sin nor death.

(21) Therefore they should first prove that the righteous are without all sin and death,

(22) Or that they were no longer in the flesh, but had been taken out of the world altogether.

(23) Then it would be rightly taught that even the law should be abolished for them, and should not be taught in any way.

24 Because they cannot prove this, but experience shows them the opposite, (25) So these teachers are exceedingly insolent, that they would put away the law from the church.

(26) But this is much more impertinent, or rather nonsense, that they pretend that even the ungodly are to be delivered from the law, and that the same is not to be preached to them.

27 For if the saints and the righteous must be reproached for their sin and death, that is, for the law, to whom it was not given;

28. how much more should and must the law be presented to the wicked and evil, as to whom it is actually and primarily given?

(29) But where they say that their church or audience are all godly and Christians without law:

(30) So it is in the daytime that they are completely frantic, not knowing what to say or what to put.

31 For this is nothing else than to think that all their listeners have been taken away from this life.

(32) But to have such thoughts is as if one were to dream that games were taking place in an empty arena, and he were watching,

For in this world, both the righteous, who live in the flesh, and the wicked, who are always greater in number, are continually mixed together.

34 As therefore the law is given, without doubt, not that it should be rejected, but that it should be taught, that by it men might know sin and death, or the wrath of God:

(35) So it is also given to the godly, provided they have not yet died and are still alive in the flesh.

(36) In Christ, who was raised from death, there is certainly no sin, no death, no law, to which he was subject in life.

37 But the same Christ is not yet fully raised in His believers, even beginning to rise from death in them as the firstfruits.

38. but in the ungodly, who are mixed in with the church, and whose number is greater [than that of the pious], he is still quite dead; indeed, he is nothing at all in them.

39. they are under the law par excellence, and must be frightened by the law, even, where possible, with bodily thunderbolts.

(40) Therefore, as far as Christ is raised in us, so far are we without law, sin and death.

41. But as far as he is not yet raised up in us, so far are we under the law, sin and death.

Therefore, the law (as well as the gospel) must be preached without distinction to both the righteous and the wicked.

(43) To the wicked, so that they, frightened by it, may recognize their sin, the death and inevitable wrath of God, by which they shall be humbled.

44. to the godly, so that they may be reminded to crucify their flesh together with their lusts and desires, so that they do not become secure [Gal. 5:24].

45. because security takes away faith and the fear of God, and makes the last worse than the first was [2 Petr 2:20].

46 It is quite clear that the lawyers think that sin is essential (for- maliter) and as reason understands it (philosophice) or as the jurists judge it (juridice) is taken away by Christ,

47. and that they do not even understand that sin alone is taken away in such a way that God does not impute it [Ps. 32, 2.) and forgives it out of mercy.

(48) For only respectively (relative) saus graces, not essentially (formaliter) or according to its substance (substantialiter), is sin abolished, the law done away with, death destroyed.

49. And all this for Christ's sake, in this life, "until we come to be a perfect man, to the measure of the perfect age of Christ" [Eph. 4:3.).

50 We know it, and they have learned it of us, that Christ is made unto us a mystery (sacramentum) and an example.

This very beautiful written) thought is not ours, much less theirs, but of Augustine, 52) Since he says: Christ with his one agrees with our twofold, and makes a perfect number. 1)

(53) But neither Augustine, from whom this saying originated, nor we, his disciples, invented this conclusion that the law should therefore be abolished.

(54) They have added this inference from their head, that they might also invent something new and be held up before others, from the input of their master, the devil.

1) How this saying of Augustin is to be understood, compare Table Talks, Cap. 7, § 44. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 299.

The Holy Scripture shows us four ways of preaching 69) To abolish the law and let sin and death remain is and teaching people to salvation, which are taken from nothing else than to hide the plague of sin and death from four works of God. men to their destruction.

For God scares with threats, comforts with promises, When death and sin are abolished (as Christ did [2 admonishes with tribulations, entices with benefits. Tim. 1, 10. Rom. 8, 3.]), the law can be blessedly 57 But these four pieces do not abolish the law when abolished, even established (stabiliretur), Rom. 3, [v. they are taught, but reinforce the law. 31.].

58. "God's goodness leads you to repentance" [Rom. 2:4], that is, that you may realize that the law is the power of sin [1 Cor. 15:56].

(59) The reason why the law frightens and kills is that it directs man to himself or drives him to self-knowledge.

(60) But these enthusiasts go about taking away Christ Himself through the mystery (sacramentum) and example of Christ.

For when the law is taken away, no one knows what Christ is or what he did when he fulfilled the law for us.

For if I want to know the fulfillment of the law, that is, Christ, I must necessarily know what the law and its fulfillment are.

(63) This cannot be taught, unless it is taught that the law is not fulfilled in us, and that therefore we are guilty of sin and death.

64 When this is taught, we learn that we are all debtors to the law and children of wrath,

(65) The ungodly, either in the flesh and spirit, or wholly; but the godly, if they be yet in the flesh, and alive.

(66) Therefore, the doctrine of the law is necessary in the church and must be kept in it, because Christ cannot be kept without it.

67 For what keepest thou of Christ, if the law which he fulfilled be abolished, and thou knowest not what he fulfilled?

68 Finally, the law is so fulfilled in Christ that you cannot teach it in such a way unless you also teach that the law is not fulfilled in us.

The Sixth Disputation of D. M. Luther against the Antinomians

[10 Sept.] Anno 1540. 1)

Under the chairmanship of Mr. Martin Luther, Doctor of Theology, Magister Joachim Mörlin from Wittenberg will defend these theses next Friday in order to be admitted to the doctorate.

This conclusion of St. Paul - "where there is no law, there is no transgression" [Rom. 4, 15] - is not only spiritually (theologice), but also worldly (politice) and naturally (naturaliter) good.

2 Similarly, where there is no sin, there is no punishment, nor forgiveness of sin.

3 Likewise also these, where there is neither punishment nor forgiveness, there is neither wrath nor mercy.

4 Likewise, where there is neither wrath nor mercy, there is neither divine nor human government.

(5) Likewise, where there is neither divine nor human government, there is neither God nor man.

(6) Likewise, where there is neither God nor man, there is nothing but perhaps the devil.

7 Therefore the antinomians, the enemies of the law, are certainly either devils themselves or the devil's brothers.

8 And it does not help the antinomians at all that they boast that they teach very much about God, about Christ, about grace, about law 2c.

1) This caption in the old Allsgaben is missing in the original print, which offers the caption we have placed immediately below. Mörlin was creirt to Doctor of Theology on September 16, 1540. The disputation therefore probably took place shortly before, on Friday, September 10. (Förstemann's New Book of Documents, p. 344.)

It is not new nor strange that the name of God is uselessly used, even by the devils themselves.

10 The Antinomian confession is like the one where the devils cry out: "You are the son of the living God", Luc. 4, 34, 8, 28.

(11) And the oath of those false prophets, "As the Lord lives," when they took a false oath, as Isaiah and Jeremiah testify.

(12) He who says that the law, which condemns, should not be taught, is in fact denying the law.

13. and when he teaches something of the law, he teaches the cover of Moses, not his clear and true face, 2 Cor. 3, 13. that is, he teaches the law, carnally understood.

The law which does not condemn is a fictitious and painted law, like the chimera 1) or Tragelaphus.

1) About Chimaera compare Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 21, note - Tragelaphus --Bockhirsch, klinius 8, 50; with the Greeks only m fantastic images known.

Even the worldly or natural law is nothing if it does not frighten and condemn the transgressors, Rom. 13, 1. 5. 1 Petr. 2, 13. ff.

16 Therefore it is rightly spoken: From evil customs come good laws.

17. what the lawbreakers speak of god, of Christ, of faith, law, grace 2c. they speak without understanding, as a parrot speaks its xxxxx [good day].

18 Therefore, it is impossible to learn from the antinomians right godliness (theologiam) or right worldly life (politiam).

(19) Therefore, they should be shunned as the most harmful teachers of licentiousness, who give permission for all deeds of shame.

20 For "they serve not Christ, but their belly," [Rom. 16:18] seeking, as senseless men, to please men, that they in turn may obtain honor from them, as from a human day.

32 D. Matt. Luther's report [to D. Brück] of M. Joh. Eisleben's false teaching and shameful deed; in addition, answer to his void and unfounded complaint against Luther. *)

He"- Helps- June 1540.

In response to M. Eisleben's complaint, I hereby submit his proposition and a piece of his postill (which I have beaten down for him), 2) in addition to the pious gentlemen, D. Caspar's [Güttel] and Wendelin's 3) testimony, from which E. A. to hear what M. Eisleben has worked against us and our doctrine at Eisleben so many years ago. And such everything backwards and maliciously, uuvermahliet and urüber-

2) This breaks down to the confiscation and destruction of Agricola's book: "Das ander teil der Summarien, von dem ersten-Sontag nach Trinitatis anzufahren, bis auff den ersten Sontag des Aduents. Ivan, Agricola Eisleben. Wittenberg 1537." sBei Hans Luft.] This writing is found in Förstemann's Neuem Urkundenbuche, Vol. I, pp. 296-311, from the only remaining copy in the archives at Weimar.

3) Wendelin Faber, preacher at Seeburg. - This refers to the testimony that Faber sent to Caspar Güttel on 2V. April 1540 to Caspar Güttel. (Förstemann's "Neues Urkundenbuch", p. 332 ff., No. 20.).

*) This writing appeared in 1549 in a single edition, without indication of printer and place, under the title: "Ein Schrifft des Achtbarn und Ehrwürdigen Herren seliger gedechtnis, Doctoris Martini Lutheri, Wider den Eisleben, kurtz vor seinem end geschriebe, vormals aber nie im Druck außgangen"; then it is found in the Wittenberg edition, vol. XII, p. 236p; in the Jenaer (1568), vol. VII, p. 299p; in the Altenburger, vol. VII, p. 324; in the Leipziger, vol. XXI, p. 360, and in the Erlanger, vol. 32, p. 64. (The proofs which the Erlanger edition provides for the Wittenberg and Jenaer editions are incorrect. Seidemann-De Wette, vol. VI, 246, has reprinted them from the Erlangen edition.) Further, from Luther's own handwriting, in Förstemann's Neuem Urkundenbuche, vol. I, p. 321, and from it in De Wette, vol. VI, p. 246. We give the text according to Förstemann. In all complete editions of Luther's works, this writing is given the year 1539; however, it belongs to the year In this he did not act as a pious man, let alone as a pious Christian or theologian. For before we knew it, he founded a sect against us and our doctrine, which is called Minor 1), and condemned and disgraced our doctrine, which is false and impure and not to be taught, together with us and our school in Wittenberg. Which also the count 2) complained against me, but at that time I could not believe that M. Eisleben, such a false man and lying mouth, should so despise his faithful friends and dear preceptors and blaspheme and disparage them until, alas! the faith came into my hands.

Now E. A. can easily notice what our most gracious Lord and our whole congregation would like to see, that our doctrine should be accused of being false, impure and not at all acceptable to teach (because with that we would be accused of being impure, false disciples), especially if M. Eisleben has done such a thing to us in the back and does not prove it under his own eyes, as he also cannot do. And what a disgrace that would be, if we should have presented and confessed a false, impure, unpleasant doctrine before the emperor and the whole empire, when our dear princes and lords have placed and dared to place their country and people, body and goods, as well as their souls, together with us, on this doctrine, so sure that we have so far praised it as the pure right divine doctrine, and also (as it is true) so in grace. And the impotent, wretched tit-head 3) alone blasphemes against it and makes it unclean.

1) Perhaps: Minorists. In the original "Minorist".

2) Albrecht von Mansfeld.

3) In the original: "Meyssenkopf"; in the Wittenberg and Jena editions: "Meiskopff". In the Erlangen edition, which supposedly gives the text "according to the Wittenberg edition": "Mäiskopf", reprinted from the old Walch scheu edition. This passage seems to us to prove what we have already expressed several times as a conjecture, that the Erlangen edition often uses the

He desecrates us in a treacherous and deceitful way before he warns us or admonishes us about it. In addition, he lets himself be dragged along to the imperial diets and to Vienna, 4) pretends to be on our side, preaches and teaches like us; nevertheless, in his heart and behind our backs he drives such enmity, reviles and disparages the theologians of Wittenberg as he is able to do to the highest degree, in writing and orally, as his letter (here) well testifies, and here in the city of his spitting has done much against us.

And summa, Eisleben is our enemy, and has reviled our doctrine, desecrated our theologians: this proves his sect, which he founded at Eisleben, and cannot deny it. For if he were with us and not against us, or if he did not condemn our doctrine, he would not have broken up our assembly nor created a sect against us, just as Amsdorf of Magdeburg and others did not create sects against us, nor condemn our doctrine or denigrate theologians, as Eisleben did.

About this, since he founded and poisoned his sect in Eisleben, he comes back to Wittenberg, and again behind me in a murderous way, intends to poison and turn away this school and church as well. Gives his postilion into print, behind the knowledge and will of the rector, against my most gracious lord's commandment that one should not print anything, the rector should see it beforehand, Walch's text. - Förstemann remarks on the word: "probably more correctly: Mausekopf". Seckendorf, List. ImtL., Lid. III, p. 308 (9) offers: "mauskopff", "tsnedrio", i.e. a person who makes attacks in the dark. Seidemann, on the other hand, says: "I do think of carus and compare, e.g., nasmorä äs ßallo ü M-illo, nasrnoirs <ls Növr.".

4) Agricola was with Prince John at the imperial congresses at Sveher in 1526 and 1529, at Augsburg in 1530. Agricola made the trip to Wlen in November 1535 as a preacher to Prince John Frederick.

5) Förstemann: "It is probably the diminutive of Lorg." Seideinann: "Is Lecker and Schlecker."

1540. It is a letter from Luther to Chancellor Brück, prompted by Agricola's complaint against Luther to the Elector on March 31, 1540. The title is taken from the old editions. In determining the time, it has been completely overlooked until now that Luther refers in the last part of this writing to the declaration that Agricola gave to his complaint to the Elector, to the Commissars. This declaration is to be placed before June 8. On this day, the theologians consulted by the Commissars say (Förstemann, l. c. p. 3361, at the end): "But as far as his present declaration is concerned". In contrast, "Luther's Report" is already in the hands of the Elector on June 15, 1540 (Förstemann, 1, o. p. 339a, No. 231. Förstemann and Seidemann erroneously place our writing in April 1540; in Kawerau, 'Agricola, p. 204 f., and Köstlin, Martin Luther, Vol. I I, 471 f., a certain time determination cannot be clearly recognized, but it seems that they also place our writing in April 1540.

lind leuget dem godmen Hansen Lufft seine Postill in den Druck unter meinem Namen, als habe ich's überlesen und gefallen mir. And if I had not found out out of God's fate, Hans Lufft (who also still embroiders 1) such print half in the damage) should have come together with me against my most gracious Lord in all Nurngade. For with such a postilion Eisleben wanted to lay the first stone against our doctrine and us, that our doctrine must be unjust and impure, so that he alone might be praised as the master of pure doctrine. And finally, the foolish man has been too concerned about his honor, that the Wittenbergers would be nothing and Eisleben everything; just as his best friends confess that he has always had it in his mouth to say to Eisleben: It is humanus this; and has always hurt him, what one has said good things in Wittenberg, also let himself be heard here: Ego perrumpem.

In short, nothing distorts me so much as that he has let us be friends, 2) laughed with us, eaten with us, and so dishonestly, treacherously concealed his enmity against us: for if there were a good drop 3) in him, he should have come to light and confronted us, as we did to the pope and emperor at Augsburg, he would probably have received an answer. But he wanted honor, and wanted to find it deceitfully and treacherously; therefore, he is now doing what he deserves.

About this I wanted to serve him by settling this matter theologically, or (as it is called) doctrinaliter, so that it would not have to be judicialiter 4) judged, and against this publicly disputirt and written. For he does not think what an unpleasant thing this would be to my most gracious lord, if it were to be judicially conducted, that M. Eisleben should be 5) my most gracious lord's theologian.

1) In the original: according to.

2) For this, compare Luther's Tischreden, Cap. 37, § 33, paragraph 2. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 1028.

3) In the original: "drip".

4) In Förstemann: "judicialiter".

5) "Should" is missing in Walch's old edition. This variant is not given in Förstemann. The listing of Walch's variants in Förstemann is generally very cursory and inaccurate. Without having looked for them particularly carefully, we have in this writing twenty-three such omissions of Va

The author of this book, who is a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, is a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor, and a member of the Church of the Holy Roman Emperor.

This is the thorough report of the matter, and the right principal article, from which my most gracious lord will well know to deal with M. Eisleben, that he either proves or makes true again with good reason his blasphemy against both our doctrine and theologians; if not, that he then publicly punishes his blasphemous tongue and writing, or his lying mouth, and restores to both our doctrine and theologians their honor, which he has maliciously and shamefully stolen and taken; 6) to atone for the trouble and damage he has caused in Jsleben and everywhere else, so that his blasphemy and division of our congregation may be restored, and so that hearts may again be brought into one mind and harmony, which he has turned away from us and against us with his venom and incited.

Now to his complaint.

He complains that I have interpreted to him that 7) he does not want to suffer the law and give leave to sin freely, to abolish Christ and the Holy Spirit, and to do no repentance, 2c.

So that's what I'm responding to:

Since M. Eisleben wanted to sue me, he should cheap with good evidence or probation rianten, which are mostly also variants of the old editions. On the other hand, Förstemann has a whole number of useless notes by noting each time Walch has added the verse number to a chapter given in the text, while every theologian knows or should know that in Luther's time the verse divisions were not found in the Bibles, at least not in the New Testament.

6) Förstemann: "Hussen".

7) This refers to Agricola's letter, which he sent on March 31, 1540 to the Elector, who was then in Schmalkalden. It is found in Förstemann, Neues Urkundenbnch, p. 317 ff. The date there "March 1" is a printing error instead of: March 31.

I have written before, and do not count so badly what I have written or done against him. For I still confess now and forever that I have written so and so against him, and I am sorry that I have done it so kindly and cleanly. I will also, if God wills, do it differently after this interrogation, and do him his right. That he wrote a Kakismum or Geckismum 1) and many other things, and also preached them, I knew well (I wish he would have left it alone and preached Marcolfum or Ulenspiegel instead), but that it should be proven that I did him wrong, that I would like to see proven; for he is a sharp dialectician, he will perhaps know how to teach me such a consequence. I cannot understand them. This is how his scroll students wrote: I mean, the Wittenbergers have got a man at 21 Eisleben who will teach them the Theologia and Dialectica properly. Therefore, I would like to hear such new Dialectica. He whistles, and prove them well.

My Dialectica teaches thus: If one is accused of a thing and is convinced (as Eisleben is convinced in 21, that he forbids the law, that our teaching is impure and false, that we theologians are also false, impure teachers, even though they have been accused of it), and against this, he imposes the contradiction, he does not thereby prove that he has been wronged. Rather, where he proves something, he proves so much that he is either a mad fool who hits himself in the cheeks, or a two-faced traitor and Judas; just as the devil and all red spirits are also almost all liars, that 21 Eisleben, where he looked so deeply into the books, as perhaps into the beer cans, would probably have read or seen such things. Is the excellent man, who is to teach the Wittenbergers dialecticam and theologiam, so unlearned and coarse that he does not know how sheep's clothing can never turn the ravening wolves into sheep, and Judas' kiss cannot turn his treacherousness into a good work of love, whether he might have given the Lord the Licks mouth, kisses, hugs and speaks dear rabbi (Matth. 26, 49.). M. Eisleben looks at himself, how he has acted against me, lets me trust an old, faithful friend and believe that he is of our part, works with us in the Gospel and gathers with us, kisses and caresses me in the most exquisite way in front, behind he is our enemy, breaks our work, scatters our gathering, and now boasts about the contradiction in his complaint, as if he had done right and I had done wrong, since I had touched his two-tongued malice.

Is it therefore still my request that he prove or make true his complaint against me, or do what he owes 2c.

Secondly, I answer that the pieces he complains about me are not laid on him by me. He himself is guilty of them, and they come from his own neck. For he has set the antecedent (which he still confesses in the complaint and bases on it): Lex non est docenda; or, as he now wants to clean it up: Law is a dangerous sermon ut ministratio mortis. From this antecedente follows that I have written: He who forbids to teach the law cannot teach of sin, and people must live freely, safely, without knowledge of sins. And this consequence is not mine, but St. Paul's to Romans [4, 15.]: Ubi non est lex, nec praevaricatio; Sine lege peccatum mortuum est; Ubi venit lex, revixit peccatum. Item 1 Cor. 15, 56: Virtus peccati lex etc.. For lex et peccatum are correlativa, ponunt et tollunt se mutuo etc.. Therefore M. Grickel should not sue and punish me Luther, but St. Paulum (as he does herewith in effectum and re ipsa). He may take issue with the latter, who will show him whether he may overturn or resist such a consequence with his gekismo 2) or Judas kiss.

Further follows from the same antecedent M. Grickels: Where sin is not taught nor preached, people cannot know what sin is. Therefore they cannot desire forgiveness and grace.

2) This word is written here differently from the previous "gekismum", in the original: "gekhsmo", probably intentionally, to allude to the cry of the jackdaws, "geken" or "gäken".

1) These expressions are mockingly used by Luther from Agricola's "Catechism". Kakismus (<cax6k) - bad machwerk; Geckismus (Geck) - silly stuff. Cf. De Wette, vol. I, p. 342: Okoious IloNurEk katuuna kiMiueut.

and then grace is of no use. For grace must win and prevail in us against the law and sin, so that we do not despair. Such a consequence is also not mine, but St. Paul's, 1 Cor. 15, 57: DEO gratia, who gives us the victory per JEsu[m] Christum, scilicet contra legem et peccatum et mortem, as the text stands there mightily v. 56: Stimulus mortis peccatum, virtus peccati lex etc.. And Christ [Matth. 9, 13.]: "I am not come to call the righteous to repentance, but sinners." Luc. 4,18. Matth. 11, 5.: Pauperibus misit me evangelisari.

Further, where grace is nothing nor does Christ nothing; item, no God, no repentance, no prayer, no good work 2c., and as my booklet and I still say: The most harmful teaching on earth is such M. Grickel's Antinomia. All such consequences are not mine, but of the Holy Spirit himself, and M. Isleben will not be able to deny them, because he himself sets the antecedent that one should not teach sin or law: And does not help him his jugglery de lege post vel cum evan- gelio, as hereafter. For, as I said, Judas' kiss does not make his traitorousness pious.

In fact, it can be seen in M. Jsleben's life that he teaches such antinomia, and the tree can be known by its fruits. He lives freely and securely as if he had neither law nor sin. First, he blasphemes and condemns our doctrine as impure and false (that is, the Holy Spirit himself in his holy law), reviles and disparages us Wittenbergers wherever he can in the most shameful way, and does all this deceitfully and maliciously, when we have done him no harm but all good, as he cannot say or prove otherwise. He is a good friend to me, his best friend and father, and makes me think he is our good friend. He does not warn me, but works behind us to turn people away from our doctrine and to hang them on himself, as a desperate, murderous knave; practices such ingratitude, pride and haughtiness against us, as I do not encounter much. In such abominable sins, therefore, he walks securely and defiantly, accuses us even without warning, does what he wills against us, as if he could not sin, or were not a law, of which he is a conscience. Magister Jsleben would make such Christians for us, as his mob is also like-minded and lives against us and our teachings.

But that I come to the end, so I assume that it 1) is called: the principal article.

He still speaks unashamedly in the lament: The law without the gospel is preached yearly; for it is a ministerium mortis. Haec ille. See what the great fool does. God gave his law for this very reason, that it should bite, cut, slash, slaughter and sacrifice the old man. For it should frighten and punish the trusting, unwise, secure old Adam and show him his sin and death, so that he, humiliated, despairs of himself and thus becomes eager for grace, as St. Paul says: Virtus peccati lex, stimulus mortis peccatum est [1 Cor. 15, 56]. Therefore he calls it bonam, justam, sanctam. Item Jeremiah [23, 29.], "My word is like a hammer that shatters the rocks." Item: Ego ignis consumens etc.. Ps. 9, 21.: Constitue legislatorem super eos, ut sciant gentes, se esse homines, non deos, nec Deo similes. So does St. Paul, Rom. 1. et 2. et 3. makes all the world sinners through the law, casts them under God's wrath, and even strikes them dead before God. So here our dear M. Grickel goes on, and invents a new theology of his own from his mad, foolish head, and teaches that one should not kill, punish or slaughter people, that is, one should not preach the 2) law. Here he publicly confesses himself

1) In the original "it", and Förstemann remarks: "it" is clearly written"; in the original print and in all editions: "das er heißt den" etc. The latter seems to us to be the correct reading; we consider "it" to be a spelling mistake. What is meant is the declaration of läkelnrat[i]ol, which Agricola had handed over to the commissars appointed by the Elector on his complaint written on March 31. It is inscribed: "Principal article of trade, Eisleben's doctrine belsangend". The words cited here by Luther are right in the beginning of this writing. "Luther's Report", that is, our present writing, is of course later. This statement is to be placed shortly before June 8, 1540. It is found in Förstemann's "Neuem Urkundenbuche", p. 337 with the time determination: "about June 8, 1540" and with the erroneous heading: "Des M. Johann Agricola Vertheidigung seiner Lehre vom Gesetz gegen D. Luther." Compare the introduction.

2) In the original: des.

in the complaint that he had condemned and forbidden the preaching of the law. This is the reason why I wrote against him. For here he straightforwardly confesses the antecedents of what was said above, and yet he wants to complain and murmur against the consequence in my booklet. So his complaint is my excuse, my booklet's confirmation, and his own condemnation. For even we, who have now been made holy by grace, still live in a sinful body, and must allow ourselves to be punished, terrified, killed and sacrificed by the law for the sake of such remaining sin, even into the pit. That therefore the law in this life, before and after and forever, must be lex occidens, damnans, accusans, as St. Paul and our books teach so abundantly, if the proud fool could have humbled himself and read the same. For lex non occidens non est lex nisi velata, as Moses dicke 1) testifies. This is the hypocrite's false mind in the law.

Because the angry little devil, so Master Grickel rides, does not want to suffer legem, that is, mortificationem irascentem, accusantem, terrentem, occidentem legem, so it is easy to notice what he has in mind to cause by M. Grickels foolishness, since he nevertheless wants to be praised that he teaches post vel sub evangelio legem, as, thou shalt not kill, steal 2c., 2) as the Turk, Jews, philosophers, and papists teach, and regard nature as healthy, and M. Grickel does not see this, that his little spirit wants to go out there, with boasting and thumping, that he also preaches the law. Yes, if we were Adam in paradise before the fall, then the law would probably be be taught rightly. But because Eisleben does not want the law to be taught ad occidendum, damnandum, accusandum, his little spirit seeks that the former and original sin should be left unpunished. Thus Christ and God are all in vain and lost.

And is this not blindness upon blindness, that he will not preach the law without and before the gospel? These are impossibilia. How is it possible to preach forgiveness of sins, if there are no sins first? How is it possible to preach life, if there is not death first? Or shall we preach to the angels of the forgiveness of sins, and salvation from death, which have neither sin nor death before? But how can we preach of sins, or know that sin is before, where it does not manifest the law? For the gospel, according to its proper function, does not say who and what sin is, but indicates that there must be great harm, that such a great remedy belongs to it, but does not say what sin is called, or what it is. The law must do this. Thus M. Eisleben re ipsa must leave the law before the Gospel to do its office, as occidere etc., as he almost denies it with words, only to the annoyance of the Wittenbergers, so that he, novus autor, also makes one of his own, and misleads the people, and separates the churches.

But there he seals his art finely, that he says: Gospel reveals wrath; how is the foolish so completely gone astray, does not understand what lex or evangelion, neque usum neque vim eorum; and sets up such clutter and secten on his foolishness and jugglery: The law shall not wrath nor kill: but the gospel shall wrath and kill; all for this reason, that he may not teach alike with the Wittenbergers: evangelium reveals grace, and lex wrath; that must M. Grickel must reverse this. So M. Grickel's complaint against me stands as he deserves.

_____ M. Luther.

3) In the original: "one".

1) d. i. often.
2) Luther wrote the sentence: 8ie ejus Iota Postilla aZit and immediately following the word plülosoxlū in the margin.

II. Wider Caspar Schwenkfeld, Wiedertäufer und andere Schwärmer.

33 D. Martin Luther's admonition to Caspar Schwenkfeld to desist from his error. *)

April 14, 1526.

Grace and peace in Christ. My dear lord and friend, we have been a long time in replying, so that you should notice how we have not read your thing beyond raps, and now we are sending it to you again by your messenger. But what shall I say? Perhaps God wants you to fall like this. You tell me that you want to try 1) how verba coenae rhymes with cap. VI. Ioannis, and would be the same; this has not happened, and will never happen. Now what is the use of teaching much de duplici esca imaginis et veritatis, and leaving out the probation[s] that are supposed to indicate such two escas in coena? You say it is so, but you do not prove it. Now we may not believe you and build our souls on your word. Is therefore

1) d. i. prove.

My friendly request, let go of the public error and do not add to the number of those who are now misleading the world so miserably. If not, then God's will be done, and I am heartily sorry, but I am clean from your blood and from all whom you deceive with it. 2) May God convert you. Amen. At Wittenberg, Tiburtii, 1526.

2) Schwenkfeld had been in Wittenberg at the end of 1525 and wrote to D. Z. (Zauch, Zoch) about it, Epistolar. II, Th. II, p. 24: "about two months he ^Lutheri sent me our booklet again with a sharp heated letter, we should stop seducing the people, whose blood, so we seduced, should be over our heads, and concluded fründlichl with these words: In short, either you or we must be serfs of the devil, because we boast on both sides of God's word." Therefore, Diburtii must be dissolved tverden with April 14, not August 11.

*) This letter is found in the Leipzig Supplement, p.45; in De Wette, vol. III, 123 and in the Erlangen edition, vol. 53, p. 383, everywhere with the wrong date: August 11, The correct time determination was given by Seidemann in De Wette, vol. VI, p. 596. The Tidurtii here is not Hdurtü st Lusannae, August 11, but Hburtli ValerianL st Naximi, April 14. We reproduce the text according to De Wette.

34. D. Martin Luther's judgment and answer to Caspar Schwenkfeld's letter and booklet, sent to him. *)

November 8, 1543.

Luther's verdict on Schwenkfeld. 1)

Caspar Schwenkfeld had Anno 1543 on the 8th day of Novembris D. M. Luther one of his books by his own messenger, which title was "von der Herrlichkeit". 2) There D. Luther: Schwenkfeld is a poor man, who has neither mind nor spirit, but ex is nonsensical (attonitus), as the enthusiasts all are, he does not know what he is babbling about, but this is his opinion and his main reason (principium): The creature is not to be worshipped, because it is written (Matth. 4, 10.): "You shall worship God, your Lord, and serve Him alone? Then he thinks, Christ is a creature, therefore I should not worship Christ as a man. And fingirt zwo Christus, sagt: Die Creatur sei nach der Auferstehung und Verherrlichung in die Gottheit verwandt, und deshalb worship, und bescheißt die Leute mit dem herrglichen Namen Christi, wie er dann schreibt: "zum Preis Christi".

But the children go through it badly, and say: I believe in Jesus Christ our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Spirit.

1) This superscription is found in Walch, old edition, vol. XXI, 1593 and Erl. 65, 219. In the Tischreden, the superscription reads: "Wider Schwenkfelds Meinung von der Creatürlichkeit Christi." We have translated the Latin passages of this section.

2) In the other redaction: "of the holiness". According to the citation in Köstlin, Martin Luther, p. 684 aâ p. 590, 2): "Von der Herrlichkeit vel Heimlichkeit".

Spirit, born of Mary, the Virgin 2c. So the fool will make me two Christs; one who hangs on the cross and another who has gone to heaven and sits at the right hand of God, his heavenly Father. I shall not worship the Christ who hangs on the cross and walks on earth. He allowed himself to be worshipped when he fell down before him. So the Lord Christ himself says: "He who believes in me, believes in him who sent me". The phantom has stolen some vocabularies from my book "The Last Words of David", with which the idiot also wants to make himself beautiful, as the sharing of qualities and the independence (identitatem) of the person; thus he mixes it in, and then wants to say: I also meant it that way.

He wants to teach me what Christ is and how I should worship him. I have it, thank God, better than he, I know my Christ well, therefore he lets me unheeded. Then Magister Rörer said: 3) Well, dear doctor, that is too rough. He answered: "You teach me to be so rough. So one must talk to the devil. He revokes in a public writing the rapture with the Sacrament, and bring me testimonies of Doctor Joh. Hessen and Doctor Moibano from Breslau, otherwise I do not believe him, even if he swears to me and puts his fingers in the middle of the wounds.

3) In the other redaction: "Then the woman spoke."

*) The letter is found in the Wittenberg edition, vol. XII, p. 210d; in the Jena (1562), vol. VIII, p. 173d; in the Altenburg, vol. VIII, p. 344; in the Leipzig, vol. XXI, p. 437; in the Erlangen, vol. 56, p. 71 and vol. 58, 30. Further, in all editions of Luther's Tischreden (except the SI! Louiser, where this piece has been omitted), Cap. 7, § 25; in De Wette, V, p. 613 and in Erbkain, Geschichte der protestantischen Secten, p. 399. (De Wette has the wrong proof in this letter: "Witt. II, 210," which Erlanger, vol. 56, p. 71, reprinted). The closer time determination results from Luther's "Urtheil von Schwenkfeld", which we have inserted here from the Tischreden I. c.. The same is found twice in Walch's old edition, namely vol. XXI, 1593 and vol. XXII, 408; twice also in the Erlanger, vol. 58, p. 29 f. and vol. 65, p. 219. In Walch in the 21st volume and in the Erlanger in the 65th volume without time determination immediately before the "Zeugniß für einen Boten", in which Luther certifies that he is still alive. This "Urtheil" and the "Zeugniß" have nothing to do with each other, because the latter is to be put approximately in March of the year 1537. Compare Luther's letters to Melanchthon and to his housewife of February 27, 1537, De Wette, Vol. V, 57 ff. The latter letter is also found in Walch, XXI, 392. We have given preference to the redaction in the Tischreden as the more original.

And Doctor Luther had returned to the messenger an open letter, which had not been sealed, and was the superscription:

[Luther's reply to] Schwenkfeld's messenger.

My messenger, dear man! You shall tell your master, Caspar Schwenkfeld, in reply that I received the letter and the booklets from you. And would to God, he stopped. For he has previously lit a fire in Silesia against the Holy Sacrament, which has not yet been extinguished and will burn on it forever. Over this he continues with his eutychism and creatureliness, misleading the churches, when God has neither commanded nor sent him anything. And the nonsensical fool, possessed by the devil, understands nothing, does not know what he is saying.

But if he will not stop, let him leave me with his little books, which the devil has made of him.

I have given him my final judgment and answer: Increpet dominus in te, Satan [Zach. 3, 2.], et sit spiritus tuus, qui vocavit te, et cursus tuus, quo curris, et omnes, qui participant tibi, Sacramentarii et Eutychiani, tecum et cum vestris blasphemii in perditionem. Sicut scriptum est: Currebant et non mittebam eos: loquebantur, et nihil mandavi eis. [Jerem. 23, 21. The Lord rebuke thee, Satan, and let it be thy spirit that hath called thee, and the way in which thou walkest, and all that hold with thee, Sacramentarians and Eutychians, with thee and with your blasphemies, to damnation. As it is written, "They ran . and I did not send them; they talked and I did not command them."] 1543.

Martin Luther

with your own hand.

35. D. Martin Luther's letter to Eberhard von der Tannen, von den Schleichern und Winkelpredigern. *)

At the beginning of the year 1532.

To the strict and firm Eberhard von der Tannen, Amtmann zu Wartburg, my favorable lord and friend. Grace and peace in Christ, our Lord and Savior. Amen.

I have heard, my dear lord and friend, how the Anabaptists also like to sneak in and around you and want to throw their poison on ours. Although I now know that you have been sufficiently informed from Er Justus Menius' book 1), and

1) "Der Wiedertäufer Lehre und Geheimniß aus heiliger Schrift widerlegt." (The Anabaptist Doctrine and Mystery Refuted from Holy Scripture). Luther's preface to this is found in Walch, old edition, vol. XIV, 276.

But because the devil does not like to let go, and many are, if they have overlooked a book once, quickly go into a corner with it, and forget everything, because they are admonished, that probably needs a daily guardian, who admonishes constantly: I have with this letter to you all other officials, cities and lords again ask and want to admonish, such sneaks to defend, so that we do ours.

2 And first of all they are well and easily seized with it, if one asks them for *) This writing appeared in the year 1532 in several single editions, namely to Wittenberg with Nickel Schirlentz; to Erfurt "to the black horn" and to Nürnberg with Friedrich Peypus. In the editions: in the Wittenberg (1551), vol. II, p. 244; in the Jena (1566), vol. V, p. 490 b; in the Altenburg, vol. V, p. 966; in the Leipzig, vol. XX, p. 357 and in the Erlangen, vol. 31, p. 214. In the old edition of Walch with the wrong year 1531; in De Wette: "Perhaps in October 1532"; in the Erlangen: "October 1532". The closer determination of the time we have given after Köstlin, Martin Luther, vol. II, p. 325. We bring the text after the Erlanger, which reproduces the first original print, under comparison of the Wittenberger and the Jenaer. It should be noted that the Erlanger, as it seems from its original printing, offers after the title: "Anno 1531", which we have not printed, because the Wittenberg edition explicitly notes: "Im MDXXXII. Erstlich ausgangen."

If they have their orders, whoever they call to sneak or come and preach in the corner, they may not give an answer, nor indicate their order. And I say truly, if such creepers had otherwise no evil in them, and were true saints, yet this certain thing (that they creep without command and come unasked) may convince them for devil's messengers and teachers by force. For the Holy Spirit does not creep, but openly begs from heaven. The sly ones creep, but the doves fly: therefore such creeping is the right course of the devil, which is missing more and more.

(3) I have heard it said, how the creepers may be found preaching to the laborers in the harvest, and in the field under the work, so also to the charcoal burners and to some people in the woods, and sowing their seed everywhere, and blowing poison, turn the people away from their parish churches. Behold the devil's right footstep and grip, how he shuns the light and mews in the darkness. Who is so rude that could not notice that they are true messengers of the devil? If they were of God and righteous, they would first of all find their way to the priest and deal with him, declare their profession, and tell what they believed and whether he would allow them to preach publicly. If the priest would then not allow them, they would be excused before God, and then they would want to knock the dust off their feet 2c. For the pastor holds the chair of preaching, baptism, sacrament, and all pastoral care is commanded to him. But now they want to secretly bite out the pastor with all his command; and yet do not denounce their secret command; these are real thieves and murderers of souls, blasphemers and enemies of Christ and his church.

4 Now there is truly no other counsel than that both offices, ecclesiastical and secular, do this with all diligence. The ecclesiastical must indeed instruct the people always and with diligence, and these aforementioned pieces must be imagined, so that they do not allow a sneak and certainly recognize them as messengers of the devil, and let them ask: Where do you come from? Who has brought you sand? Who told you to preach only? Where are your seals and letters that you were sent by men? Where are your miraculous signs that God sent you? Why do you not go to our priest? Why do you creep up to me so secretly and crawl into the corners? Why don't you appear in public? Are you a child of light, why do you shun the light?

5 With such questions (I respect) they should be easily resisted, because they cannot prove their profession. And if we could bring the people into such an understanding of the profession, then such lurkers could be well controlled. Item, that they are also always instructed and admonished to report such lurkers to the pastor, which they are also obliged to do, if they want to be Christians and become blessed. For, where they do not do so, they help the devil's messenger and sneak to the pastor (yes, God Himself) to steal his preaching ministry, baptism, sacrament and pastoral care, as well as to steal the parishioners secretly, and thus to devastate and destroy the parish (as God has ordered). If they heard such an admonition, and knew that it was in the opinion of the Berns, some pious hearts would probably denounce such angle preachers and assassins to the parish priest. For, as I said, with the Berns, where one insists, one can scare the devil. A pastor can boast that he holds the office of preaching, baptism, sacrament, and pastoral care publicly and rightly, and that he is commanded to seek and wait for such things; but the foreign sneaks and assassins cannot boast such things, and must confess that they are of foreign origin, and that they take hold of and fall into a foreign office. This cannot be the Holy Spirit, but must be the wretched devil.

The secular office must also see to it. For since such lurkers are the devil's messengers, preaching poison and lies, and the devil is not only a liar, but also a murderer, he cannot fail to intend, through such his messengers, to cause sedition and murder as well (even if he expresses himself of it for a time and pretends to be peaceful), and thus to overthrow both, spiritual and secular government, contrary to God's will. He can not be

1) d. i. teach.

For his way is to lie and murder; so his own, possessed by him, cannot be powerful themselves, must drive as he drives them.

7. Therefore, officials, judges, and those who have to govern should know and be certain that they must suspect such sneaks, not only of false doctrine, but also of murder and sedition, because they know that such people are ridden by the devil, and should also have their servants assemble the subjects, and warn them against such villains, and command in the highest way, with great punishment, that every subject must denounce such lurkers, as the subjects are obliged to do, if they themselves do not want to become guilty of all the murder and sedition that the devil has in mind 2c.

(8) And so, like the ministry, go to the professional, and ask the sneak, or his host, Whence comest thou? Who sent you? 2c., as above. And ask the host also: Who has called you this lurker? to listen to his sermon? How do you know that he has orders to teach you, and you to learn from him? Why didn't you tell the priest or us? Why do you leave your church, since you are done, taught, reported 1) and belong to it by God's order, and crawl into the corner? Why do you establish a new one, secretly and unauthorized? Who gave you the power to divide this parish and to set up divisions among us? Who commanded you to despise, to condemn, to condemn your parish priest in the back, before he is questioned or sued? From where did you become such a judge over your priest, even your own judge?

(9) For such a misdeed, and much more, is committed by anyone who attaches himself to the sneaks, and should be justly addressed for it. And I have good hope that if the authorities were diligent in this, it would be of great benefit, and many pious people would take care, and help to illuminate such boys, if they knew that there were such great

2) and that so much would be attached to the calling or command. Otherwise, where one does not stand firm and press on the calling or command, no church would remain anywhere in the end. For just as the insidious come among us and want to break up and destroy our churches, so afterwards other insidious would also come into their churches and break up and destroy them, and from then on there would never be an end to the insidiousness and separation, one over the other, or soon nothing would remain of any church on earth. This is also what the devil wanted and seeks through such spirits of the mob and sneaks.

10 Therefore it means: Either prove the profession and command to preach, or in short, keep quiet and forbid preaching. For it is called an office, yes, a preaching office. But no one can have an office except and without command and profession. Therefore also Christ speaks in the parable, Luc. 19, 13. that the master of the house did not give his servants the centner, so that they should act, he called them before, and commanded them to act. Vocatis servis (says the text) et negotiemi³) etc. He called his servants (says he) and commanded them to act with his money. Such a VOCATUS and command shall the creeper also bring, or shall leave the Lord's money with peace, or shall be found a thief and a rogue. Neither did the laborers go into the householder's vineyard, Matt. 20, until the householder commanded them to go, but stood before the command and labored idly all the day.

Thus God also speaks of such sneaks Jer. 23:21: "They run, and I have not sent them; they preach, and I have not commanded them. It still takes great effort and work for those to preach rightly and stick to right doctrine who have a certain calling and command from God Himself or through men in God's stead: what should it be then without God's command, yes, to preach against God's command and prohibition, out of nothing but driving and chasing the devil? There must be no other sermon, but out of giving in to the evil one.

1) i.e. communicated. - "reported" put by us instead of: "report".

2) Thus the Wittenberg and the Jena. In the old edition Walch's and in the Erlangen: "Schleichen".

3) So the editions. In the Vulgate: nsZotianlinl.

The spirit, and must be vain doctrine of the devil, let it glow as it will.

012 Who had greater and more certain profession than Aaron the first high priest? He still fell into idolatry and made the Jews make the golden calf [Ex 32:4]. And after that the whole Levitical priesthood fell into idolatry, and persecuted the word of God and all the true prophets. King Solomon was gloriously enough appointed and confirmed; yet he fell in his old age and caused much idolatry [1¹) Kings 11:4]. Have not the bishops and popes glorious calling and command? Do they not sit in the apostles' chair, and in Christ's stead? Nor are they all the worst enemies of the gospel; be silent, that they should teach rightly and maintain right worship.

(13) Can the devil deceive the teachers whom God himself has called, ordered and ordained, so that they teach falsely and persecute the truth; how then can he teach something good through the teachers whom he himself, without and against God's command, drives and ordains, and not rather teach vain devilish lies? I have often said it, and still say it, that I would not take the world's good for my doctorate. For I would truly have to despair in the end and despair in the great, difficult matter that lies upon me, where I, as a sneak, would have started it without profession and command. But now God and all the world must bear witness to me that I have publicly begun it in my doctorate and preaching ministry, and have led it to this point with God's grace and help.

(14) There are some who pretend. According to 1 Corinthians 14, St. Paul gave every man liberty to preach in the church, and also to bark against the regular preacher, saying [v. 30]: "If it be evident to him that sitteth, let the first hold his peace. Therefore, the lurkers think that in whichever church they come, there they have power and right to judge the preachers and to preach differently. But that is far, far wrong. The lurkers see

They don't really accept the text and take from it, even brew into it what they want. St. Paul speaks in that place of the prophets who are to teach, and not of the rabble who listen. Prophets are teachers who have the office of preaching in the church. Why else should one be called a prophet? Let the sneak prove that he is a prophet or teacher in the church where he comes, and who has commanded him such a ministry there, and then he will be heard according to the teachings of St. Paul. If he does not prove it, let him run away to the devil, who sent him and commanded him to rob a foreign ministry in a church, where he does not belong as a hearer or disciple, but as a prophet and master.

(15) What a fine example would it be to me if a priest preached, and each one had power to fall into his speech and scold himself with him? Further, another would fall into the speech of the two, and the other would also be called silent, and after that, a full beer blackbird would run out of a pitcher and fall into the speech of all three, and the third would also be called silent, and finally, the women would also have such a right as the sitters, and the men would be called silent, and after that, one woman would always call the other silent. O what a beautiful church fair, Kretschmer and fair shall there be! In which pigsty should it not be finer than in such a church? There the devil shall be preacher in my place. But the blind lurkers do not mean this, they think as if they were the only ones sitting, and do not see that everyone among the others should just as well have this right, and they could also be called silent, they themselves do not know what they are saying, what is sitting or speaking, what is called prophet or layman, in this place of St. Paul.

16 Let anyone who wishes read the whole chapter, and he will find it clear that St. Paul there speaks of prophesying, teaching and preaching in the congregation or church, and does not command the congregation to preach, but acts with the preachers who preach in the congregation or assembly; otherwise he would not have to forbid the women to preach, as they are also a part of the Christian congregation.

1) Here the Erlangen edition has again reprinted Walch's incorrect Bible quote: "2 Kings 11:4."

2) So the Jenaer. Wittenberg and Erlangen: "with".

And when the text is given, it will have been 1) such a way The prophets are to be ordered and remain in office, and that in the church among the people the prophets, as the they are to wait for the teaching, one after the other, and ordinary priests and preachers, sat, and one or two sang always help each other faithfully. The prophets should be or read the text; as still in our times on the high feasts two commanded to wait for the teaching, and teach one after another, and always help one another faithfully, so "that used to sing the gospel with each other in some churches.

(17) On such a text one of the prophets, on whom it it may be done honorably and properly," says St. Paul [1 Cor. 14:40]. But how can things be respectable or orderly, has been done, has spoken and interpreted, as the when every one takes hold of another's office, which he homilies have been done in the Roman church. When he spoke, another one might speak, confirm, or explain is not commanded to do, and every layman wants to something about it. Just as St. James, Apost. 15, 13 ff, stand up in the church and preach?

also did to St. Peter's speech, confirming and explaining 20 But I marvel, because they are so learned in the Spirit, why they "bring forth the examples, where also it. Just as St. Paul did in the synagogues, especially in women prophesied, and therewith governed men, the Antioch Pisidia, where Lucas says: "After the teaching of land, and the people; as Deborah in the book of Judges, the law, the rulers of the synagogues also let Paul speak. chap. 4, who smote king Jabin and Sissera, and governed Then Paul stood up and spoke, but as a sent apostle, Israel; and the prophetess in Avelah, which was in the about the fact that he was demanded by the school ruler days of David. 4, who smote king Jabin and Sissera, and 2) and did not act as a sneak. It seems that sitting is a ruled Israel; and the prophetess of Avelah, which was in matter for the appointed prophets or preachers alone; David's days, 2 Sam. 20:16; and Huldah the prophetess whoever among them should have spoken stood up or in the days of Josiah, 2 Kings 22:14. And long before that remained sitting, according to the importance of the Sarah, who taught her lord and husband, Abraham, that matter.

(18) Just as when a prince sits in council with his he should cast out Ishmael with the mother Hagar, and councilors, or a mayor with his councilors, one stands up God told Abraham to obey her [Gen. 21, 10. 12.], and the and makes his speech, and then another follows, and at like, as the widow Hannah, Luc. 2, 36. and the virgin last they follow in unison the one who has given the best Mary, Luc. 1, 46. 3) 2c. Here they could adorn themselves, and also give the women power to preach in the church; how much more would the men like to preach according to the examples, where and when they wanted!

(21) Now we will leave aside what right such women had in the Old Testament to teach and rule. Of course, they did not do it as lurkers, unappointed, nor out of their own devotion and thirst; otherwise God would not have confirmed their office and work with miracles and great deeds. But in the New Testament, the Holy Spirit decrees through St. Paul that the women should be silent in the church or congregation, and says: it is the Lord's commandment, 1 Cor. 14, 34; and yet he knew well that Joel had previously proclaimed that God would also put his Spirit upon his women.

1) Walch and the Erlanger: that's how it's going to be.
2) Wittenberger: pupils; Jenaer: of schoolmasters.

3) Here, the Erlanger has reprinted from Walch's old edition: "Luc. 2", although the Wittenberg and the Jena, thus probably also the original print, offer "Luc. 1".

The four daughters of Philippi were seen prophesying, Acts 21:9. 21:9. 1) But in the congregation or church, where the ministry is, they shall keep silence, and not preach. Otherwise they may pray, sing, praise and say amen, and read at home and teach, admonish and comfort one another, and also interpret the Scriptures as best they can.

22 In sum, St. Paul does not want to suffer the offense and the will of one to take hold of another's office, but each one should take care of his command and profession and wait for it, so that he may leave another's profession unhindered and in peace. Otherwise he may be wise, teach, sing, read, interpret, as he has right and reason, until he has had enough and is satisfied. If God wants to do something more solid and vain, besides and above such order of offices and appointments, He will prove it with signs and deeds; as He let the donkey speak and punished the prophet Balaam, her master [Mos. 22, 28]. If he does not do this, then we should keep it and leave it in the orderly offices and commandments. If they do not teach rightly, what is that to you? you must not give an account for it.

For this reason St. Paul often uses the word "congregation" in this chapter, so that he makes a certain distinction between the prophets and the people. The prophets speak, the congregation listens. For thus he says [1 Cor. 14:4], "He that knoweth maketh the church better." And again [v. 12], "Seek to amend the church, that ye may have full sufficiency." Who are the ones who are to correct the community? Are they not the prophets, and (as he calls them) "those who speak with tongues," that is, who read or sing the text as the congregation listens, and the prophets, who are to interpret the text for the correction of the congregation? This is clear enough, that here he commands the congregation to listen and to be corrected, and not to teach or to preach. Then he makes a clearer distinction and calls the congregation laymen and says [v. 16, 17] "When you bless in the Spirit, how can he who stands in place of the layman say Amen, since he does not know what you say? You say fine thanks, but the other is not improved by it. There is a difference between the preacher and the layman. But what is necessary to go on about it; the text is there, and also gives the reason that there is no foreign office to reach into.

24 For thus saith St. Paul [v. 29], "Let the prophets speak, two or three, and let the others judge. 2c. This is not spoken otherwise than of the prophets, which one or two shall speak, and the rest shall judge. What do others mean here? Is it to be called the rabble? By no means; but it is to be called: the other prophets or prophets who are to help preach in the church 2) and improve the congregation, who are to judge and help to see that the preaching is right. And if it come to pass that one of the prophets or preachers do the best, then the first shall be instructed, and say, Yea, thou art right, I understood it not so well; as it is done over tables, or in other matters, that one shall judge another (even in worldly matters): so also shall one yield much more to another in this matter.

25 From this you can see how finely and diligently the lurkers have looked at St. Paul's words, with which they presume to prove themselves to be saints in all churches, that is, to attack, judge and blaspheme all the preachers of all Christendom, and to appoint themselves and make themselves judges over other people's preaching seats. These are called right thieves and murderers, who take hold of other people's offices with sacrilege and violence, against which St. Peter teaches in 1 Epistle 4:15: "Let no one suffer as an evildoer, or as one who takes hold of another's 3) office.

26 Although such a consecration has now ceased, that the prophets or preachers sit in the church and talk around each other (as St. Paul says here), a small sign and footstool has remained of it, namely, that one sings around each other in the choir and does one lesson after the other and then all sing a antiphons, hymn or responsory. And if one preacher interpreted another's lection and another interpreted it or preached from it, it would be just the right way to teach in the church, which St. Paul calls. For one would sing or read with tongues, another would prophesy or translate it, the third would interpret it, and another would confirm or improve it with sayings and examples, as St. James did in Acts 15 and St. Paul in Acts 13. And it would be better than to read or sing the mere lection in Latin, unknown language, like the nuns read the Psalter, although St. Paul does not condemn such speaking in tongues by himself, but does not praise or command it in the church without interpretation.

1) Here the Erlanger asked to reprint from the old edition of Walch: Apost. 21, 19.

2) "help" is missing in the Wittenberger.

3) So the Wittenberg and the Jena. In Walch's old edition and in the Erlangen one, "a" is missing.

27 But whether this way should now be set up again and the preachers' chairs removed, I will not advise, but help to defend. For the people are now too wild and too forward, and a devil might mingle between pastor, preacher and chaplain, so that one would want to be above the other, and thus quarrel and bite each other in front of the people, and each would want to be the best. Therefore it is better to keep the preaching chair, for there, as St. Paul teaches here, things are done honestly. And it is enough that in a parish the preachers preach one day after the other and, where they want, in one place after the other, and one interprets after midday or before midday what the other has sung and read early or in the mass, as it happens now and then with the gospel and epistle. For St. Paul does not insist so hard that one must keep such a way; rather, he insists that it should be done properly and honorably, and gives such an order.

Wise as an example. Because our way of preaching is more proper among our people than theirs, we should keep it.

In the time of the apostles, such a manner of sitting prophets was well kept, for it was an old, daily, practiced custom among a well-mannered people from the Levitical priesthood, kept from Moses, which now would not be well brought into pregnancy among such wild, naughty, impudent people.

29 Let this be said of the saying of St. Paul. And summa, the insidious and the false preachers are the devil's apostles, since St. Paul complains everywhere about "how they walk through the houses, and the same traffic, always teaching, and yet do not know what they say, or what they set" [2 Tim. 3, 6.]. Therefore be warned and exhorted spiritual ministry, be warned and exhorted worldly ministry, be warned all things Christian and subject, that they beware of them, and hear them not. Or whoever suffers them and hears them, let him know that he hears the afflicted devil himself in the flesh, nothing else than as he speaks out of a possessed man. I have done my part, and have also spoken of the eighty-second Psalm 1); I am excused. Let the blood of any man who does not follow good and faithful counsel be on his head. Command you and yours, my dear Lord and friend, in God's grace and mercy; to whom be praise and thanksgiving, honor and glory forever in Christ our Lord and Savior, Amen.

1) The interpretation of this psalm is found in Walch, alte Ausgabe, Vol. V, 1020 ff.

36 D. Martin Luther's letter to Margrave Albrecht of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia. *)

Perhaps April 1532.

Grace and peace in Christ our Lord and Savior.

1 Sublime Highborn Prince! I have received and heard E. F. G.'s writing on the Sacrament and the 6th Chapter of John, and should E. F. G. have answered it long ago, but the weakness of my head has prevented it, 1) and still does, for which reason I humbly ask E. F. G. to graciously grant me such a delay, since I have had to write it even now, and let someone else write it. However, I wanted to let it go out through the printing process to indicate to the enthusiasts once again that I no longer intend to deal with them about the matter, in addition to the fact that I was worried that it would come into print, and because it is not my pen, but my poetry, and therefore perhaps not equal to my previous writings, it would be even worse and omitted more industriously 2).

2 And that I answer E. F. G. in the shortest way, it is true that John 6. Christ does not speak of the Lord's Supper, nor does he act with his hands, nor does he give bread to his disciples, as he does in the Lord's Supper, but preaches freely both to the disciples and unbelievers at Capernaum about faith in him, which faith believes him to be true man, to have flesh and blood, and to have given them both for us; which actually means to eat his body spiritually and to drink his blood spiritually. And is also called spiritual bread, which gives life to the world. Such Eating and drinking can take place apart from baptism and sacrament, but only in faith and through the preached word of the gospel, and no godless person can eat in this way, just as little as a godless person can believe and remain godless at the same time. For he says there [Cap. 6, 51.] "He that eateth this bread hath life." And again [v. 53] "Unless ye eat of the flesh, and drink of the blood of the Son of man, ye shall have no life in you." Therefore they must be true believers who eat John 6. for they shall have life, says Christ.

3) And the summa 3) is said: "He who believes in Christ will be saved. But in the Lord's Supper both worthy and unworthy can eat, as St. Paul clearly indicates 1 Cor. 11, 27-29: "He who eats the Lord's bread unworthily, and drinks the cup unworthily, eats and drinks judgment." Therefore they cannot all eat life, as they must eat John on the 6th. Therefore there is a great difference between St. John's Day on the 6th and the Lord's Supper. For the latter is a spiritual meal, without the bodily meal; but here in the Lord's Supper there is 4) a spiritual meal, but only for believers, and besides it a bodily meal, both common to believers and unbelievers. As believing and hearing the gospel is a spiritual baptism, since we are baptized spiritually by the Spirit and fire, susceptible only to believers; but bodily baptism is common to both believers and unbelievers, and yet a true baptism in both, without being of any use to unbelievers.

1) The Jena edition has the conjecture in the margin that "so far" would like to be omitted here.

2) The Wittenberg has instead of "omitted" the words: "in print an Tag geben".

3) Instead of "the summa" in the Wittenberg: "in summa so much".

4) Wittenberger: is.

*) This letter was published in 1532 in a single edition by Nickel Schirlenz in Wittenberg. In the "Gesammtausgabe": Wittenberger (1551), vol. II, p. 241; Jenaer (1566), vol. V, p. 488; Altenburger, vol. V, p. 963; Leipziger, vol. XX, p. 354; Erlanger, vol. 54, p. 281 and in De Wette, vol. IV, p. 348. The latter places the writing in April because Luther calls himself ill and speaks of Zwingli's death and the defeat of the Zurichers as having happened recently. We give the text according to De Wette.

but condemnable. Just as the name of God in the other commandment is the only right name of God, but still harmful to the one who misuses it, and beneficial to the one who calls on it in right faith.

(4) And even though some people confirm the text of John 6:6 concerning the sacrament, and insist on the word dabo, when he says, "My flesh which I will give," and think that it should be a promise of the sacrament which he afterwards instituted, yet it is not so; for by dabo or promise he means that he will give up his body to death for us, and will shed his blood for our sins. Further, nothing can be forced out, for the aforementioned reason, since no godless person can spiritually eat Christ's flesh or drink his blood, that is, believe; as he may well do in the Lord's Supper and without all faith receive the body and blood of Christ verbally.

(5) But herewith we do not condemn the fathers and teachers who have used and led the sixth chapter of John 1) on the Lord's Supper, as they often lead more sayings in an uneven way; for their opinion is right and good, that they testify that it is truly the flesh and blood of Christ in the Lord's Supper. Therefore it is to be considered good for them, if they do not hit the sayings right away, because they nevertheless indicate their opinion powerfully and clearly. But to preserve the articles of faith, one must certainly have the sayings in the right simple sense, which is not necessary where one preaches or exhorts plainly.

Now I have said above and more before that I will henceforth leave the fanciers idle and let them be commanded to the judgment of God. For I and many others have pursued this matter of the Sacrament so thoroughly and violently, and have so clearly mislaid their idle chatter that they themselves have had to concede and concede many sayings and pieces, on which they insisted quite stiff-necked at first. This proves, as from experience, that they have made their case from uncertain grounds and their own fictitious stories.

They are always pondering and looking for another one, and direct their cause to "not being silent". Just as the devil, their master, if he cannot overcome a holy man with art, writing or force, so he makes him tired with his incessant 2) stopping, whether he could thus win.

(7) So they also think that they want to engage in perpetual disputation, and drive the people with chatter and sounds, so that in the meantime one should not see nor hear how unfounded things they pretend, and no one should notice how many sayings and pieces they have lost. Even as many books as they have written in all places, and have cried out excellently about spiritual food, none of them has been found among them all who could properly and clearly define or say what spiritual food is, or how it has a shape with faith; but they are always chattering about spiritual food, "and know neither what they say nor what they put," as St. Paul says. Paul says 1 Tim. 1, 6. 7. For they are inexperienced, untried people in the spirit, that it is impossible for them to understand what spirit, spiritual food, or faith is. Therefore there is no further dealing with them, and whoever wants to be undeceived by them has so much instruction from our books that he can well avoid their chatter.

8 Therefore my faithful Christian councilor, E. F. G., is also idle with them; for there is no end of disputing and chattering, they do not let them say anything and hear nothing, nor do they know anything to say and teach anything. And E. F. G. do not let such be my counsel, as grown out of me, but of the Holy Spirit, who knows all hearts and all things better than we do; he has given us such counsel by his "chosen instrument" 3) St. Paul Titus 3:10, 11, where he says: "A heretical man thou shalt avoid, when he is once or twice admonished; and thou shalt know (says he) that he is perverse, and hast his judgment."

1) Thus the Wittenbergers and the Jenaers. De Wette: "Johannis am sechsten Capitel".

2) De Wette: "incessant".

3) Thus in all editions. De Wette according to the original print: "stuff".

(9) Now they have not been admonished once or twice, but have been overcome in many things and sayings, and yet will not cease. Therefore it is certain, as St. Paul says, "that they are wrong," and no more exhortation helps, much less much disputing and chatting with them without ceasing. And again St. Paul says 2 Tim. 2:14: "Teach them not to quarrel about words, which is not profitable without turning away the hearers." This is saying so much: that much disputing with the mobs is not only unfruitful for them, but also harmful to the hearers, who, even if they are not seduced, are nevertheless annoyed and deterred by it.

(10) Such counsel of the Holy Spirit we must not despise, nor turn to her glory, but always let her go, and avoid her. He who has so counseled us will surely find them and put their glory to shame, as he has already set out to prove and prove by deed. For we have seen how he has destroyed Muenzer and his companions, and made them a terrible example to all the enthusiasts and the spirits of the mob. For with them there was also vain boasting of the spirit and contempt of the sacraments, but it was not found in the evidence what kind of spirit it was. Likewise Carlstadt, since the time he began the game, has been chased to and fro in the world, leaving no place for his body nor rest in his heart, like a true Cain, marked and afflicted with trembling and fear. And now the poor people in Switzerland, Zwingeln and his own, have been punished noticeably enough, so that the spirits of the mob should be justly offended. But they are obdurate, perverse, and suo iudicio condemnati, 1) says St. Paul [Titus 3:11]. They all want to know, and none believe.

11) And although neither the Muenzerians nor the Zwinglians want to believe that they are punished by God, but consider them and preach them as martyrs, we, who know that they have hardly erred in this article and others, must recognize and consider such punishment by God.

Not that we rejoice in their misfortune, which we are heartily sorry for and have been all along, but that we cannot leave the testimony of God's truth. If they have been saved, as it is not impossible for God to convert a man at his last end in a moment, we grant and wish them that from the bottom of our hearts: but to make martyrs, there is more to it than to be badly saved, namely, a certain divine cause, for which they suffer and die; which is not found here. For we also do not condemn to hell the evildoers who are punished or put away by public judgment, but therefore do not make martyrs of them.

(12) And I am astonished that the rest of the Muenzerians and Zwinglians do not turn at all to such divine ruts, that they not only remain hardened in their error, but that they interpret such ruts for a rut of the martyrs, and still justify themselves and compare themselves to the holy martyrs. But it is the common example of all the wicked, of which the prophet Isaiah 9:13 and other prophets often say: Non est reversus populus ad percutientem se, "the people turn not to him that smiteth them." Just as the Jews have not believed for more than a thousand years that they are punished and disturbed by God because of Christ, whom they crucified, but always boast that they are the holy people of God. So also the Pope and his followers do not mind that they attack God with so many miracles, plagues and signs without ceasing, but continue with raging and blustering, blaspheming God and justifying themselves, wanting to be the holy Christian church, to be children of the Holy Spirit in their impenitent, shameful life, whether God likes it or not. These are called the right sins in the Holy Spirit, which one must let go, as Christ did to his Jews.

13) It is true that the victory of the Swiss against the Zwingler is not almost joyful nor worthy of such great glory, because they let the Zwinglian faith, as they call it, remain in their treaty 2) and such erroneous beliefs are not to be found.

2) "Contract" is Conjecture of the Jena edition. In the other editions: Fürtrag.

1) αὐτοκατάκριτοι.

They do not condemn anything at all, but let it go along with their old, undoubted faith, as they say, which the Sacramentans perhaps comfort and strengthen. But nevertheless one must grasp that [it] is a punishment of God, of which they cannot boast, but have thereby opened the mouth of their adversary and of all godless papists, and have given cause for boasting, which, I fear, will finally demand of both parts the vain right judgment of God. A martyr cannot boast of his punishment before the world, but because he can boast of his just cause before God, he can boast and rejoice in his innocent suffering for the sake of such a good cause.

(14) Since God so powerfully draws a line, and with punishment truly condemns such error, and confirms our faith, it is time to cease doubting and disputing, lest He be too greatly tempted, and last of all we also be made partakers of His punishment and chastisement. Moreover, this article is not a doctrine or a composition, invented out of Scripture by men, but clearly established and founded in the Gospel by the clear, pure, undoubted words of Christ, and from the beginning of the Christian Church in all the world until this hour it has been unanimously believed and held, as evidenced by the dear Fathers' books and Scriptures, both Greek and Latin, and by the daily practice and work of experience, until this hour. Which testimony of the whole holy Christian church (if we had nothing more) shall be sufficient for us alone to stick to this article and not to hear or suffer any red spirit about it. For it is dangerous and frightening to hear or believe anything contrary to the unanimous testimony, faith and teaching of the whole holy Christian church, which from the beginning has held unanimously in all the world for more than fifteen hundred years.

(15) If it were a new article, and not from the beginning of the holy Christian church, or if it were not held in such harmony in all churches, nor in all Christendom throughout the world, it would not be so dangerous nor terrible to doubt or dispute whether it is right? But since it has been held in unison from the beginning and as far as the whole of Christendom is, whoever now doubts it, does as much as if he believed no Christian church, and thereby condemns not only the whole holy Christian church as a damned heretic, but also Christ Himself with all the apostles and prophets, who founded and powerfully testified to this article, when we say: "I believe a holy Christian church," namely Christ Matth. 28, 20.: 2) "Behold, I am with you unto the end of the world." And St. Paul 1 Tim. 3, 15.: "The Church of GOD is a pillar and foundation of the truth." Their own opiuiio also testifies against them, that they are so divided against one another about the text, and make almost seven or eight things, so much text, so many opinions, and can teach nothing certain, nor report any poor conscience constantly.

For this reason, I urge and request that the Foundation avoid such people and not suffer them in the country, according to the advice of St. Paul and the Holy Spirit, as indicated above. For the authorities must consider that if they were to allow and suffer such rotten spirits, if they were able to prevent it and if it were to occur, they would grievously burden their consciences and perhaps never be able to satisfy them again, not only for the sake of the souls that would be seduced and condemned by it, which the authorities could have preserved. F. G., but also for the sake of the whole holy church, against which so long established and universally held faith and unanimous testimony to form something, if one could well resist it, is an unbearable burden for the conscience. I would rather have the wisdom and justice of not only all the ruffians, but of all emperors, kings and princes testify against me, than to hear or see one iota or one jot of the whole holy, Christian church against me. For it is not so to jest with articles of faith, from the beginning and, as far as Christendom is, held in harmony, as

2) Here De Wette has reprinted Walch's false Bible quotation "Matth. 28,10.", which the Erlangen edition has also excepted, this time not from Walch, but from De Wette.

1) "demand" - be a promotion.

one may jest with papal or imperial rights, or other human traditions of the fathers or concilia. 17 I have recently replied to E. F. G. and humbly in good Christian faith. Christ, our faithful Savior,	May E. F. G. with His Holy Spirit abundantly enlighten and strengthen us to believe and do according to His dear holy Word, Amen. E. F. G. willing D. Martinus Luther.
--	--

37. D. Martin Luther's letter to the Counts of Schlick to keep Joachimsthal clean of enthusiasts. *)

s. October 1532.

Grace and peace in Christ. Gracious, gracious gentlemen! Even though my letter to the G. is presumptuous, I have been moved by M. Christoph Ering, and I have dared, and my humble request to the G. is, because the wicked devil sends spirits of the red and sneaks everywhere, and Jáchymov is just such a place (because of the various people), where they can nest and hedge: E. G. wanted to follow the praiseworthy example of the highly famous Mr. Stephan Schlick, E. G. of noble blood, to hold fast to the pure word of God, and to keep a diligent eye on such devil seeds. For a little spark makes a great fire and, as Saint Paul says: "A little leaven leaveneth the whole dough", and leprosy is an addictive and gluttonous plague. However, I hope to keep E. G. Christian in such matter without my request,	my superfluous concern has moved me to ask for this. For I would like to see, because in the valley the crowd is large, and from there it resounds far and wide what is taught and held there, that God's word would be pure and mighty in the swing, and all abuses and aversions, whether they be papal or red, would be done away with; as the daily masses and false chastity of the priests also are. Christ, our Lord, who enlightened our Lord's heart with His truth, would also give His spirit and power to our Lord to do and to leave what is pleasing to His gracious will, 1) Amen. At Wittenberg, October 9, 1532. E. G. willing Martinus Luther, D. 1) Both counts then issued a mandate against the swarmers. (Burkhardt I. o. p. 208.)
--	--

38: A number of propositions against the doctrine of the Anabaptists, made by Phil. Melanchthon.

First half 1535.

This writing is, as Walch notes in his introduction to the 20th volume, p. 80, "among others printed at Wittenberg in 1538 in quarto". Furthermore, a reprint appeared in 1535 at Hieronymus Formschneider in Nuremberg, and another print (without indication of the printer) together with the following writing (Erlanger, vol. 63, p. 336). They

*) This letter addressed to Counts Jerome and Loren; von Schlick (Burkhardt, Briefwechsel, p. 208s is found in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 478; in the Jena (1566), vol. V, p. 509; in the Altenburg, vol. V, p. 985; in the Leipzig, vol. XXII, p. 560; in the Erlangen, vol. 54, p. 332 and in De Wette, vol. I V, 407. We give the text according to De Wette.

is found only in the Wittenberg edition (1551), vol. II, p. 281, with the year 1528. In the index to the Wittenberg and Jena editions by Sigismund Schwoh is "1538"; both dates are to be regarded as printing errors. The author of the book Restitutio (Neudecker, Actenstücke, 1. Abtheilung, p. 105) is the Münster preacher M. Bernhard Rothmann, who was still a preacher of the pure doctrine on December 23, 1532, as Luther's letter to him of this date testifies (De Wette, Vol. IV, p. 426). Therefore the book, consequently also our writing, which is directed against it, must belong to a later time. We would be inclined to assume the year 1535, because the individual editions belong to this year, namely the first half of the year, because Rothmann (probably) perished during the conquest of Münster. Because this writing is completely contained in No. 40, we have omitted it, especially since it is not written by Luther, but by Melancthon.

39 Neue Zeitung von den Wiedertäufern zu Münster. *)

Early 1535.

(1) In eight days after the storm had passed, the shittyHe had almost exquisite garments made of gold and silver prophet at Münster, called John of Leiden, a tailor'spieces from the temple's ornaments. And his stallions, servant, held out to the congregation there: He had aalso of the ornaments very colorful and deliciously command from God that he should be a king over Israel,dressed; in addition 1) gifted with golden rings; all like the and of righteousness; and in all measure set up hisqueen with her virgins and wives. kingdom and regiment like the kingdom of David 2c. No 4 When the king rides in the city in his majesty, he one was allowed to contradict this. And then one stoodwears a silver piece, cut in the fold, with red carmine up, called John of Warendorf, who was a goldsmith there,underneath, and bound together with gold. Likewise also and said: And that the other prophet should be a king oftwo boys; one of them carries after him on the right side righteousness, and rule over the whole earth; and that hethe crown and Bible, the other on the left side a mere should go forth with army strength, and slay all authorities,sword. spiritual or secular, without all mercy, and spare the (5) One of the boys is the son of my lord of Munster, subjects where they would do righteousness; and so thewho is imprisoned therein, and waits for the king's body in meek shall inherit the earth, and God's will be done onthe chamber.

earth as it is in heaven, Matthew 5 and 6. Thus the king in the triple crown, made very precious After that, the king accepted his regiment, andof ducat gold (since all his jewelry and coinage is made of appointed his court in all measure with offices, like ait), and on it precious jewelry (including a gold chain with secular prince, as with court masters, marshals,precious stone), has 2) the figure of the world with a gold gatekeepers, kitchen masters, foremen, chancellors,sword and pierced with a silver one. In the middle of the speakers, table servants and waiters; likewise from hisapple a golden cross, on it written: A king of justice over wives a beautiful noble woman from Holland (who hadthe world. The queen also keeps the same. previously had a prophet, who was slain before Münster, 007 With such ornaments the king goeth into the of which she is still pregnant) is now queen and also hasmarket three times a week, upon a high seat made for that her own court. purpose; and the governor, Knipper-

(3) The king also has thirty-one horses covered with gold cloths and several gold sacks.

1) This again refers to the king, not to the "stallion riders"; compare [28].

2) These brackets are set by us for the sake of understanding.

*) This writing is printed in 1535 in Wittenberg and also in Nuremberg (Von der Hardt, Autographa Luther. , Dova. I, r>. 310 and 320); then included in the Wittenberg edition (1551), vol. II, bl. 385 d. Luther provided it with a preface, which Walch has assigned to the 14th volume; in the old edition, Col. 328. From this preface we see that the abominable being at Münster was still in full swing. The events reported in this writing belong to the middle of October 1534. Therefore, we have to place this writing in the beginning of the year 1535. According to the Wittenberg edition, we give the text.

The place called dolling is one step below him, and after that the councilors. Whoever has to do something there must bow down twice and fall to the ground the third time, and then give his opinion.

8th They, the inhabitants of the city of Münster, held supper on a Tuesday in the Thumhof, sat at table by forty-two hundred, and gave three dishes, as: boiled meat, ham and roast; and the king and queen and all their servants served at table. After the meal, the king and queen took wheat cakes, broke them and gave them to the others, saying: Take and eat, and proclaim the death of the Lord. Likewise also a pitcher of wine, with the same words: Take, all of you, and drink from it, proclaiming the death of the Lord.

(9) And the congregation began to break one another's cakes, saying, Brother and sister. Take and eat of it! As Christ gave himself for me, so will I give myself for thee: and as the grains of wheat are baked one in another, and the grapes are pressed together, so are we in one. They did all these things at the table, warning that nothing useless but the law of the Lord should come out of their mouths, and then they gave thanks to the Lord, first with prayers, then with singing, especially singing: Glory to God in the highest! In the same way the king and queen sat at table with the servants and those who came from the guard.

010 After all these things the king said unto all the congregation, Whether they were all willing to do the Father's will, and to suffer? They all answered, "Yes. Then the prophet said, He had a command from God to send some of them to perform the miracles God had done for them. So the prophet John of Warendorf said, "This is the command of God, that some of those whom he would name should go to four cities in the kingdom and preach; and he called them by name from a piece of paper and said, "Let them leave all that they have. And they went out the same evening to Osnabrück, 1) six, six to Cosfeld, five to Warendorf, and eight to Soest, 2) among whom was the prophet himself. And they gave to each one a penny of nine gold florins, and a supply of other money.

11) On the evening of Galli 3) they appeared in the aforementioned 4) cities according to orders, shouting with a horrible cry: Convert and repent, for here is a short time that the Father may have mercy on you; for the axe is laid to the root of the tree; so, if the cities would not accept peace, they should perish in a short time. They also came before the council of the four cities, and spread their cloaks on the ground, and threw on them the pieces of gold written before them, with these words: they were therefore sent by the Father to proclaim peace to them. If they would accept it, then they should give their goods in common; but if they would not, then they would protest to God with the piece of gold that they had not accepted his peace, but had despised it. And they said: Now the time has come, of which all the prophets have spoken, that God will have nothing on earth but righteousness; and if the king uses his office in such a way that there is nothing on the face of the whole earth but righteousness, then Christ will hand over the kingdom to his Father.

12 Then they were taken into custody and, both kindly and painfully, interrogated about their faith, life, fortifications of the city, and provisions; whereupon they all gave the same account. Of their faith and life they confessed thus: If one rightly distinguishes the time with hunger and thirst of righteousness, if one rightly looks at the Scriptures, especially the prophets, the right way and doctrine alone is with them; and they are ready to confirm this with their blood with special graces.

(13) They have evidently confessed: From the time of the apostles, God's word was never preached rightly, and there was no righteousness. Item: There are four prophets: two righteous ones, as David and John of Leiden at Münster; two unrighteous ones, as the Pope and Luther; and Luther is even worse than the Pope. All other Anabaptists are also condemned by them, wherever they are.

(14) They were also asked, By what writing do they prove their righteousness, that they have driven the righteous people out of the city of Munster for no fault of their own, against their own promise and obligation, and have taken all their goods, wife, and children?

3) The "Abend Galli" is October 15, 1534. Because the city of Münster siel on June 25, 1535, we see that the events of the year 1584 are reported here. This is confirmed by the letter of Bishop Franciscus of Münster to the E^abishop of Cologne which follows this report. See below § 27.

4) Wittenbergers: the.

1) In the Wittenberg: "Osenbrück", in other places "Ossenbrück".

2) Wittenberger: Sosst.

(15) To which they answered that Christ said to the Jews, Faciem coeli judicare nostis, signa autem temporum non potestis? Matth. 16, 3. And now the time shall come, of which the Scripture says: Beati mites, quoniam possidebunt terram. Also, God has given your people of Israel the Egyppter property.

(16) They said that in the city of Munster there was still silver and gold, all of which was beaten into barrels, three times a hundred thousand florins, except all the goods that were still superfluous.

17) For this purpose they have appointed offices 1) which should buy and sell with the heathen, when that is consumed.

18. next to them they have set other craftsmen, as: Shoemakers, tailors, blacksmiths and the like. When food and clothing are needed for themselves and their household members, they are given enough.

(19) Among them in the city the men commonly have all five, six, seven, or eight wives, each according to his pleasure; except that he must sleep with one until she is with child; then he takes in heaps and takes one after another as he pleases. All virgins over twelve years of age must be free.

20.. In addition, there is such compulsion in the city: If one of the wives is regarded unkindly by another man, or one of her companions, he must immediately be mourned and die; likewise also the wives, where one becomes infamous with another. The old women choose a guardian, who must provide all their necessities.

The churches and places of worship completely disturb them and call them Baal's and Roman department stores and murder pits of the souls. There are also not more than eight thousand people with wife and child in Münster.

22) And the last command of the king was to the preachers when they went out: What they encounter should not be attributed to the congregation in Münster, but only to the prophet in Soest.

23) The people of Münster, Groningen, 3) and Holland would also be threatened; if this were to happen, the king would go out with all his might and seize the whole earth; and therefore they would kill and kill the authorities, so that no one would do them justice, nor would they have done them justice; nor would they appeal to the king.

1) i.e. officials.

2) Wittenbergers: the.

3) Wittenberger: Grünigen.

emperor or some scholars, but to GOD and His Word alone.

(24) They also confess that it is impossible to understand the Scriptures without prophets. If one also holds a discussion with them about the Scriptures and comes so far with them that they cannot excuse their presumption, then some answer, as butchers and other craftsmen, that it was not given to them by the Father. The others said: The prophet said it from God's command. No one was found who wanted to revoke, if grace was offered to him; but they sing and thank the Father that he has made them worthy to suffer for his name.

Item 25: Knowing that the bishop of Münster and Osnabrück had taken the city of Warendorf, had received the keys to the town hall and the city, because of their disobedience, that they had joined the Müsterian cause, the four prophets sent from Münster had answered him, along with three other citizens, and they had been judged. Eight other prophets from Münster came to Soest, wanted to cause a riot, were captured and then judged.

26 Item, at Osnabrück six of them are seized who were sent there from Münster; they are handed over to the bishop and are sitting at Summerburg; they will also be judged.

[Letter and report from the Bishop of Münster to the Archbishop of Cologne.]

To My Most Gracious Lord, the Archbishop of Cölln and Elector 2c.

27 Our friendly service before. Eight days ago today, a preacher belonging to the Anabaptist sect came to Warendorf from Münster with five of the most prominent ones, and made a clamor in the gaff that they were sent by the father to proclaim his command, which the council allowed them to do. And because they refused and rejected our request to stop the same preachers and to deliver them to us, this morning, in order to prevent further unrest and upheaval in other towns, we have presented ourselves before the town, and have also been prepared in earnest to conquer it by force. But when the townspeople and the community noticed this, they surrendered to our mercy and disgrace, and the town also put the prefects under our control. What we now learn from them, such as were delivered into our custody at Osnabrück, in hearing their confession, we will tell E. Love conducive. 1) There are also eight such persons still imprisoned and kept in our town of Cosfeld, whom we have demanded to answer, but have so far refused to do so. Therefore, we will describe them again in the most serious way: In the event that they do not follow us, we will, with God's help, also strive for necessity in ways to bring those in Cosfeld to obedience. And send herewith to E. L. for news a piece of gold, which the predicant had with him, and reproached to the council to certify that they were sent by the Lord, which we did not want E. L. to keep. Date in our city Warendorf on Wednesday after Galli Abbatis [M. October], Anno etc 34. 2)

Franciscus, Confirmirter at Münster.

28. 3) On Tuesday after Gereonis [October 13, 1534] an assembly took place in Münster in the Thumhofe, at ten o'clock before noon half of the two and forty hundred present in Münster at one assembly, men and women, all of them manly, and sat down, all of them dined at the table, first cooked meat, ham and roast meat; then a cake to begin the evening meal. Then the king came out of the church with his people, with thirty-one horses, with four attendants, dressed in velvet and gold. The king [was] clothed with a black pall skirt, on it a silver piece covered; and his crown; and a valiant ornament with a golden world, through it two swords; and the hands full of rings, and [he is] dismounted in his full armor, and in the clothing served to the table with his servants, harmless with threescore persons. And when the meal was done, he also sat with the servants, and those who came from the guard.

029 And when the round bread was set before and after upon the tables, the king said, Take, eat, and proclaim the death of the LORD. And afterward he gave the wine, saying, Take, drink, and proclaim the death of the Lord. When they had eaten and drunk, they sang Gloria in excelsis DEO in German. And the king took all the people together.

1) This was probably done in the report following this letter.

2) In the Wittenberg "24", a printing error.

3) The following is, as it seems to us, the report promised in the previous letters, which contains essentially the same as the previous one. In the Wittenberg edition, the signature of the letter "Franciscus confirmirter zu Münster" is printed in large letters as the superscription of the following.

And he put it before them, saying, Will they suffer and die a death for Christ's sake? They all said, "Yes. Therefore the prophet, John the goldsmith of Warendorf, got up on the throne, called some of them by name, and said, Go into the cities, and preach the word of God. They were willing, and said: Yes.

The same went out of four gates in the evening. One part from 4) St. Servatii Gate to Soest, known as this, the Prophet of Warendorf, and Schlachtschaf. The others from Our Lady's Gate, six to Cosfeld, of which one is Bernd Vocker, Henricus von Goge, Predicant to Warendorf; Pastor to Nunkirch of Warendorf, called Hermannus; Bartholomäus Nadler; two others are not known. From St. Mauricius Pforten five to Warendorf: Klop-. reis; the others are not known. From the Horst Gate six to Osnabrück, and are imprisoned at Iberg; and if they are not accepted at Osnabrück, they are said to have gone to Hervord 5).

31 After these had been named, King John of Sorrows ascended the throne again, saying to the common brethren, "Behold, brethren, are you also ready to go out against the enemy? They all said, "Yes. Then he said to the ambassadors who had been summoned: 6) Go ye, and prepare the place for us; we will follow you in a short time: so will we take the whole world. Decide that the opinion of the king and all those who still exist in Münster, together with those who come from outside the country, also from East and West Frisia, should completely take over the world; whoever does not want to adhere to their faith and judge them, to strangle them. In addition, the king has also said: All princes and lords, lords of the manor, [Drosten,] 7) officials and all authorities in such a day to exterminate and kill.

The opportunity in Münster.

Item, this one, who confessed this, as reported above, also said, as follows: That the citizens are ambivalent with the incoming people, as Frisians and Dutchmen 2c.

33 Item, St. Jacob's Church is still full of ground malt, which is ground sint the Shrovetide.

4) Wittenberger: auff.

5) In the Wittenberg: "Heuerde"; in the old edition of Walch (according to an old print): "Herverde", which probably means "Herford".

6) d. i. Emissaries.

7) We have taken "Drosten" from Walch's old edition.

34 Item, in Burckhart's Lord's house there are still well over a thousand malt of skirt, and in some still much more.

35 There is still plenty of barley there than can be used in two years.

36. item, bacon is still superfluous allda.

37 There is a small amount of salt and cheese, and about 14 or 15 barrels of butter.

Item, the Münsterische lay three strong Orthäuser: one before the Horster gate, the other before St. Mauritius, and the third before [the] Judenfelder gate, below with Meisekasten on the water.

39. item, there are still twenty hundred 1) strong men in it, and against one man six women.

040 And they shall watch every night with five hundred men, and the third night shall pass: and the king shall be free to watch with his people, as the people of the office.

41 Item, there are probably seventy tons of powder still available.

(42) Let each man take three, four, five, six, or more wives according to his pleasure.

43) The king said that if he had the people, Frisians and others, with him, he would start and destroy the blockhouse lying in Cosfeld.

Confession of the Butcher.

44 Item known: that their king should reign over all the earth. Knipperdolling sat in the king's chair and said: he wanted to die and recover; and promised: that the blind should receive their sight.

45 The king commanded them to go to Osnabrück, and there he told them that they should be converted, or else they should perish like Sodoma and Gomorrah; and they should go again to Hervord, and evenly proclaim the word of God.

46. item, the king has publicly said: that God has chosen him to go through the whole world, and to destroy the unrighteousness, also the

1) In Walch's old edition: two and twenty.

2) punish with the sword those who do not want to follow his sect; and those who do not want to follow his sect should die.

47. item, known that still in Münster are at six or seven thousand men and women.

48 Item, known that they had no knowledge of the gathering of the people in the Low Countries; but after that they were told by servants who had run to them that they were present. But Knipperdolling had written to brothers and sisters everywhere before the siege; he did not know what the writings reported.

Item: Before All Hallows' Day, or certainly around Easter, all the blockhouses shall be destroyed by God, and the warehouses shall be taken down without their doing, said the prophet who went to Soest.

(50) The prophet had prophesied against the storm, that they should meet with all things, when the storms should come on; and had commanded them three days to fast and pray before the storm.

51 The king has four wives and has now reached the fifth.

52 Item, [asked], 3) how would you have held yourself against imperial majesty, dukes and other princes and lords in the passage of the world? 2c. Answer: those who want to act according to the king's justice should be spared; otherwise their king means to punish them, as indicated above.

53) Item, he knows of no skilled persons, 4) who have been in Münster - from the city of Warendorf.

54 If they were imprisoned in Osnabrück or elsewhere, the prophet would have forbidden them not to write this in Münster, so that the brothers would not be in a state of gloom; but only to write to the prophet in Soest, and if they were happy, the king would leave in the most favorable way.

2) Walch: not so.

3) Walch: said.

4) So put by us instead of: "stories", which does not seem to us to be in the place here.

40 Against the blasphemous and shameful book, which recently went out in print in Münster, some propositions put forward by Phil. Melanchthon's

First halste 1535.

Preface.

(1) So many strange and wondrous things have been said about the Anabaptists, that many have thought that the poor people were being used by their adversaries without truth, in order to disparage them and make them hateful to everyone. Some of them still came and defended them, and neither rebels nor heretics wanted to ring the bell, and considered them to be pious, honest people and good Christians. But because the case with Münster has now come to pass, and they, as the head of these Anabaptist mobs, out of well-considered courage and counsel, have printed and publicly issued a book of fifteen sheets, in which they have written all kinds of shameful, blasphemous, annoying articles, both against the gospel and the police, in clear words, as some of them have understood in this: it is without any contradiction that nothing so bad can be said of such people, the Anabaptists, it is much worse in itself.

(2) For what more can the devil himself do, if he needs all his power and strength, than first to destroy and devastate the kingdom of our Lord Christ, and then to cause mischief, war, bloodshed, and all disorder in the temporal government? These two things the people of Münster have set forth in their letter without any hesitation, and teach that the kingdom of Christ here on earth is not to stand in faith, but is to go in works, and is to be a worldly kingdom, where the Christians (who want to be alone) alone are to rule and exterminate all the ungodly. But if this is true, where is Christ with his word, who so long before and in so many places faithfully warned his Christians that they should give themselves to it and send themselves to suffer; for nothing else would come of it, they should have tribulation and distress in the world, and peace in him alone? Where are other sayings more, so here are attracted

That one should be obedient to the authorities, even to the wicked and unrighteous, as Peter calls them; without where they have imposed something contrary to God's commandment, one should obey God more than the authorities?

But the wretched possessed people are so taken in by the devil and blinded that they neither hear nor see, and against God's command they have made unheard-of innovations, elected a tailor as a king, made prophets, and murdered a hundred men in the city who did not want to agree to this innovation with the king. Therefore, whoever has not yet seen enough of the Anabaptists' intentions and plots, let this Münsterian being be a counterfactual and painting for him, since all Anabaptists' hearts, opinions, and minds are conceived and painted in such a way that all their actions, wherever they may find room and place for them, are directed toward eradicating the gospel and awakening all disorder and disruption of all praiseworthy, just regimes and laws.

4 Do not think otherwise of any Anabaptist! For you must not regard them as people who are still in their right mind, but as people who are possessed, as they are in truth, who have been brought by the devil out of God's wrath, so that they do and want everything that the devil himself does and wants. For there is their book, which bears witness to both of them, without all shyness, that they desire to reverse church and worldly rule, and to cause all kinds of disorder. And it does not help to say: They are not all like that. But because the devil has torn them away from the right doctrine; as little is one devil more pious than the other, but all strive against God's kingdom and worldly discipline and rule every moment: so also one Anabaptist is like the other; and that they do not all make such noise and innovation, it is only because they do not have space and convenient time for it.

*This writing, an extension of the "Propositiones" (No. 38 in this volume), was first printed in Latin in 1535, as Melanchthon reports in his preface, but then also translated into German, probably by Melanchthon himself. Walch reports (introduction to the 20th volume, p. 81) that at Nuremberg in 1535 both redactions of the "Propositiones" were printed together and "the new newspaper of the Anabaptists at Münster" was prefixed with Luther's preface. Our writing also went out before the fall of Münster, that is, in the first half of 1535. It is found in the Wittenberg edition (1551), vol. II, p. 391 d; after that we give the text.

Therefore it would be necessary for the Christian authorities to have good regard for it and not to despise a small seed that the devil throws into the field. For this poison is of such a nature that before you know it, it has penetrated and damaged a whole field; so that it does not take long to wait and see, but quick and urgent counsel and help must be available to ward off such filth. But this help is not only in force and the sword, although it must also be there to control the rebellious leaders; but primarily in pure and righteous doctrine, which is the right preservative, so our Lord God has arranged by grace, from his heavenly pharmacy, to escape this pestilence. For one can also see that such terrible insanity has broken out most in those places where the authorities have not wanted to suffer God's word, and the preachers together with the poor Christians have been driven out, drowned and burned. It is not necessary to name such places, it is unfortunately in the daytime, and it is very much to be feared that such devil's play with Münster will not cease, because, after such horrible punishment, one shows oneself so ungrateful to the dear Gospel.

6 For our Lord God does not take away the rod before the child asks for mercy and stops sinning; otherwise he will always punish without any mercy. And especially this rod of error is bound to the sin of despising the gospel. For thus says St. Paul in 2 Thess. 2:11, 10: "They will not accept the love of the truth, that they may be saved; therefore God will send them strong error, that they may believe the lies; that they all may be judged who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness." There is the cause indicated by St. Paul, from where the mobs and such troubles originate; namely, not from the Gospel, as our adversaries may brazenly lie: but from God's wrath against the world, which will not accept His word for its benefit and salvation; therefore it must accept the devil's word to its harm and eternal damnation.

For (dear God!) how do they want to preserve and defend themselves? They see for themselves that their papist preaching and teaching is nothing but human sand and quicksand, since it is impossible for a conscience to stand or build upon it. And yet they do not want to give room to the Gospel, so they let the poor people go without God's word and Christian doctrine, which then accepts what comes before it, and goes, as Moses says in Deut. 29:19: that a full man comes to the Lord.

a thirsty man. He has them preach to him and believes what he hears, because he does not know any better and his authorities do not want to preach any better to him, until the country becomes full of ruffraff and the wrath of our Lord God comes upon it with force, so that no one can control it, and both teacher and student go down with each other with a whole country that must pay for such sin. Otherwise, it would be enough sin and bad manners in the world if people would humble themselves against the word of our Lord God and accept it with thanksgiving, and not rage against it so wantonly.

(8) Therefore let every man be warned that he may take care of his own welfare and that of his soul, that those who are in authority may faithfully provide for their country and people and what they have with the word of God; to prevent and control such harm and wrath as has already spread too far; and at the same time to pay diligent attention to the lurkers, the Anabaptists, and to deal with them as with public agitators and those who do no good in the community. For truly here we do not want to sleep, nor do we want to wait long. Then let the subjects also beware diligently of the poison, and let their right preachers, who hold forth the gospel to them pure and true, command them faithfully, and hear them diligently, even for the sake of their own souls' salvation. For there is no lack of the wicked devil's will; he would gladly entangle everyone, high and low, small and great, young and old, in these nets. And for the sake of these causes, these articles, which went out in print in Latin in Wittenberg this year, have been translated, so that, as much as possible, the devil's intentions may be resisted and Christ's (our God and Savior's) kingdom may be increased. Amen.

Against the blasphemous and shameful book, which recently went out in print in Münster, some propositions, put by Philipp Melancthon at Wittenberg.

1. a book has gone out in Münster, full of blasphemies and sedition, against which I have wanted to place these following articles, so that everyone may see what shame, vice, and nonsense lie behind the Anabaptist revolt and doctrine, and may be able to guard and protect themselves all the better from such error.

2) First of all, they teach that before the last day the kingdom of Christ must be established in such a way that only the pious and elect (which they want to be) will reign and all the ungodly will be destroyed.

Regents who do not want to accept their faith should be exterminated and killed.

3. secondly, that the subjects shall take the rule from their overlords and depose them.

Thirdly, although the apostles had no command to arrogate to themselves the temporal regiment and ride with the sword, yet the present preachers are to take up the sword and establish a new regiment by force.

(5) Fourth, that no hypocrite, false Christian, or ungodly person be or be tolerated in the church.

6 These four pieces they clearly put in one article; and I have therefore wanted to tell them here, so that everyone may judge what kind of spirit it is that drives them; because they publicly confess such horrible lies and errors and let them go out in print.

Laying of the first piece.

(7) It is an unchristian error that Christ will establish such a kingdom before the last day, when only the godly shall reign and all the wicked shall be destroyed with the sword. For since the kingdom of Christ is a spiritual kingdom, where the poor consciences are to seek comfort and salvation through faith, against the horror of sins, death and misfortune, such a promise of God and exercise of faith would be completely wiped out, if one wanted to make the kingdom of Christ a temporal kingdom.

8. there is also enough testimony from the scriptures that the kingdom of Christ is not to be a worldly kingdom. For the Lord Christ Himself says Joh. 18, 36: "My kingdom is not of this world. And Joh. 20, 21: "As my Father has sent me, so I also send you." Since Christ was not a worldly ruler who ruled by force, but only a preacher who suffered violence, it follows that all those who are called to preach his word and are sent by him should renounce all worldly authority and in patience and suffering become accustomed to their Master Christ. But those whom the devil sends, as the Anabaptists now, may take the sword for the word, and preach lies and devilish errors for the truth; as they are now doing publicly at Münster, and will be subject to do more in other places, where the authorities of each place will not do so in time, and will control the possessed mad people by force.

(9) So also with clear words he reproves all violence and vengeance to the apostles and preachers, since

He says Matth. 20, 25. Marc. 10, 42. f.: "You know that the worldly rulers and the overlords have power, but among you it shall not be so." And Matth. 26, 52: "Whoever takes the sword shall perish by the sword." Item Matth. 5, 39.: "I tell you, 'you shall not resist evil.'" 2 Cor. 10, 3. f.: "Though we walk in the flesh, yet do we not contend carnally; for the weapons of our knighthood are not carnal, but mighty before God." 2c.

2 Cor. 3, 6. "We carry on the ministry of the new testament, not of the letter, but of the Spirit." Hebr. 8, 10.: "I will put my law in their hearts." Col. 2, 20: "If ye then be dead with Christ unto the statutes of the world, why are ye entangled with statutes, as though ye lived yet in the world?" And after that Col. 3, 8. 10. 11.: "Put away from you all anger, wrath, malice 2c., and put on the new man, who is being transformed into the knowledge in the image of Him who created him, not being Greek, Jew, circumcision, foreskin" 2c.

(10) These testimonies all teach that Christ's kingdom is separate from the worldly kingdom, and that Christians should not only refrain from violence, but also gladly suffer all violence for God's sake, and not do anything new in government or other civil and worldly affairs.

Interpretation of the second piece.

(11) This article is quite inflammatory, that the subjects should take the rule from their authorities and put themselves in their place. For so says St. Paul, Romans 13: "Let all men, every one, be obedient to his authority." And Matt. 26: "He that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword."

12 Secondly. Since it is now evident that the Anabaptists are rebels, those who sit in regiments should punish them as public land robbers and defend themselves against them.

Transfer of the third piece.

(13) This is also an indication of a terrible delusion, that they hold and teach that preachers may use the sword without and against the command of Christ, even though Christ forbade it to his apostles. For the ministry of preaching shall be no different now than it was before; and this saying shall remain forever in the church of the preachers of the gospel, John 20:21: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

Relocation of the fourth piece.

14 This is also certain enough from the holy Scriptures that before the last day no such separation is to take place, that the pious are to be separated from the evil and false Christians; and that this separation belongs only to that life and is impossible here on earth. For thus Christ says Luc. 18, 8. about His last future: "Do you think that the Son of Man, when He comes, will also find faith on earth?" And Luc. 17, 34: "Two shall lie in one bed, and the one shall be accepted, but the other shall be forsaken." I think this is clear enough, that bad boys will remain among the pious Christians until the end of the world.

(15) So Matthew 13:40 and following, in the likeness Christ says: "The harvest is the end of the world; the reapers are the angels: the Son of man shall send his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. But it is very ridiculous that they say that they are the same angels who are supposed to do this, because they can only kill the body and not throw the soul into the hellish fire, as the text says.

16 But what may it much testify? For it is evident that Christ warns us and proclaims beforehand how the last days will be very perilous, and himself says: "If those days were not shortened, no man would be saved. And St. Peter in his other epistle testifies that the wicked will remain and reign until the last day, and the pious will have to suffer persecution from them. From this it is clear that the pious are not to reign. It is also to be noted here that it is impossible for men to separate all false Christians from the church. For the church will never be so pure here on earth; there will always be bad boys among them. But in that life it will become quite separate.

(17) Here you may say: How should one understand the prophets, who often speak of the kingdom of Christ as if it should become a worldly kingdom, therefore also the disciples in the Gospel [Matth. 20, 21. 24.], and the Jews to this day hope for a Messiah, who would establish a worldly reign and make them worldly rulers?

18 Answer. The gospel interprets the prophets correctly, therefore one must interpret such figures from the gospel and not follow the letter alone, because the text itself forces a different understanding than the words read. For the prophets themselves testify that Christ shall die; therefore he shall not reign in the flesh. Item, they say: The Christians shall be comforted spiritually. But no man shall be comforted, except he that is in anguish and distress; therefore Christians shall not be worldly lords; as he saith Isaiah 61:1. f.: "He hath sent me to preach to the afflicted, to deliver them that are bound, to open them that are bound; to preach a pleasant year unto the Lord." Item, they prophesy how the true church must suffer persecution. Item, that Christ's kingdom shall be an everlasting kingdom. All this cannot and may not be interpreted to the worldly kingdom.

19 About all this, Christ very often chastises the apostles in the Gospel for being under the delusion that Christ's kingdom should be a temporal kingdom, like other kingdoms on earth, saying: "Christ must suffer" and not "reign". And the apostles themselves afterwards point to a spiritual and eternal kingdom in the sayings of the prophets. Apost. 2. and 13.

[Relocation of the fifth piece.] 1)

Fifth, the Anabaptists of Münster conclude in their book: "Let no one be saved unless he has nothing of his own and gives away all his money and goods to the commonwealth.

This article is not only ungodly and contrary to the gospel, which leaves all civil order and law unchanged, and which Christians are commanded 2) to keep, but is also conducive to sedition.

[Relocation of the sixth piece.]

22) Sixthly, they allow and command that a man may and should have more than one wife. Yet Christ in the Gospel wants to keep marriage in clear words, according to the first institution in paradise. For he says: Erunt duo in carne una, 3) "Two shall be one flesh." There he wants that the marriage should be only of two persons, man and woman.

(23) Although it was forbidden for the Jews to have more than one wife in the Law, it is still against the natural law. For it is most like and according to nature that marriage be only between two persons, as God first instituted it in Paradise, if it is to be otherwise a kind, honest and chaste marriage. As the Greeks also spoke of it,

1) This and the following two headings are missing in the Wittenberg edition.

2) With Walch: "Peace".

3) So the Vulgate. Wittenberger: 1° oarnsva unaw.

and other barbarians as a special disgrace, that they take many wives.

(24) And here it is well to note that Lamech, who was of the ungodly lineage of Cain, 1) first began this, and Abraham did it afterward because his Sarah was barren. According to these examples, it was further torn down, and God allowed it to continue in patience.

[Relocation of the seventh piece.]

(25) Seventhly, this is a terrible blindness and blasphemy, that they may say without all shame: Christ did not take his flesh from

1) Wittenberger: "from the godless lineage of Cain".

The Bible testifies that he was born of the seed of Abrahah, and that he calls himself the Son of Man everywhere. But one senses here that the Anabaptists have even more in mind to blaspheme against Christ, the Son of God, and yet they are not yet allowed to do so.

Decision.

(26) These terrible errors and aversions are undoubtedly a punishment of the great certainty and blasphemy that is now everywhere in the world. Therefore, what devout God-fearing hearts there are that watch and pray, that they may persevere in the temptation and not also be deceived. Amen.

41 Phil. Melanchthon's displacement of some unchristian articles, which the Anabaptists pretend. *)

1535 (?). 1536 (?).

1. this short scripture is given for the instruction and remembrance of the simple, that they may be the more diligentlyware and know the better how to guard themselves against the cruel devilish sect of the Anabaptists. And although the whole doctrine of the Anabaptists is full of error and blindness, and they themselves are unequal, so that in some, as in the murderous mob that was at Münster in Westphalia, even more and crueler errors are found: nevertheless, here alone are mentioned several articles, which the Anabaptists almost all at the same time preached at first, and because of which some have recently been punished in these lands. And since their errors partly dispute against the spiritual essence, which concerns the soul alone, and partly also teach rebellion and destruction of the bodily regime and of the worldly estates and order, here are several articles of the bodily regime first told, and this is considered for two reasons:

The first cause is that the simple may clearly see and learn from these articles, which are easy to understand and judge, that the Anabaptist sect is unjust, against God, and of the devil.

For as Christ says that the false prophets go about in sheep's clothing, yet inwardly they are vain ravening wolves: so also the Anabaptists deceive the simple with the appearance of some works of their own invention, namely, with fictitious humility and other hypocrisy, that they may cover up the mischief. But it is necessary for the pious and cautious Christians to investigate the spirit of the Anabaptists and their own invented doctrine, that is, the most noble and special main part of their sect, and to uncover the sheep's clothing, and to get to know and notice the wolfish heart.

4 Now the right and certain test of all sects and spirits is to see whether they openly pretend to false and unchristian doctrine, and seriously and surely practice and defend it. Where this 2) flaw is noticed and found, Christians should be careful and shy away from such sects.

5 Thus St. Paul teaches about the false spirits, 1 Tim. 4, and says: "They will forbid food and marriage" and from such their works will make new righteousness and perfection.

2) Wittenberger: this one.

*This writing appeared in Wittenberg in a single edition under this title without indication of the year, and is therefore counted by some to the year 1535, by others to the year 1536. It is certain that it was written and published after the conquest of Münster (June 25, 1535). It is found in the Wittenberg edition (1551), vol. II, p. 282 d; we have reproduced the text thereafter.

212p. 1700

Similarly, the Anabaptists forbid all worldly rule and obedience, oaths and ownership of property, and tear up marriages, which are all God's ordinances, and pretend that such their fictitious works are the right high Christian nature and holiness; as the shameful heretics of Manichaei also held in former times, and equally made such a spectre before the people's eyes with the strange, whimsical holiness, as the Anabaptists do in our times.

Because so many noble articles and main points in the Anabaptist doctrine are public and not insignificant errors (for from this follows the disruption of all regiments and, in addition, spiritual blindness), there is no doubt that the Anabaptist sect is unjust and vain seduction aroused by the devil.

Therefore, the simple should look at and consider these gross articles and think that such gross errors are presented to everyone as a warning, so that one knows how to shun and beware of the Anabaptist sect all the more, and always keep the spiritual eye open, and do not pay attention to false humility and other hypocrisy, but notice the stain and the devilish poison hidden underneath, and clearly keep God's word against it; thus one can keep oneself from the devil's wiles.

8 For if one has noticed and felt the lying spirit in some clear and tangible articles, one knows that in other articles, of which the simple understand less, one should not believe the lying spirit, but wait and learn from God's words good constant report.

9 This is the one reason why these articles are first told about the secular regiment.

(10) The other reason is that men may understand from this that the authorities are obliged to defend the Anabaptist sect with severe punishment. For this is public and quite certain, that the authorities are obliged to ward off sedition. It is the duty of the authorities to maintain secular obedience and oath-taking, and to protect and administer the marriage state. Now the main part of the Anabaptist sect is against this, as its articles clearly prove. Therefore, the authorities are undoubtedly obliged to prevent and punish such shameful, murderous teachings.

(11) For what disruption would follow if these errors were to prevail, namely, that Christians should have no other authority than only the ministers of the gospel; item, that one should not swear an oath to the authorities; item, that no one should have property, but all goods should be given in common, just as if they were to be given to the church.

The law says that sackcloth must be made in all cities and regencies; item, that husbands and wives may leave each other solely on account of the inequality in faith! As we have also found some who have left their wives and children unawares and without cause, and have taken other wives for this shameful doctrine. It is easy to understand that these articles teach and plant sedition, robbery and murder, as well as fornication and adultery. On the other hand, there is no doubt that it is the duty of the authorities to inflict serious punishment, out of obedience, which they owe to God, to the praise of God, and to the benefit of their subjects, both in body and soul.

12 And although some poor people, who are otherwise not wanton and wicked, fall into these errors, it is nevertheless necessary to ward off the sect and its seed, and the authorities should not suffer such poisonous filth to spread further.

(13) Thus the terrible example at Münster proves that the humility and patience of the Anabaptists is vain and devilish hypocrisy. For at Münster, too, the beginning was vain great holiness, and they taught that a Christian should not wield the sword and should suffer everything; they also wanted first of all no authorities, but only prophets and preachers. After that they drove out their citizens and took away their goods, as the robbers; and made a king; and intended to bring the country around under themselves with the sword, as murderers; in addition they committed all kinds of fornication. So their spirit broke out, thinking it had room, and went, as it is said: The devil can otherwise disguise himself and make himself beautiful, but he cannot save his feet; that is: finally and in the exit one knows the devil's seduction.

14 But Christians should be careful, and perceive the cunning and seduction before they are caught. Just as it was necessary to defend and punish in Münster after the Anabaptists had committed public robbery and murder, so the authorities are obliged to defend and punish those who hold and spread such seditious articles and do not want to desist from them, as well as those who have drawn the sword, even if it has not yet come to the stroke. That is enough, why it is important to tell the articles of the physical regiment first.

(15) Let all Christians also consider in these articles that the devil's power is terrible and great, that he can blind human hearts and minds so severely in such gross articles that the very grossest sins and disgraces, as sedition, robbery, and adultery, shall be for the

The highest brightness is respected. This is a strong error, which the world deserves with its cruel certainty and contempt of the holy divine word, as St. Paul says, and the world mourns because of such contempt. This wrath and punishment has always been terrible in the world, and will be much greater in these last lines; for the defiance and contempt of God, iniquity and rashness will be greater; therefore cruel punishments must follow. Therefore, we should look at this terrible example of the Anabaptists, and fear this and similar punishments and mend our ways, and learn and love God's word with right earnestness and pray in the fear of God that he will not let us fall into temptation.

(16) The pious should also comfort themselves and consider that true faith must have temptation; therefore, they should be armed with God's word against all troubles. And although temptation remains in Christendom at all times in this world, it is to be hoped by God's grace that this poison of the Anabaptists will not remain for long, but will soon disappear again. For the Anabaptist sect is not unlike the Manichaeans, and looks as if the devil were the master of the Anabaptists, who a long time ago aroused the Manichaeans, who also preached such false holiness, with contempt for all worldly regiments and estates; and did not want to have any scripture and doctrine, but only wanted to keep what the spirit taught them, just as the Anabaptists speak now; they also condemned the marriage state, and besides that they committed great shameful fornication. Just as the Manichaei of the same time, although they were a great scandal, nevertheless perished after some years and died out completely: so, although the Anabaptist rage has a terrible reputation, it will not become more powerful, and will not remain for long, as we can hope by God's grace.

17 Now we want to talk about the articles mentioned. But at the beginning, it is necessary to note and consider these articles, from which the Anabaptist spirit can be judged; namely, that the Anabaptists are lacking in the most important part of Christian doctrine. For this is to be preached and practiced primarily in Christian doctrine, that Christian righteousness and holiness should be in the heart, right faith and trust in Christ, earnest fear of God and love; and that outward bodily regiments and states, ordered by God, should be taken for God's commandment and good works, in which God has set our bodily life; that in this we practice faith toward God and set good examples to others.

Also that we all serve one another, show and demonstrate love. These are the right high services of which the holy gospel preaches to us.

But the human heart does not like to stay with these services and with God's word, but always seeks other ways, and especially opens its eyes wide if it has not invented ordinary works, but something new and special. This holiness is so gentle to the human heart and is held in such high esteem that even in the old law people sacrificed and killed their children out of this false desire, hope and pleasure in their own invented works. Therefore it is no wonder that now and then the Anabaptists and their like esteem and love their works so highly that they give themselves up to death with great boldness. For thus they also completely reverse the doctrine. They know nothing of holiness in the heart, and aim at an outward new holiness, namely destruction of good order and morals, of the regiments, of the oath, of property and marital status. They consider this destruction and barbarism to be high and noble works, not only because it is something strange and unusual, but rather because the devil, who has possessed them, takes pleasure in leading people away from God's word and order to another road, and thus causes idolatry and all kinds of sin.

(19) From this it can be understood why the Anabaptist error of the bodily government comes, namely, that they lack the main part of Christian doctrine, and do not know what Christian righteousness is, and think it is only such an outward, unusual way. It is to be understood that these errors of the bodily government not only do harm outwardly, causing turmoil and destruction, which should be prevented with great earnestness, but also do harm in the spiritual being; for in addition to the murder and similar sins that follow from them, they also darken the right understanding of Christian righteousness, and point people away from Christ and from the faith to new great works, which in truth are all disorder, desolation, shame and vice.

20 It is terrible to hear that human hearts are so blinded. For the Anabaptists have not yet devised anything higher or different than this: One shall not baptize children, and shall have no authority, no regiment; shall not take oaths; shall not keep his own; and shall take wives, depending on their sect. Now every sensible person should consider these things for himself;

What holiness can this be? It is public that such is nothing else but a cruel desolation. They want to tear the church apart by forbidding baptism. The other articles are a destruction of the bodily life, of all discipline and good order, which are also God's commandment and work. Now the Anabaptists have no other holiness to set themselves apart from us than the beautiful articles that have been declared; what holiness can they boast of? Why should a Christian be afraid of them? Yes, a Christian should realize that the Anabaptist sect is a vain devilish deception; therefore he should be courageous in the faith and confidently despise the devil and resist him, each according to his profession and office.

(21) Let this be enough here for a common reminder of the following articles, so that the simple may consider all the more diligently what a Christian being actually stands for, and see that the Anabaptists are far short of the right goal. Now let us recount the articles one after the other and lay them out with good reason.

The first article of the Anabaptists.

(22) That Christians should not and cannot be in authority and office that wields the sword.

(23) That this article is unjust and unchristian is proved first of all by the examples in the holy Scriptures, in which it is seen that many holy men have been kings, princes, and officers, and have wielded the sword according to their station and office. Christ praised the centurion Matthew on the 8th and praised his faith so highly that he said: he would not have found such faith in Israel. This centurion was a Roman warrior, as he himself indicates; and yet he is praised by Christ as a great saint and child of God. Similarly, the centurion is praised in the book of the apostles' history, to which Saint Peter is sent. So Abraham, Joseph, David, Ezechias, Daniel and many other holy Christian people were, and nevertheless they wielded the sword. Item, in the Psalms it says of Christ, "Kings shall worship him." From this it is clear that some kings and princes will also be Christians.

24 Secondly. Luc. 3, when the warriors and officers asked John the Baptist what they should do, he answered, "Let them be content with their pay, and do no violence or wrong to anyone. Thus the office is confirmed and pledged, while he lets them remain in the pay and says: they shall have their settlement. For the pay belongs to the office.

25 Thirdly. The thorough opinion of the Anabaptists is this, that the ordinary punishment in the regiment is vain sin and tyranny; for revenge is forbidden to Christians, as it is written Rom. 12: "Ye shall not avenge yourselves" 2c. This is the reason of the Anabaptists. And such misunderstanding gives them cause to boast of their patience for great holiness, and to condemn all authority; for they think that all Christian works must be absolutely equal. This is vain blindness, and comes from a wrong interpretation of the Scriptures, and from the misunderstanding that they do not know the difference between the spiritual nature in the heart, and the outward estate, which should and must have unequal works; as the man and the woman, the father and the child, have outwardly unequal works, and yet in the heart there should be one fear of God and faith in Christ.

(26) Therefore, if the Anabaptists use sayings in which vengeance is forbidden, they should know how to respond to them, namely, that all vengeance is forbidden apart from the ministry, but vengeance in the ministry is God's commandment and a holy good work. This difference is taught to us by the Holy Scriptures themselves, and is not invented by men.

27 For Paul speaks of the office that wields the sword as being God's work and order, and that the authority is God's servant, for the vengeance and punishment of the wicked, and for the protection of the pious. From these sayings it is clear that this vengeance in the office is not sin, but God's commandment and order and a right holy service of God. And since the ministry is not sin, but a good work ordained by God, Christians may have and use such ministry as other gifts of God, as food and drink 2c.

28 Yes, they must preserve this office and not destroy it, because the law must remain in the world for the punishment of the wicked, as Paul says: "The law is for the sake of the unrighteous." Now the office that wields the sword is a piece of the law.

Fourth. God commands in the Holy Scriptures that widows and orphans be protected. This is preached and commanded to the Christian authorities; therefore punishment is God's commandment, and Christian authorities are obliged to take punishment and revenge against the wicked.

(30) From all this it is clear that the sayings which forbid vengeance speak of works apart from the office. The other sayings, which praise and enjoin vengeance, speak of works in office. And it is easy to understand why works in office and works out of office must be different: for this is necessary for the preservation of peace and discipline. For what disorder and sedition would follow if each subject wanted to punish and be judge himself? That is why God has ordered the regiment to be beneficial and useful.

The second article.

Christians shall have no other authority than the ministers of the gospel alone.

In this article, the spirit of the Anabaptist sect can be seen even more clearly than before. For here, at the same time, the authorities are condemned and obedience is torn apart. And because this article is easily mislaid, it does not require many words here; only the simple are to be admonished that they want to diligently consider how terrible this article is. And that this article of the Anabaptists is also false, Paul proves in Romans 13, when he says: "Be subject therefore for necessity, not only for punishment, but also for conscience' sake. This saying teaches that God will consider it a sin and will punish severely if someone does not want to be a subject. Now this saying binds all men on earth, and it is in no one's power to withdraw from it. Therefore, all Christians must have worldly authority and rule.

(33) Secondly, it is public that God has ordered these two offices differently, the ministry of preaching and secular authority, and has commanded that Christians be under both offices. Therefore, it is an abominable error to mix these offices together, or to abolish and take away one of them, when they are both God's order and command. For no human being has the power to overrule God's order.

34 But that the Anabaptists speak against it: The pious have no need of punishment, therefore they have no need of the authorities and worldly regiments, is vain blindness. For the pious need the authorities for protection. Item, the authorities need the obedient and pious Christians for the preservation of the regiments. Therefore God wants to have us under this order for both reasons; namely, that we have protection, and on the other hand, that we serve with body and goods, in all obedience and faithfulness and at all times, in times of war and otherwise help, each according to his profession, to preserve the regiments, peace and discipline and to ward off the wicked; to this service belong especially the devout Christians. Paul teaches all this in Romans 13, where he says: "We owe obedience, worship and honor 2c. to the authorities. Whoever, on the other hand, teaches that Christians may have no authority, teaches that the authority may be deprived of the righteousness it has in our obedience; this is openly contrary to Paul.

The third article.

Christians are forbidden to swear an oath, and swearing an oath is a sin.

This article is also a destruction of the secular regiment and court. For regiment and court are taken by oath. But that Christians may swear oaths is proved first by the examples. For St. Paul himself swears an oath in clear words, 2 Cor. 1: "I call upon God as a witness to my soul." So St. Paul often swears, as Rom. 1. Phil. 1: "God is my witness", and in other more places.

Hebrews 6: "In all things, in courts of law, the oath is the end and confirmation. Here the oath is praised in the courts and considered necessary. From this it follows that it is not wrong to swear an oath, for among Christians courts and judges must also remain, as is said above about the regiment and the authorities. For courts are a pleasant part of the regiments and of the office of the authorities.

38 In the fifth book of Moses, chapter 5: "You shall swear by the name of the Lord. Here, in the other commandment, it is commanded that one should swear, but only by the name of God. If then it is commanded to swear, where such is demanded, it must follow that swearing is not a sin, but a good, holy work, by which God is honored, if one swears rightly and with truth and does not do so frivolously, but because God's honor and the authorities demand it.

(39) But as the Anabaptists object to Matthew 5: "Thou shalt not swear by the temple," 2c., the first answer is that the oath is not forbidden here, but this is forbidden, that one should not give the honor due to God to creatures. God alone is the Lord, who knows the hearts and punishes untruth; therefore God's name is to be invoked and not the temple or anything else.

40 Secondly, when Christ says, "Your speech shall be yes, yes," 2c., he says, "Your speech," indicating that he forbids the oath in our own and private speeches; namely, if the judge or the authorities do not interpret the oath to us; item, if God's honor and other people's salvation does not require our oath. On the other hand, it is right and necessary to swear if the authorities or the judge requires it, as it is said in Hebrews 6: "The oath is the end and confirmation in courts of law" 2c.

The fourth article.

Christians are obliged to give their goods in common and should not have ownership.

This article attracts the loose crowd that does not like to work and squanders more than it knows how to earn honestly. But that such teaching causes vain robbery and turmoil, everyone can easily understand. But to warn and instruct the simple, we will recently prove from God's word and commandment that Christians may have property; and that it is sedition and against God to command that goods be given in common.

43. to the first. This understanding is highly necessary to Christians, that they may know that outward worldly government is God's order; and that it is pleasing to God that we should live and serve one another therein, as before indicated. Now, having property is one of the noblest and most necessary things in government; it must follow that a Christian may use and keep such an order. Yes, he who wants to abolish and forbid this order and make a new regiment against it, and command that the goods be thrown into a common heap, is subjecting himself to tearing down God's order, and is doing harm to God.

44 Secondly, Paul teaches in 1 Corinthians 7 that Christians may buy and sell. Therefore they may have property and goods. And in 1 Tim. 6 he writes: "The rich are to give alms gladly," not saying that they should leave their goods, but that they should remain in their goods and riches.

45 Third, kings and princes must have goods and property; now the Scripture clearly teaches that some kings and princes will be saved.

46. fourth, Proverbs 5:16 f.: "Let thy wells flow forth, but thou shalt remain master over them." The holy scripture teaches that each one should remain master of his inheritance. But from the fruits and benefits one should also help others. This is what he means when he says, "Let the fountains flow forth. And it is truly a comfort to a sensible, God-fearing Christian, if he knows that God is pleased with this worldly order, that one sits in goods and seeks nourishment, and that God therefore wants to protect his order and help to nourish 2c.

47 But that the Anabaptists, on the other hand, use the apostles' example, when the Christians at Jerusalem gave their goods in common, this is not a commandment. For there have been many Christians who have not kept this way, but have remained in their goods, as can be seen from Paul, 2 Corinthians 9, where Paul also teaches that no one should be deprived of his goods, but that almsgiving should be based on each person's good will. But because of

When there was a great persecution in Jerusalem, and the Christians were daily deprived of their goods and driven away, it was more useful for them to sell the goods themselves and to collect the money to keep them in need. So they did this because of the persecution, and not because such works would be a new holiness, as some monks, Anabaptists and other foolish saints consider such unrighteousness and disruption of natural order and rule to be deliciously heavenly beings; and do not understand that Christian holiness must be in the heart, and that it pleases God that we keep ourselves in the outward life according to ordinary and orderly rules.

The fifth article.

(48) If in marriage one person is a true believer and the other married person is not a true believer, let such a marriage be fornication, and let the true believer leave the other for the sake of faith alone and marry another.

49) This article is intended to move reasonable and disciplined people to become serious and heartfelt enemies of the Anabaptist sect. 1) For it is terrible to hear that they desecrate and tear apart right marriages.

50) But that this article of the Anabaptists is wrong is quite clear from Paul, 1 Cor. 7, since Paul actually deals with this question: whether believers and unbelievers should remain with each other in the marriage state? and he insists that they should remain with each other, teaching that such a marriage is a right, holy and pleasing marriage to God for the believer. Therefore he says: "The unbelieving person is sanctified by the believing"; that is, the conjugal companionship of this person becomes holy, that is, pleasing to God, and is not sin. For so the word "holy" is to be understood in this place, as Paul otherwise also speaks, "The food is sanctified," that is, it is not sin to use the food that GOD has created.

51 Thus St. Paul teaches both of these things, namely: the first, that the believing person should remain with the unbelieving and is obliged to remain, if he is not wilfully abandoned by the unbelieving. The other, that there is a true marriage between the believer and the unbeliever; that is, that the believer can be in such a marriage with a good conscience, as in a holy state pleasing to God, and is obliged to remain in it. For Saint Paul clearly says that this cohabitation is holy. Therefore it is vain devil's play that the Anabaptists call such marriage fornication and tear it apart.

1) The words: "feind werden" to "zerreißen" are missing in the Wittenberger.

52 And although the Anabaptists are quite impudent, and invent lies and glosses as they please, yet any reasonable person can easily understand that this, as we have said, is thoroughly and actually St. Paul's opinion. In contrast, the Anabaptists have invented their own slogan: One faith, one love. They interpret this to mean that they do not owe it to those who are not of their faith to keep their marriage vows. If this saying were to be interpreted as meaning that we should not owe allegiance or love to anyone who is unequal to us in faith, then we could easily eradicate all quarrels, obligations and guilt. Christ commanded that we should love even our enemies who persecute us and are publicly unequal in faith: how much more should husbands and wives be faithful to one another 2c.!

This would be better interpreted, that each one should have in his own heart One Faith and One Love towards God, that is, that he should believe in God alone, have his trust in God alone, love God alone above all things, and not let himself be turned away from God by pleasure, honor, money or goods. 2c. This same love for God also entails obedience in all the works that God has commanded for every state.

From infant baptism.

The Anabaptists hold that infant baptism is wrong.

Now consider, first, how terrible it is to throw a large part of the human race not only into an uncertain state outside the Christian church, but to tear it away from God's order and grace to damnation. On the other hand, what disruption would follow if two groups, one baptized and one unbaptized, were to grow up among us! And if the baptism were to be completed for the most part, then the pagan nature would publicly break down, and the devil would gladly make a way for this.

(56) Therefore, all devout Christians should be well informed about infant baptism and know how to comfort and strengthen themselves with good reason, so that they faithfully receive infant baptism for the glory of God, for the salvation of the dear children and for our own comfort. For it is quite comforting to devout Christians when they are sufficiently informed that children will certainly become children of God and be saved through baptism; therefore we want to prove that infant baptism is right and necessary.

57 And this is the first reason: It is certain and undeniable that the grace of Christ, forgiveness of sins and blessedness, promised in the Gospel, belongs also to the children, as Christ says: "Let the children come to me, for such is the kingdom of heaven.

Now, apart from the Christian church, that is, where there is no sacrament and the Word of God, there is no blessedness; therefore, the children must be incorporated into the Christian church and become members of it, and such grace must be bestowed upon them through the sacrament. For God has ordered and commanded the outward ministry in such a way that through it forgiveness of sin is to be distributed to all in the church. All this is public and certain. For the Anabaptists can never prove that blessedness is outside the Christian church, that is, where there is no sacrament and God's word.

The other reason. The children should and must be members of the Christian church, if they are to be saved otherwise, as is now said. Now Saint Paul teaches that the Christian church is the assembly purified by the Holy Spirit and baptism. Therefore no one can be a member of the Christian church without baptism, even with contempt of baptism.

60 Christ also teaches John 3: "No one can enter the kingdom of heaven unless he is born again through water and the Holy Spirit. Here Christ includes all men on earth, young and old, and says of water. Therefore, if the Anabaptists ask where it is commanded to baptize infants, we should keep to this saying and know that it is commanded, for Christ says, "No one can enter the kingdom of heaven unless he is born again through water and the Holy Spirit," for the ministry of water baptism is commanded to the church.

The fact that they despise water and outward signs out of great wisdom and holiness is the cleverness of their master, the devil, who, as a trustworthy spirit and enemy of God, drives wretched people to mock God's word and order. But Christians should know that in such outward signs is God's word, command and order. Therefore, the signs must be used, and God works with His order, as He has promised. For this reason St. Paul says: that the Church is purified through baptism; item: that we are born again through baptism; all of which is said so that we may certainly believe that God works with the signs.

62 But that the Anabaptists say, "The children have no faith," is a human error.

This is a strange thought, and it is not true. For it is certain that God works in the children according to their measure, if they are brought before Him through baptism. For no one is saved without divine action and rebirth, John 3. Now it is certain that the children who are members of Christianity will be saved; so it follows that it must be true that God works in them.

The third reason. The children have sin in them, namely, original sin; therefore they need forgiveness of sins, which is imparted to them through baptism. For this forgiveness and the outward ministry must make a difference between the children who are saved and the others. But here the spirit of the Anabaptists can be rightly noticed, for they hold and teach that the children have no sin in them, and that original sin is not sin; item, that the inherent evil desire in man is not sin.

(64) If you want to color lies, you need many more lies; so here, if the Anabaptists want to overthrow baptism, they invent many horrible and terrible lies for it. And consider every one of the Anabaptists holiness! They seek new outward disorderly works, so that they want to be holy; and are so blind in their hearts that they do not consider their own evil lust to be sin, despise baptism and God's word outwardly, and do not consider that one should seek God there, and that God is involved. Therefore, they do not know what faith is, and seek strange works, or want to have special enlightenment apart from and without God's Word. This is vain blindness, error and the devil's specter, and these are the very holy people of whom Paul speaks, that they are mad, and they pontificate and boast of things of which they know nothing. Christians should consider all these things carefully, so that they may learn to know the false spirits and heresies, to flee and avoid them.

That children bring original sin with them, and that inherent evil desire is sin, is clearly taught by St. Paul in many places. Rom. 5: "Through Adam's transgression we all became sinful." In Rom. 7 he calls the evil desire in man "sin that dwells in us". And Rom. 8 he says: "The lust in the flesh is hatred against God"; that is hard and clear enough. Item, Eph. 2: "We are born children of wrath", that is, sinful and damned, 66 And in sum, this understanding has always remained in Christendom: that original sin is truly sin, and that it is forgiven the children through baptism. And so that I do not make it long here, because all good-hearted and

If it is clear enough to those with understanding that the Anabaptists deny God's word quite wilfully here, I will only add one more reason to clearly understand that there is sin in the children, which is forgiven them through baptism. For all Christians must confess that Christ is the Savior not only of the aged but also of children. Therefore, if they need Christ as the Savior, there is undoubtedly sin in them. Since it is sufficiently proven that sin is in the children, if they are to be forgiven, the outward ministry must be added, otherwise there would be no difference and no church.

67 The fourth reason. Baptism and circumcision both mean grace and forgiveness of sins, as Paul teaches. Now the circumcision of the children was right and necessary, and through it the children of Abrahah were accepted by God and became God's children. Therefore, there must also be a sign in us that makes a difference between God's children and the damned.

The fifth reason. The Lord Christ has spoken a very comforting saying about children: "The Father's will is not that these children should perish. These words are spoken of the circumcised children; so they must also be understood by us of those children alone who are members of the church. For they cannot be understood by Gentiles and Turks, since there is no blessedness apart from the Church, that is, where there is not God's Word and Sacrament.

(69) Therefore, all devout Christians should take comfort and joy in knowing that their children are certainly God's children, if they have become members of the Church through baptism and have been accepted by God. For this reason, infant baptism is a sweet and high consolation. And that we conclude: If all Anabaptists bring together all their wisdom, holiness and suffering, they still cannot make any man certain that children outside the church, as Turkish children, will be saved. Therefore, their doctrine is a vain and uncertain thing and a fictitious devilish fraud.

(70) Although we have shown good consistent reason from divine Scripture, let us also remember that infant baptism is not a new thing, but was also in the oldest pure church, which is not to be despised. For what is necessary for salvation must have been known beforehand in Christendom, and especially at the time when the doctrine was purer. If infant baptism is wrong, and rebaptism is necessary for salvation, then

Such a testimony of the Holy Spirit in the church.

To introduce new doctrine without God's Word is great

Because the Anabaptist doctrine is entirely a new poem presumption, impudence and, in addition, error. of its own, without any examples or testimony from the old Whoever considers these causes diligently and holy church, reasonable Christians should shy away from carefully can, by God's grace, strengthen his faith and rebaptism. For it is not valid to joke about Christian protect himself from the unchristian error of the doctrine, to introduce a new doctrine without God's word Anabaptists. For we should know that faith will suffer and some proven examples, yes, against God's word and temptation and should be strengthened by God's word. against all the examples of all common Christianity from Therefore, we should be courageous and careful that the the beginning. This is cruel presumption and audacity, for devil does not lead us away from God's word into his own which may God mercifully protect us! For it is a devilish thoughts, as happened to the Anabaptists. For this is the contempt of God, and is the characteristic of the Antichrist, reason and beginning of the deception in the Anabaptists, as Daniel and Paul say. As the pope and the monks have that they despise the Word of God and fall into their own introduced many terrible abuses with equal boldness in thoughts, and have such great pleasure and lust in the Christianity without and against God's word and old same that they pretend it is the Holy Spirit, and then go examples, as their mass of death, prohibition of marriage on and blaspheme God, saying: one should not respect and other more things. And although the Anabaptists also the outward word and Scripture, but one should follow the want to count infant baptism among such things, they are Spirit. If this entrance and this door is open, that each one mistaken. For infant baptism has God's word and the should judge according to his own spirit, and not oldest pure church's example. For Christ says, "No one according to God's word, oh God! what a terrible thing will can enter the kingdom of heaven unless he is born again follow! as the example at Münster has proven. Thus many through water and the Holy Spirit." Now this outward of us have heard from the now punished Anabaptists, ministry of baptizing with water is commanded to the when they had overcome with clear Scripture, they finally church; therefore the church should communicate it to all. said: The Spirit taught them thus.

For this, infant baptism has examples from the earliest For this reason, it is highly necessary to pay attention that we do not allow ourselves to be led away by God's Christianity.

For Origen speaks clearly in his interpretation, Rom. 6, word to our own thoughts, but know that the Holy Spirit [v. 3. f.] that Christianity therefore received the order from does not work without God's word, but through God's the apostles to baptize children, because there is inherent word; and that we should and must recognize and grasp sin in children, which is washed away by water and the God by His word, as Paul says: "Faith comes from Holy Spirit. hearing," that is, from the sermon or the outward word.

Thus Cyprian writes to Fido a good teaching that the This order God keeps and does not tear apart. Therefore, church should not exclude children from baptism and contempt for the external word and the Scriptures is grace, but is obliged to share baptism with them. For as blasphemy, which the secular authorities are also obliged much as there is in her, she owes it to all men, young and to punish, according to the other commandment, in which old, to communicate her ministry. -And in doing so, he it is commanded that blasphemy be punished. In addition, clearly states that children need baptism for this reason, one can see what shame and vice would follow in the so that through God's grace and work in baptism they outer life, if everyone wanted to teach and live according receive forgiveness of original sin. There are many such to his own thoughts. Therefore the wise king Solomon sayings in Augustine, who also says that this order is kept says: "When the right preaching is gone, the people and in the whole church as if it were the tradition of the the government are scattered. For this reason, the secular authorities should also be vigilant here and not apostles.

These sayings we have told, so that the simple may not tolerate this blasphemy, that is, public contempt for be deceived by some lying spirits, who imagine to the Scripture and the external word, but should seriously unlearned that the ancient saints did not keep infant defend and punish it. And especially all Christians should baptism, as some have written in Münster. In addition, it consider such contempt of the Scriptures as devilish, and must be remembered that in the Christian church, against know that it is the serpent's speech in paradise to Eve.

such 'old examples,

The Anabaptists also have more aberrations.

The following is a list of the most important articles of the two sacraments and their customs, as well as other articles, of which others have also been written before, and which time does not permit to be dealt with now. And this instruction is primarily intended so that the simple may thereby learn to judge and know the spirit in the Anabaptists by means of several easy articles, and to be the more careful. Therefore ask the Christian preachers to explain these and other articles further, and to teach the people often and with diligence in such dangerous times, as they are obliged to do, and to give account to God, if they do not resist these errors with earnestness. The Anabaptists also have some pretensions to move people more than with doctrine, namely, that they use many more splendid and strange words and boast of high enlightenments, which is all a lie, as experience has often proven. Item, that they pretend great humility in those whom they praise. Item, that great brotherly fidelity seems, that they are Give their goods in common. Item, that they show great patience in suffering, and go to death with great boldness and defiance.

Now it is no wonder that such gestures move anyone; but a Christian should lift up and set God's word high and far above all appearance in outward gestures, and should know that spiritual matters are to be judged according to God's word, and not otherwise. The heathen can also run freely and joyfully into death. For the devil can blind his own, so that they do not feel their sin and punishment. Christians feel sin and fear, and overcome them with faith; therefore, while they contend, weakness appears in them. Therefore, although the Anabaptists defiantly run to their deaths, we should not fall away from God's word, but consider that maintaining right faith in the heart also requires earnestness and a struggle against all kinds of troubles.

80 May our Lord Christ graciously preserve us from all error and keep us in right faith and obedience. Amen.

42 Philipp Melanchthon's Lessons Against the Doctrine of the Anabaptists 2c. *)

Second half of the year 1535 or later.

(1) I have often taught before what are the main things that every Christian needs to know, as the Lord Christ himself indicates when he commands us to preach repentance and forgiveness of sins in Luc. 24. St. Paul also wants to show us the most important elements of Christian doctrine, when he says: "The main sum of the commandment is love from a pure heart, and from a good conscience, and from undimmed faith" 2c. These same principal things are also everywhere practiced by the prophets, and without this the whole Scripture holds before us these most noble causes, repentance, faith, love, patience, and other fruits of faith.

(2) These are the main things we must always keep in mind, and our hearts and minds must be trained in them, so that righteous fear of God, and true faith, and right and truthful beliefs, may increase in us daily.

God's knowledge, and whenever we deal with a place of Scripture, we are to look primarily for the main points therein, so that we may take and grasp the right summa of Christian doctrine correctly and intelligently.

(3) But at this time the Anabaptists and some others turn back, leaving the knowledge of Christ, which is the true wisdom, and quarreling about outward ceremonies, about the doctrine of men, without cessation; meanwhile true repentance, faith, the cross, patience, love, and other Christian fruits and works are kept silent. However, we have often discussed the main points and the summa of Christian doctrine.

4 Because so much ugly, harmful error and discord are occurring about the sacraments, we should stir them up here, so that we can make the simple and inexperienced resist such heresies, which are increasing in number from day to day.

*This writing appeared without indication of printer and year at Wittenberg. In the collections it is found only in the Wittenberg (1551), vol. II, p. 291. After that we give the text. The city of Münster had already been conquered and the rebels punished, so the writing, like the previous one, is to be placed in the second half of the year 1535 or later.

may increase, prepare. For it is very difficult to stay and hold on to the right truth when so much trouble, heresies and so much discord come in, and it usually happens that one error soon follows another, and one heresy gives birth to another, as 2 Tim. 3, 13 St. Paul indicates when he says: "The longer it goes on, the worse it gets with evil and seducing people, who seduce and are seduced."

5 First, we will speak in general about the sacred sacraments, what their proper use and benefit is, and how many of them there are; then we will speak in particular about baptism; item, about the difference between John's and Christ's baptism, and also about the baptism of young children.

From now on, the Münster Anabaptists will also be remembered in general, whose terrible history, how they became powerful in the city of Münster, raised a king there, practiced many diabolical blasphemies against God and unheard-of cruelty, sin and shame in the city, and how they were finally controlled and the alleged king and others punished, is better summarized in this book.

Of the Holy Sacraments.

(7) From the beginning of the world, God the Lord has always given, in addition to His divine promises, some outward signs that could be seen, so that His word would be the more clearly imprinted on the descendants and bequeathed to them. For such outward signs, which are seen, remind us somewhat more strongly than the teaching or the oral word alone.

8 Thus circumcision was a wonderful outward sign, reminding the Israelites of the divine promise of the blessed seed of Christ, and with the outward sign the divine promise remained all the more certain in the memory and was inherited by the descendants.

(9) Therefore, when we speak of such sacraments, we should not only look at the outward sign, but first of all take to heart and consider the divine promises to which such an outward sign is attached. For the word "sacrament" means an outward sign which God has given and instituted. Thus, two outward signs belong to baptism: the washing with water and the word of promise. In order that one may remember the divine promise and understand more clearly what sacrament is in general, I will speak of the custom of the sacraments.

First of all, all God-fearers are to be warned here against the ugly error of the unbelievers.

who teach that those who need the sacraments are justified only by the outward work done, ex opere operato, even if the heart is not involved. This false Pharisaic teaching should be eradicated from the Christian church with all seriousness, for it is strongly against the gospel and against faith; for such hypocrites teach that man is justified solely by the work and custom of the ceremonies, even if he does not believe. Yes, further they may impudently say, if he has not a good heart or devotion, only that he give not obloquy and hindrance, that is, that he be not in the intent of deadly sin.

(11) Against this are some clever and unintelligent people who want to speak politely of ceremonies, who teach and say that the sacraments are not signs of God's gracious will toward us, but only outward signs and slogans, so that God's people are known to other pagans, as the Romans are known to the Greeks by their clothing; item, as the monks are known to others by their clothing. But this does not yet indicate the proper use of the sacraments. For although they are signs by which Christians or God's people are known, they are not the noblest custom, nor do they help or comfort consciences. But we Christians should know and seek the noblest custom of the sacraments.

The third opinion is that of the blasphemous Anabaptists, who speak of it even more clumsily and foolishly, saying that the sacraments are only signs of good works. They say that circumcision was a sign that one should control and resist the flesh and evil desires. Baptism is a sign that Christians must be immersed in the world, bear and suffer all kinds of great danger and persecution; this means that water was poured over them. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper is a sign of brotherly, Christian love and unity, because among all other peoples eating and drinking with one another is a sign of friendship, love and unity.

(13) Although the sacraments signify all this, it does not indicate the proper use of the sacraments, for the sacraments are not primarily signs of Christian love and peace among us, but they are holy, sacred seals by which faith is strengthened, signs of divine will and grace toward us. For the gospel does not preach works alone, but primarily faith and the knowledge of divine grace, divine will toward us.

The first part, and in addition the least part of the Christian being, namely the works.

The fourth opinion is the right reason, namely, that the sacraments of the New Testament are primarily instituted to be signs of God's will toward us, that they stand before our eyes to remind us to believe the more strongly the divine promise preached in the Gospel. For God attaches these two to each other, His divine promise and outward signs.

(15) If the divine promise is to be grasped by faith, then there should also be faith in the right use of the sacraments, so that the heart may look upon the Savior Christ in the word of promise, and certainly conclude that you may obtain forgiveness of sins, which is offered by the divine promise.

16 Such use of the sacraments is highly necessary and useful for the God-fearing in the right fight against the devil and sin. Thus says St. Paul: Circumcision was a seal of the righteousness of faith, that is, a divine sign that God gave, so that we might believe the promise more surely and firmly; item, so that every troubled conscience might take comfort in the promise; for 1) we see that God has not only given His word and promise, but has also painted and written His word and promise on our bodies when we are immersed in water through baptism; item, when we bodily enjoy the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ.

17 Augustine finely compares the outward sign with the word, since he says: "The sacrament is a visible word; that is, just as the word is a voice that one grasps with the ears, so also the sacrament (that is, the outward sign) is a painting and memorial sign before the eyes. Just as the divine Word is a testimony and outward sign of the invisible God and His will, and just as God is known through the Word when we believe, so we also know God and His will through the outward sign when we believe.

18 Therefore, just as the Word and Gospel is an outward instrument through which the Holy Spirit works and is powerful, as St. Paul says: "The Gospel is God's power to all who believe in it"; item, Rom. 10: "Faith comes from hearing": so also the Holy Spirit works through the outward sign, if we receive it in faith. For the outward signs are given and set before the eyes for this reason, that they may

1) Wittenberger: when.

Against our weakness we should strengthen the faith in our hearts, imagining God's will as the gospel and [God's] word is given, that it may move us to believe.

19 From this it may be inferred what is the proper use and benefit of the sacraments, namely, that this is their ultimate use and fruit, that they are to lift up and comfort the hearts and consciences in temptations.

The apostles, as well as the ancient fathers and teachers of the Church, teach this right and noblest use of the sacraments. St. Paul says Titus 3: "He made us blessed through the bath of regeneration." Therefore, God works through 2) the outward sign, through the water of Holy Baptism.

21 And St. Peter speaks of it as a right, learned, high preacher, 1 Peter 3, when he says: "that baptism is not only a washing away of the filth of the flesh, but a covenant of a good conscience with God through the resurrection of Jesus Christ"; that is, baptism is a covenant, seal and sign of the covenant, by which God testifies that He is gracious to us for the sake of Christ, who suffered for our sake and rose from the dead. Again, the heart also becomes certain that it has a gracious God, and that we are righteous before God for Christ's sake.

22. and Apost. 2. St. Peter says: "Let everyone be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of sins. Peter calls baptism a testimony and sign of the forgiveness of sins and the Holy Spirit.

The ancient teachers also called the sacraments signa gratiae, that is, external seals and signs of divine will toward us. Therefore, they are not mere signs or slogans by which Christians are known to other peoples. For this reason, it is false and ungodly to teach that the sacred sacraments should be made into mere signs or slogans by which people are known, even though their proper use is to remind and comfort the hearts and consciences when they are in trouble.

(24) If we have this right and noblest use of the sacraments, then we may also consider other fruits and benefits of the sacraments, namely, that they are testimonies of confession, by which we publicly show before others that we call upon the Savior Christ, that we adhere to the gospel, which confession is also a high worship.

(25) After that, they may also be images and signs of Christian love, life and being, as the ancient fathers often described Christians in their sermons.

2) "by" is missing in the Wittenberger.

exhorts to Christian love. For when we receive the body and blood of the Lord over the table of the Lord, we make a brotherly holy covenant of Christian peace, unity and love, and show that we are all one body under the head Christ, and all members of one body. The holy fathers have often used this argument.

From number of sacraments.

(26) There is no need to quarrel about the seven sacraments or a certain number of sacraments. For if one wants to call sacraments not only the ceremonies instituted in the Gospel, but also other works to which a divine promise is attached, then there are many sacraments to be counted; as, "prayer" one would call a sacrament, for it is a Christian divine work, and divine promises are attached to it, since Christ says: "All things whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, that will he give you."

27 Thus affliction, cross-bearing, almsgiving may be called sacraments, for these works have attached to them glorious, divine promises, as the Lord says: "Pray, and it shall be given you. And it would be good, and not useless, to give such noble works such high and comforting titles, so that we might learn to see and esteem the comforting, divine promises, and thereby be stimulated to Christian walk and good fruits.

Thus the marriage state may also be called a sacrament, for it is an outward state which God has honored and adorned with His word and promise. It is also a sacred sign, as St. Paul indicates in Eph. 5, of spiritual union, since Christ is the Church or our Bridegroom, and we are His bride. But all these things I have said are not ceremonies instituted in the New Testament.

(29) If we call sacraments only the ceremonies instituted in the gospel and the outward signs given and attached to the divine promise of the forgiveness of sins, it will soon be noted which are the most prominent sacraments in the New Testament, as baptism, the Lord's Supper, and the Absolutio. For these outward signs are instituted in the Gospel and are used to indicate the promise of the Gospel. For this reason we received the sacrament of baptism, that we believe the divine promise that our sins are forgiven. Therefore we received the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, and hear the consolation

Word of absolution that we believe the divine; promise that our sin is forgiven.

(30) Confirmation and oelung were not considered necessary or required works by the ancient teachers themselves, and as they are now used, they are dead images of confirmation and oelung, which were common among the apostles.

Confirmatio was used by the apostles in this way: If anyone had been baptized and now had a fair understanding of the doctrine of Christ, he was interrogated and had to confess his faith. And if he confessed well and had good testimony, the apostle laid his hand on his head, prayed for him and gave him the gift of the Holy Spirit for a special work, such as healing diseases or speaking foreign languages, so that he could preach in other countries. This custom is now extinct.

32) But it would be desirable to arrange the confirmation in such a way that the young people were interrogated and made to confess the right faith, punished the indolent and careless; but to the disciplined, diligent and godly the priest laid his hands on their heads and prayed for them; this would not be unfruitful.

But the confirmation, which is now used by the papal bishops without interrogation 2c., is an abuse that is reprehensible and should be changed.

34) The present calling of the saints is to be rejected altogether; but it is a very old custom that the holy preachers, as Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Isaiah 2c., and after them the apostles, were preachers and physicians at the same time, and God gave his blessing and gift to their art, so that they helped many people wonderfully. For God wanted to give testimony to His preaching, He also wanted to give His servants an art, so that they would have access to many people. Thus Abraham was a physician, and because of this art he was required to preach to noble people; thus he had cause to preach with it.

This art and gift was renewed by the Lord Christ and given to the apostles; it remains in the true church of Christ, and it is right to pray for the sick. There is no doubt that many are helped by such prayer, as I know from many examples. But these are gifts of the true church of Christ, and the papal ointment should not be colored with them, which is an abuse to be punished and to be retracted.

I am very pleased that the ordination of priests is included in the number of sacraments.

But so that by such ordinatio one understands the calling to the ministry of preaching and the administration of the sacraments, and thus the ministry itself. For it is highly necessary and almost useful that the office of preaching in the church be held in high esteem, honorable and holy, and that the people be taught that God wants to give the Holy Spirit through hearing the sermon and reading the Word of God and the Holy Scriptures, so that no one seeks other revelation and enlightenment outside the office of preaching, as the Anabaptists claim.

The ministry of preaching is established by God's high command; God wants the gospel to be preached and heard diligently. He has also given a glorious promise of comfort to those who teach or hear the gospel, for St. Paul says: "The gospel is the power of God to all who believe in it.

38 It is also very necessary to know about the preaching ministry and profession that such a calling is based on God's word and command, and that God considers the pastors and preachers who are Christianly called to be his servants, as if he had called them from heaven with his own voice, wants to be with them, and to be pastor and teacher through them. This is a precious treasure among Christians; they know well that they should be grateful for it without ceasing, and help to promote, honor and preserve the ministry of preaching for the sake of the divine command.

(39) In this way it is useful to include the office of priests and ministers among the sacraments. For it is the highest, most sacred office, the highest, most excellent, most holy service in the whole church; therefore, those are not Christians who do not hold the priest and the chair of the church sacred as God's office and servant.

(40) But the adversaries speak of the sacrament of ordination or consecration in such a way that they do not remember the ministry of preaching with a single word. They want to think that through ordination or consecration the ministers are called to sacrifice in the mass for the living and the dead. They still invent this false doctrine and abomination, as if there would be no forgiveness of sins in the church if there were not, above the sacrifice on the cross, the daily sacrifice of the mass. They continue to teach impudent lies that the priests earn forgiveness of sins from others with such sacrifice.

41 These ugly blasphemous teachings have all flowed from the fact that some hypocrites and monks have had foolish thoughts that the New Testament must be like the Old Testament with its sacrifices and ceremonies. The priesthood and sacrifices in the New Testament, however, are much and often discussed elsewhere. That is enough about the number of sacraments.

From baptism.

42) That baptism is an outward sign and seal of the divine promise in the New Testament is indicated by these words of Christ, Marc. 16: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Therefore, when we are baptized, this promise is immediately written and painted on our bodies.

And because such outward signs also have their spiritual interpretation, holy baptism signifies repentance and forgiveness of sins through Christ, or, as St. Paul says, the new birth, and Christ, John 3, the new birth through water and the Holy Spirit. For that we are immersed in the water indicates that the old Adam and sin in us must be killed, which happens in the anguish when the conscience is frightened, sin feels God's judgment and wrath 2c. That we are drawn out of the water means that we now, washed and renewed by the water and Holy Spirit, await a new and eternal righteousness and life, which Christ has purchased for us.

44) Now the right custom of baptism is indicated by the two outward signs and the promise: "He who believes and is baptized will be saved"; item the words used in baptism: "I baptize you in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit", that is, by this outward sign I make a covenant with you and testify that you are reconciled to God and accepted by God, who is God the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. The Father accepts you for the sake of the Son, and promises you the Holy Spirit, through whom He will renew you, make you alive, comfort you and sanctify you. Thus, in the words are high, glorious, holy, comforting promises of God and the summa of the whole Gospel.

45 This is the right custom of holy baptism throughout our lives, so that we may be certain that God is reconciled to us and wants to be reconciled to us and forgive sin through Christ, and that he has made baptism a sign and seal of this covenant. For even if we fall into sin immediately afterward, the divine covenant remains firm for all who turn to it again with right faith, seek comfort there, and amend themselves again. Thus we will understand the fruit and power of baptism more and more, if we diligently consider the words of the comforting divine promise, exercise our faith in them, and thereby strengthen ourselves in all kinds of temptations, in fears of death, against the devil and sin.

046 And as circumcision was a sign for ever, that one should not be circumcised more than once: so he that is baptized once shall not be baptized again. And this for this reason, which is certainly right and constant: The other commandment teaches that one should not take God's name in vain, nor blaspheme the right custom. Now the rebaptizers reject the first baptism, saying that the name of God is useless, falsely and unjustly invoked and called over them; this is blaspheming the name of God. Therefore, rebaptism is a terrible, evil error and blasphemy of God's name. Moreover, the rebaptizers who have now gone astray in the world add much more error to it.

From the Baptism of John and the Apostles

Both of these baptisms were outward signs and testimonies of the New Testament. There is no difference between the baptism of John and that of the apostles, except that John's baptism points to the future Christ. The baptism of the apostles points to Christ, who is now coming and has been revealed. Both baptisms are the same ministry and require faith in the Savior Christ; and through faith both those baptized by John and those baptized by the apostles were sanctified and saved at the same time.

48 But when John says, "I baptize you with water unto repentance, but he that shall come after me shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and fire," he is not distinguishing the offices or ceremonies, but the persons of the ministers from the person of Christ, and is signifying that Christ is the Savior and the Lord himself, through whom baptism has divine efficacy and power, and who gives life, righteousness, the Holy Ghost, and eternal blessedness. 2c, and that he, John, is a servant to it, who alone administers the outward sign, the water, and preaches the word. This outward ministry of baptizing and preaching is the same in John and the apostles, and is equally powerful in those who believe the promise of Christ.

But it is true that after the resurrection of Christ there are more and clearer examples of the Holy Spirit being given to the baptized, as the stories of the apostles show in public.

From the young children baptism.

St. John commands and instructs with great seriousness and diligence that spirits should be tested to see if they are from God. And Christ sets this rule in Matthew 7: "By their fruits you shall know them." But it is a certain indication of a Heretic's false ungodly doctrine. Therefore, we should pay close and diligent attention to the rebaptizers, who reject the baptism of young children, to perceive such signs, so that they can be known.

But in the Anabaptist doctrine one finds all kinds of ugly, horrible errors, lies and blasphemies. Lies and blasphemy. For they teach wrongly not only about baptism, but about many other highly important articles of the whole Christian doctrine; they say that Christians cannot be in regiments, princes or lords, 2c., that they should have nothing of their own, but everything in common, that they should not take oaths, 2c., and thus teach seditiously against the proper regiments.

From this and the like it is clear that they do not know what Christian righteousness or life is; they do not know anything about the knowledge of Christ or faith; they want to think that Christianity is only an outward monasticism. In addition, the new Anabaptists at Münster teach even more ugly and insolently that one married person may leave the other if he does not want to accept the sect 2c. Above this, they are possessed by the devil, chasing away and daring to destroy the proper authorities. They invent and teach unashamedly that before the last day there will be such a kingdom of Christ on earth, in which only the saints will rule and destroy and subdue all the ungodly 2c.

These are vile errors, seditious doctrine, Jewish fables, and the true stains and black marks of the devil, by which such fanatics can be known and tested. Because the Anabaptists publicly teach against the Scriptures, they are to be condemned and to flee.

54 Also, in their articles, when they forbid the baptism of young children, there is much more terrible, abominable devilish doctrine and error against the whole of Holy Scripture. As when they say and teach that there is no original sin. This is once again a mark of the devil, who is a liar and a murderer, that they do not know about the highest, most necessary articles of Christian doctrine and the holy scriptures. They neither know what sin or righteousness is, but think that only the gross and outward vices are sin.

(55) Therefore, if it is certain that the Anabaptists teach from an evil spirit, the devil, their teaching should not move us to depart from this common teaching of the Christian church, that young children should be baptized, and that this baptism is Christian.

But in order that it may be known that infant baptism was also in the first and pure church, I will draw together some testimonies from the ancients.

57 Origen, in the 6th chapter to the Romans, writes: "Therefore the church received this teaching from the apostles, that even young children should be baptized. For they who had been commanded the mysteries of divine things knew well that in all men there was original sin and inherent pestilence, which must be washed away by water and the Spirit." These are the words of Origen, as he confesses and teaches both that young children should be baptized, and that through baptism they receive forgiveness of sins, that is, that they are reconciled to God 2c.

58 Cyprian writes that in the Concilio this doctrine is condemned, since some prescribe that children should not be baptized before the eighth day, since the Concilium concludes that they should be baptized and not expected before the certain time of the eighth day.

59 Augustine on Baptism, against the Donatists, lib. 4, gives a fine clear word about infant baptism (as he says): "This article of infant baptism, which the whole church holds, is not instituted in the Conciliis, and yet is always held in the churches. Therefore, it is rightly believed that this was started by the apostles themselves and is customary"; item further: "What the sacrament of baptism does to the young children, we can truly take from the circumcision, which was commanded by God to the former people".

(60) These and similar sayings clearly show that the whole Christian church has considered the baptism of young children to be Christian and right from the beginning. This should therefore be diligently remembered, for some deceivers want to deceive the unintelligent, as if the old fathers taught against infant baptism, when they are doing them great injustice. All God-fearing people should also take great care to remember that this is an annual practice, and no one should dare to accept a doctrine that has no evidence in the first old Christian church.

(61) We will also give more reasons from the Scriptures for baptizing young children. My first reason is this:

(62) It is certain that the kingdom of God, the gospel, and the promise of grace also pertain to children; for it is certain that outside the church (since there is neither word nor sacrament) there is neither salvation nor forgiveness of sins. Therefore we must also incorporate the children into the church and give them the outward sign, which indicates that the forgiveness of sins and the promise also apply to them. 1)

The first, that the promise and the kingdom of God also pertain to the children, is certain, for Christ Himself says in Marc. 10: "Such is the kingdom of heaven"; item: "It is not the will of My Father who is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

(64) These sayings cannot be made pale by the fictitious gloss, as if no promise were made to children, but as if Christ alone admonishes us to become like children in simplicity. The gloss is strange, sought after and nothing, and it is certain that Christ speaks of children and little ones, who are small in age, infants or the like. And Christ says: "Their angels always see the face of my Father who is in heaven." Therefore, He indicates that they please God and are protected by the angels. And even more clearly Christ says, "It is not the will of GOD that any of these little ones should perish."

These sayings clearly give the church the comfort that is to be held dear and cherished by us, so that the children may be saved. And the comforting sayings should be diligently instilled in the youth, so that they keep them throughout their lives and learn to comfort themselves with the divine promise.

66. Infant baptism also confirms the law of circumcision, since God the Lord says, "I will be their God. God indicates that He will be gracious to those whom He calls circumcised, and commands the young children to be circumcised. No one will be able to deny that the young children should not be excluded from the Gospel and from God's kingdom.

Secondly, it is also certain that outside the church, where there is no gospel, no sacrament, no true invocation of God, there is no forgiveness of sins, grace or blessedness, as there is among Turks, Jews, and pagans. For God alone wants to give us such gifts in His Church and through His Word and Sacrament. Therefore he says: "Whoever is not born by water and the Holy Spirit cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." This is a clear speech, which indicates that apart from the Church, since there are no sacraments, indeed, persecution of the sacraments, God does not give beatitude.

68) In Ephesians 5, St. Paul teaches what the church is, namely a people purified by God's word and baptism, from which it is clear that there is no church apart from God's word and baptism.

69 And this is taught even more clearly in St. Peter's Apostle 4: "There is no other name given to men, that they may be saved, but the name of Jesus Christ. 4: "There is no other name given to men, that they should be saved, but the name of Jesus Christ. Therefore is certain that there is no blessedness apart from the church, that is, in those over whom the name of Christ is not invoked.

1) So put by us instead of "angehöre" in the Wittenberg, because this word "angeht" is repeated immediately in the following paragraph, but "sie angehöre" is linguistically wrong.

70 From all this it follows that infants should and must be baptized, for it is certain that the promise of eternal life belongs to the infants, and yet it does not belong to anyone apart from the church, since there is no salvation. It follows that children must be incorporated into the church through baptism and made members of the church. Whoever diligently considers this reason will find that it is solid and constant.

The other argument is very strong and clear. Over whom the name of Christ is not invoked, and are not marked with any sacrament, they are certainly not God's church; now some children must be a part of the church, therefore it is certain that over them the name of Christ must be invoked, and must be baptized.

(72) How wicked the Anabaptists are, that they want to make a part of the church a people, over whom the name of Christ is not called, when this saying is unchangeable: "There is no other name by which one is saved, but the name of Jesus Christ"; over whom this is not called, he is not a member of the church of God. Now this invocation and blessing takes place in baptism, which is why it is terrible that the devil exercises such courage, and will not let the name of Christ be invoked over the little children and bless them through baptism.

The third argument is that children need forgiveness of sins, because they bring with them the great misery of human weakness and innate disobedience. Now God has commanded the Church to forgive sin and to distribute such forgiveness through the sacraments. From this it follows that one also owes it to the children to communicate forgiveness through baptism,

The fourth argument: To whom the promise belongs, the sign certainly belongs. As, to whom the sold good belongs, to him also belongs the letter about it. Now it is quite certain and public that the promise of eternal life and the merit of Christ's death belong to the children; it follows that the sign also belongs to the children,

The Lord Christ, the Son of God, died not only for the elderly, but also for children. Since this great salvation belongs to the children, and Christ wants it to be distributed through the gospel and the sacraments, it is certain that the sign also belongs to the children.

76. the lying and poisonous devil in the

The Anabaptists pretend that there is no sin in the children, as if the Son of God had not become a sacrifice for the children as well. To prevent such a murderous error, one should not withdraw the sign of Christ's grace from the children.

The fifth: Baptism is clearly commanded to all without distinction: "Whosoever is not born again of water and the Spirit cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. This is a saying that concerns all, as the right, certain, natural understanding of this speech shows. From this it follows that the children should and must be baptized, and is contempt of baptism publicly against this saying, which has now been drawn from St. John.

78. and let the parents diligently consider the causes mentioned to awaken their faith themselves, namely, that they were also accepted by God through baptism, that God promised and pledged to them in their baptism that He, the eternal Father of the Mediator of Christ, would be gracious to you, make you blessed for the sake of His Son JEsu Christ, who also then accepted you, and would give you His Holy Spirit to work in you new righteousness and eternal life.

79. And if the parents thus consider their own baptism, they should also value the baptism of children, thanking God that He thereby accepts the children into His church and grace. And at the command of Christ, when He said: "Let the children come to Me, for such is the Kingdom of Heaven," they should bring their young children before the Lord Christ for baptism, so that they may be incorporated into the Church, and God accept them, give them forgiveness of original sin, and purify them.

And in this faith that God will surely accept the children, the parents should also call upon God over the children, command them to God with right earnest prayer, and then, when they learn to speak, draw and accustom them to God's and the Lord's invocation, and thus to the teaching of the Gospel for and for.

(81) But against this Christian report and consolation, the Anabaptists cry out: first, where there is no faith, baptism is not useful; now the infants who have not yet heard the teaching have no faith, therefore baptism is not useful to them.

82. Answer: The Holy Spirit is given to the children through baptism and in baptism, who works in them according to their measure, as he also worked in Johanne in the body of Elizabeth. And although there is a difference between the old and the young, that the old notice their works, yet the Holy Spirit's works in the old and the young are an inclination towards God.

That God works in the young, and only in those who are brought before Him and incorporated into the Church through baptism, is not a fictitious delusion, but it is certain for this reason: the children in the Church will be saved, as Christ speaks in clear words: "It is not the Father's will that any of these children should perish. Item: "Such is the kingdom of heaven," that is, forgiveness of sins, grace, the working of the Holy Spirit, new righteousness, and eternal life, for all these are to be summed up in this word "kingdom of heaven."

84. and it is quite certain that without divine action no man can attain eternal life, as John 3. says: "Whoever is not born again of water and the Spirit cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. Item Rom. 8: "Those who are led by the Spirit of God are children of God." Item 1 Cor. 15: "The flesh and blood that is corrupt and in death cannot have eternity," but must be regenerated through the Lord Christ, who is life and light, as John says.

And such grace and effect is not in the children of the Gentiles, Jews and Turks, because there is persecution of God and Christ, therefore God's name is not called upon them. Therefore in these words: "Let the children come to me, for such is the kingdom of heaven", there are two parts. Christ speaks before: one should let the children come to him. After that he adds: such, that is, those who are brought to Christ, is the kingdom of heaven; not those who persecute and despise God and his Son Christ, gospel and baptism.

Since it is certain that the children in the church will be saved, it certainly follows that they should be baptized and that God then accepts them and gives them the Holy Spirit, who works in them according to their measure, as also expressed in the Gospel that the Holy Spirit is given when one receives baptism, John 3, Titus 3, where baptism is clearly called "a bath of new birth through the Holy Spirit.

Therefore, baptized children are a large part of true Christianity and truly God's people, church and saints, which the elders should diligently consider to instruct, govern and preserve the children with greater earnestness, lest they be torn away from God, who has previously accepted them in baptism, by the devil's cunning, by their own imprudence, or by evil company.

88 Secondly, the Anabaptists cry out that nothing should be done without orders. Now you will find no

They say that because of the command in the Gospel about infant baptism, infants should not be baptized, 89 Answer: It is true that one should do nothing without a command. But that it is commanded to baptize all those who belong to the kingdom of Christ is quite public John 3: "Whosoever is not born again of water and the Spirit cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven. These words are a commandment, since no one is to be excluded, but it concerns all, young and old; as all those of understanding know that such speeches, so negative, are very strong.

90. This is also true: Everything that follows from God's word and command in a right and constant sequence is also called God's word and command. Now I have indicated above that it certainly follows from God's word that one should and must baptize children; for since it is certain that grace and eternal life are also promised to the children, it follows irrefutably that they must be incorporated into the church through baptism. For this blessing, grace and promise, is not apart from the Church of God, is not of the Jewish or Turkish children, or of other peoples who despise or persecute God and His Son Jesus Christ.

Here also the other arguments may be recovered, which I set above. From this it also follows that one should communicate baptism to the children. Because they need forgiveness of sins, the church should give them forgiveness through baptism. 2c. But there is this lie in the Anabaptists, that they think original sin is nothing, which is a great error, as is said elsewhere.

Third, the Anabaptists cry out that baptism is a covenant in which one commits oneself to the death of evil desires and to a strict life and patience in suffering. But this the children do not yet understand and do. Therefore, they say, baptism is not useful for children.

93 Answer. This 1) of the Anabaptists' speech is vain blindness, for baptism is first and foremost a testimony of divine grace towards us and a covenant, through which God promises us His grace; this is to be seen first. Therefore, when the minister says: "I baptize you in the name of God the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit", it has this meaning: I testify with this work by command of God that God, the eternal Father, forgives your sin for the sake of His Son, Jesus Christ, who also accepts you, and wants to start a new light and righteousness and eternal life in you through His Holy Spirit, who also accepts you. This is what the words in baptism, and are not to be understood thus: I baptize you on your austere life, on your patience 2c.

1) Here, like Walch, we have omitted "and".

94 I ask that the God-fearing diligently consider all these things, which are indicated for the protection of infant baptism, in order to strengthen themselves against the manifold errors of the Anabaptists. Also I ask God, the eternal Father of our Savior Jesus Christ, that he may keep the hearts of all God-fearing people, so that they do not fall into Anabaptism or other errors. He also wants to eradicate all the aversions that miserably oppress his poor church, which was redeemed by the blood of our Savior Jesus Christ, and graciously enlighten, teach and govern us, amen.

43 Nicolaus Amsdorf's final speeches against the Anabaptists and Sacramentarians. *)

First half 1535.

Nicolaus Amsdorf to the reader.

My dear friends, I have let these sayings go out in German, for the reason that the enthusiasm from Münster is coming nearer and nearer to us every day; so that we may now be warned and know how to guard against them, I have wanted to do this little teaching to the best of my ability, for the benefit of pious hearts, which would gladly do right and believe if they knew it.

(2) Those of Münster also boast that if they err, they will let themselves be guided by God's word; whether they are serious and mean this from the heart, we will now see; for I have ever clearly shown from God's word, among other things, that the children are capable of the blessing that baptism gives, for which reason one should not nor can deny them baptism.

(3) And though they would not let themselves be wise, yet I believe that there will be some among them who are ignorantly deceived, who will be reformed and converted by it, or at least will preserve ours, so that they will not fall into their infatuation.

For if one wants to ward off the misfortune that is false doctrine, one must do it with God's word; by force of the sword one will accomplish little, for the sword may well compel the mouth and the tongue to speak and confess what the princes and bishops want, but no force can compel the heart, only God's word must move and persuade it to abandon error and believe rightly.

For this reason, God's word in the Gospel is compared to a fish net that sifts people,

The more one resists with the sword, the more it breaks down and spreads further. False doctrine takes hold of the heart in such a way, because the heart clings to it and believes that it is the right doctrine, that man cannot be resisted or forbidden by fire or sword, as we see in the poor people, the Anabaptists and Sacramentarians, Jews and Turks, who all let themselves be strangled and burned for the sake of their doctrine.

Against the Anabaptists in Münster and elsewhere.

Nicolaus von Amsdorf.

1. the baptism of Christ is nothing else than that one dips a person into water, soaks him with water, or washes him with water in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit by Christ's command.

2 And even if the baptized did not believe, it would still be a true baptism of Christ.

3. for the manner, nature and essence of baptism is based on Christ's word, command and order, not on the faith of the baptized.

(4) If baptism were founded and built on the faith of the baptized, no one would be sure whether he had been baptized correctly (even if it is an age),

5 Because the baptizer cannot be sure whether the baptized person has a true faith or not.

6 Similarly, baptism is not built or based on the faith of the baptizer.

*This writing appeared in 1535 at Magdeburg in quarto. Then it is found in the Wittenberg edition (1551), vol. II, p. 395d; after that we give the text. As it seems from the 14th and the 61st thesis, the Anabaptists were still at work in Münster; therefore, this writing must be placed in the first half of the year 1535.

7 Otherwise no one would know if he was baptized correctly, because he cannot know if his baptizer believed correctly.

8 Therefore, if a man is baptized by a sinner or a sinner's wife, he is truly baptized and shall not be baptized again.

9. it is enough that the Baptist is called to the ministry and service of Christ.

10 This same ministry, and not his faith, gives him authority and power to baptize whoever comes to him.

(11) Likewise, necessity makes every woman who is considered a Christian a baptizer of Christ.

(12) Therefore it is foolish and ungodly that the Anabaptists say that a man must be baptized one more time.

(13) In this way they make baptism completely uncertain, so that neither the baptizer nor the baptized can know whether baptism is right, even if one is baptized four times.

14 Even those at Münster cannot know, and Herrmannus Rottmann 1) himself cannot know, who was baptized correctly.

(15) For (this I know for certain) they cannot know who believes rightly or who does not believe.

(16) They are always uncertain of the matter, and must believe the words of the baptized.

(17) Now let no man be believed nor trusted, as it is written, Cursed be he that believeth a man.

18) Therefore, baptism should not be based on the 2) faith of the baptized.

19 But much less on his confession, lest the Baptist be deceived.

20. but on 3) Christ's word, commandment and order, one should baptize and command the faith of the baptized to God.

"The words of Christ do not lie or deceive us, but make us sure and certain that baptism is right, and that the baptized person is all right.

22 But men lie and deceive and can miss, therefore they only make the Baptist uncertain.

when he places and builds baptism on the word and confession of men.

(23) It follows irrefutably that baptism is right in itself, even without the faith of the baptizer and the baptized.

(24) But faith is necessary for the baptized, so that baptism may work its own work in him by its power.

25 For without faith, baptism cannot come to its work and effect.

26 Although it has its power from God's order and command, not from the faith of the baptized.

27 But it is prevented by the unbelief of the baptized, so that it cannot use its power in it.

(28) The work of baptism is to cleanse the heart from all sins.

(29) It cannot do this because of the faith of the one who is baptized.

(30) But to the aged, pretending to believe, she cannot forgive their sin.

(31) Nevertheless they are truly baptized, and shall not be baptized again, neither can they,

32 Although baptism cannot work in them because of their unbelief.

Otherwise, the old people who did not believe in their baptism would have to be baptized again.

34 As you are now baptized much, not only at Münster and otherwise, without faith.

35 For it is not possible that in such a great multitude all should be rightly believing.

(36) Even in the time of Christ, the smallest number and the least part have always been believers.

37 Therefore, if the Anabaptists at Münster and elsewhere were right, they would have to baptize the majority again for the third and fourth time.

(38) It is not because they can be spiritual and speak much of Christ; the devil can also be spiritual and preach much of Christ, and much better than those at Münster.

(39) From this it follows that no one should be baptized again, but if anyone did not believe correctly in his baptism, he still believes.

(40) Such a one must not be led back to the water, but to the word, to preaching, that he may believe.

41 Thus baptism comes into its own and does its work, namely the forgiveness of sin, even though it has already taken place.

Baptism has its effect from the faith of the baptized, 43. because the baptized person after his baptism

1) "Rottmann", written by Amsdorf instead of: Rothmann. This refers to the preacher at Münster, M. Bernhard Rothmann. Compare the note to the superscription of No. 38 in this volume. - It seems to us that in this thesis instead of: "who is not baptized" should be read: "who is rightly baptized"; therefore we have put this.

2) "Baptized" put by us instead: Baptist.

3) Wittenberger: "from". We have taken the reading "on" from the old edition of Walch, because it seems to us to be the correct one after the 45th thesis.

If a man believes, the baptism that has taken place is useful and blessed for him.

(44) Therefore it is unjust, ungodly, to the great shame and dishonor of Christ and his household, that people should be rebaptized,

(45) Since baptism is founded and built on Christ's word, commandment and order.

46 From this it follows that children should not be baptized again when they grow old.

(47) Though they believed not, yet shall they not be baptized again.

It would be enough that they believed in their time, as is indicated above by the ancients.

(49) Now that we are sure and certain that the children have believed, there is no need to baptize them again.

5V. And even if they do not believe by hearing, like the ancients, they believe in another way, if God is well known.

51 For Christ says, "Such is the kingdom of heaven," which cannot be 1) anyone's but his who believes.

52 By the word that Christ himself speaks, he does not exclude the children, but means the same.

53. if the kingdom of heaven is of those who are like children, how much more is it of the children themselves.

54. as clearly follows in the text, Christ laid hands on them and blessed them, not outwardly in the body, as the priests are consecrated, but inwardly in spirit and conscience.

55. that they may be blessed truly in soul before God, not in hypocrisy before men.

(56) Therefore, since infants are capable of the blessing and benediction that baptism gives, why should they not be baptized?

57 If they are blessed and given by Christ, the kingdom of heaven is theirs.

(58) If the kingdom of heaven is theirs, they must certainly believe, for without faith no one can be a child of the kingdom of heaven.

59 If John believed in his mother's womb, why should the faith of our children be taken away, if Christ has brought them to him?

(60) From this it is certain that there is another way to believe than by hearing, as St. John believed.

(61) Therefore, if the children do not hear the word, it cannot take away their faith, no matter how wicked Rottmann may be.

(62) Therefore mate shall baptize the children, and shall not baptize again those that are baptized in any way.

63) One must not despise the word of Christ, "Let the children come to me," as those at Münster do.

64 It is said: "Let them come to me", not only bodily, since he lived on earth, but spiritually to his sacrament.

This indicates the work of Christ in blessing and benedicting them with the same blessing that baptism gives.

(66) There is no other blessing of Christ but this, that He may cleanse us from sins, and make us children of the kingdom.

67 Therefore, the words and history of Christ conclude powerfully that infants should be baptized.

68 For he says, "Let them come to me," and blesses them, which he also does by his holy baptism.

69. What more abominable thing could be said and devised against God and His mercy than to reject the eaves, done from His word, commandment and command? .

(70) And this for no other cause, but that the baptized man hath not had a right faith.

71. as if God's work and sacrament were built and founded on human faith.

O of the Sacrament, which is built on sand, that is, on man's doing!

The same would be as certain as the reason, which is quite uncertain, that no one would know when we would have Sacrament or not.

Man's unbelief and wickedness does not cancel God's work and sacrament based on His immovably firm Word.

75 Yes, the abuse rather confirms it, because one sins against it.

(76) Just as with unbelievers the gospel remains a true gospel and does not become false or unjust because of their unbelief:

Thus, baptism truly remains a true baptism and does not become false or unjust because of the unbelief of the baptized.

How would God have His order, commandment and commandment be broken or changed for the sake of our wickedness?

Thus, baptism is ever God's order and command, therefore it cannot be prevented by our wickedness.

(80) Although its power and effect are hindered by the unbelief of the baptized, it remains righteous and true in its nature and essence.

1) "niemand's" put by us instead of "nobody" in the Wittenberger.

(81) Therefore, even if no one on earth believed, every order of Christ remains firm and certain in itself.

82 Therefore, whoever has been baptized once should not be baptized again in any way.

Against the Sacramentirans.

1. spirit and letter, as the enthusiasts speak of it, is one thing, but not as St. Paul speaks of it.

2 For as St. Paul writes of them, they are very far from each other.

We call the letter the sense of the holy scripture, so the letter gives.

4. but the spirit is the sense which the Holy Spirit wants to have in his letter.

5 And the meaning given by the letter is the meaning of the Holy Spirit.

6. and what the Holy Spirit wants, the letter brings.

7 And so the letter is truly the spiritual sense.

8 Now this is the meaning of the Holy Spirit, which the Spirit has given us through the Scriptures in the letter, 9 That we may be sure and certain of what the Holy Spirit wants us to base our faith on.

(10) For if the spiritual sense were a different sense than the letter gives, no one could be sure and certain what God wanted in His Scripture.

So no one would know for sure whom or what to believe.

12. each one would want to make a special one for him, and to conceive and seek a spiritual meaning.

13) As Zwinglius and Oecolampadius did with the words "this is my body.

14 So that we may be sure of the Holy Spirit's meaning and mind, we must let the letter remain the spiritual meaning.

(15) But the sense in which the words are interpreted differently than they are is not the spiritual sense,

16. but is the right carnal sense, invented by human reason, which the Holy Spirit never thought of.

Such senses may be conceived and changed in many ways by many minds.

18) But the spiritual sense is a certain unchangeable sense, which cannot be changed.

19. just as the letter, steady and firm, should and must remain immovable.

20. for both are one mind, of the Holy Spirit, which is like one sound in all people around the world, so hear or read the words, 21. so that we have to fence against the heretics, fight, contend and overcome them again.

But the carnal senses, as figurae and tropi, do not respect, do not dispute, much less overcome the adversity.

(23) Nor is it a common sense among all men who hear or read the words.

How many are there in the world who could have taken Zwingel's interpretation or Oecolampadius' figure from these words "this is my body" if they had heard or read them ten times?

(25) But the sense of the Holy Spirit, if the letter gives it, can be understood and heard by anyone who hears or reads the words, if he knows the language otherwise.

(26) Therefore the letter should and must be taught and preached, and with it alone lay the foundation of faith.

For this reason, Sebastian Franks is a crude and unlearned fellow, since he writes in his Chronica: Luther teaches the letter and not the spiritual sense in the words "this is my body.

But we say that Luther teaches the right spiritual sense in the words "this is my body".

29 And Zwinglius and Oecolampadius teach the carnal sense in that they write and teach: This is the figure of my body, or: This means my body.

30 For this sense the letter does not give, the Holy Spirit does not will, but has been conceived by human wisdom and carried into Scripture.

31) For this reason, that Christ speaks clearly and brightly in his Scripture, without all figures and tropes, 2) so that everyone who hears the words "this is my body" can understand him.

32. when the Holy Spirit employs, 3) commands or commands something in His Scripture, He does not speak figuratively and tropice;

(33) But clearly and plainly, that even the laity (as the apostles were) may hear.

Even in the Old Testament, which is figura and umbra, he has never spoken in darkness and gloom, in parabolis and figuris, when he has commanded or ordered something.

1) In the Wittenberg: "Bastian Franü. Compare Tischreden, Cap. 37, § 99. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 1070.

2) Wittenberger: Tropis.

3) Wittenberger: "employed", which is probably erroneous.

(35) Then, in the New Testament, when Christ instituted a new sacrament and commanded and commanded us to keep it, should he speak figuratively or tropically?

That is why Sebastian Frank did not keep his promises in his chronicle.

37 He promises to write badly the Historia, as it happened, and not to fight anyone. 1) 38) From that time on he falls from Luther to Oecolampadio, as he has taken all the words from Oecolampadio, and says: Luther has caught the letter that makes heretics.

39 From this it follows that he smuggles, Oecolampadius teaches the spiritual sense that makes Christians.

40 O a fine theologian, who reveals his ignorance so clearly.

The letter never makes heretics, but the spiritual sense of the Franks always makes heretics.

Therefore, he would like to go to school with his Zwinglers and learn what is spirit or letter before they write against Luther.

43 But those at Strasbourg are cunning, do not want to confess their doctrine, but may write impudently, they keep it with Luther.

(44) If they lie publicly, as their book, which they ascribed to those at Munster, testifies publicly.

(45) If they are like Luther, why are the preachers in Strasbourg, and also the preachers in Frankfurt am Main, so hostile to Luther?

(46) Why are their people at odds with our people?

(47) Therefore, no matter how good the words of those at Strasbourg may be, they are not to be believed in any way.

48 Much less should they be accepted as brothers or Christians,

49. unless they confess and recant their error.

50. namely, that Oecolampadius and Zwinglius wrote wrongly and falsely about the Sacrament,

1) In the Wittenberg edition: "beföelhen"; in Walch's old edition "befehlen". Since we are not able to give a solution of the word "beföelhen", but Walch's interpretation does not seem to puff us, we have put our conjecture into the text.

51. that they have taught and preached wrongly, in that they preach: This means my body, or: This is the figure of my body.

Item 52: That they confess that they did violence and injustice to Luther, and that Luther wrote well, rightly, and Christianly.

(53) If they do this and ask for mercy, let us consider them dear brothers and Christians.

(54) For it is not fitting to receive sinners without repentance, much less to receive false teachers without repentance (that is, without correction and confession of sin) into the congregation of Christendom.

(55) If they were so badly received, everyone would say that we came to them and accepted their error.

(56) Thus we denied our doctrine and condemned ourselves.

(57) Therefore let them make such confessions that God and His Word may have glory, so that everyone may say that they have come to the truth and have forsaken their error.

58 Since Paul says, "The letter killeth, but the Spirit quickeneth," he does not speak of the spiritual sense, hoc est, de tropis, allegoriis et figuris.

The same spiritual, even carnal, senses kill as well as the letter.

60. but speaks of the Spirit who gives life to the letter and renews man,

61. who pours grace and faith into the heart and purifies it, making man a new creature,

62. who makes the evil tree a good tree, that it may bear good fruit.

The same Spirit makes God's Word, the letter, to be spirit and life through faith.

64 But he that believeth not the letter, though he be of the mind of the Holy Ghost, he helpeth not, but killeth or choketh.

Therefore, spirit and letter are one thing, as the Zwinglians speak of the spirit, but not as St. Paul speaks of it.

66. and the one thing, God's Word, is the letter, so kill if you do not believe in it.

67, And is also the spirit, so alive made who believes it from the heart.

44 Phil. Melanchthon's concern that secular authorities were guilty of resisting the Anabaptists with corporal punishment.)

Anno 1536.

Whether Christian princes are guilty of resisting the Anabaptist unchristian sect with corporal punishment and with the sword?

First of all, it should be noted that this question does not refer to the office of preachers, for preachers and ministers of the gospel do not wield the sword. Therefore they are not to exercise bodily authority, but only to fight against error with right teaching and preaching. But if they take up another office and want to wield the sword, as Münzer did and as happened at Münster, this is unlawful and seditious. But here the question is from the secular authorities, whether they are guilty to defend and punish the Anabaptists against unrighteous teachings and the like with bodily force.

Secondly, before the punishment is inflicted, the deceived people should first receive clear Christian instruction and admonition that they want to renounce their error. If they do so, it is Christian to show them mercy. But if they are stubborn and do not want to renounce it, punishment is necessary.

3) Thirdly, this is public, that the authorities are obliged to resist sedition and the destruction of the civil government, and to punish seditious with the sword, as Paul says: "Whoever does evil against the authorities shall be punished."

4 Now the Anabaptists have two articles. Some of them are especially concerned with the outward physical government, namely, that Christians should not have the office of the sword; item, Christians should have no authority except the ministers of the gospel; item, Christians should not swear; item, Christians should not have property; item, Christians should leave their wives if they do not want to accept rebaptism.

These and similar articles are commonly found among all rebaptizers. Now it is public that these articles are without means a destruction of the outward bodily rule, authority, oath duty, ownership of goods, marital status 2c. For if these articles and doctrines are absolutely in common should go, what destruction, murder and robbery would follow!

Therefore, the authorities are undoubtedly obligated to punish these articles as seditious. And shall punish the obstinate, whether Anabaptists or others, who hold such articles, one or more, with bodily force, and according to the circumstances also with the sword; for these articles are not only spiritual things, but are without means and in themselves a destruction of the bodily regiments.

7 And it is not to be respected that the Anabaptists, on the other hand, say: We do not want to do anyone. It is protestatio contraria facto, tearing up the regiment, and saying, we will not do anything to anyone; for if their doctrine should prevail, then authority, oath, property 2c. would be abolished.

Since the Holy Scripture clearly teaches that the articles of the Anabaptists are unjust and devilish, and it is clear and public that they are without means of destroying secular regimes, there is no doubt that the authorities are obliged to prevent such false and seditious teachings and, according to the power of their office, to mitigate the punishment or make it more severe, as they see fit.

(9) That it should be said against this, that the authorities cannot give faith to any man, therefore they ought not to punish any man for faith's sake: to this there are many more constant answers; but we will answer this only. The authorities do not punish on account of the opinion in the heart, but on account of outward false speech and teaching, by which others are also deceived. Therefore, as the authorities are obliged to punish other seditious speech and doctrine, by which sedition is really aroused, so they are also obliged to punish this seditious speech and doctrine, as by it people are really moved to cause destruction, as much as is in them, because they want it to be no authority, no oath, no property.

(10) And though with hypocrisy they color and excuse some of these articles, yet this is in the bottom of their opinion; for our mind is *) This writing is found in the Wittenberg Allsgabe (1551), vol. II, p. 382 b and is marked there with the year 1536. After that we reproduce the text.

Nor should the Anabaptists be driven by subtle questions, but one should look for and notice the right reason in their teaching and speak to the same. In doing so, one should not be deceived even by the devil's hypocrisy. Some can adorn themselves a little, but in the bottom of it they are found to be full of reported errors, and that their seeming holiness is only hypocrisy and a devilish specter. For Paul clearly teaches that those are of the devil who hold such erroneous articles of bodily government and pretend them to be new holiness. Therefore, let not the Christian authorities be frightened by the apparent and hypocritical holiness or patience of such spirits, but look at the erroneous articles that are witnesses in the stiff-necked that it is a devilish sect.

(11) That is enough of the seditious articles, for it is not difficult to understand that in these articles it is the duty of the authorities to use their office, to maintain the regiment.

12 Those at Münster have also held that there must be a physical kingdom before the last day, in which there are all saints, 2c., item, have taken many wives; such errors are seditious and should be fought with seriousness.

13 Secondly, the Anabaptists have articles concerning spiritual matters, such as infant baptism, original sin, enlightenment apart from and against the Word of God. Some, such as those at Münster, have also claimed that Christ did not take His body from Mary's body; item, that there is no forgiveness after mortal sin 2c.

14.¹) Of such spiritual articles, this is also our answer: Just as the secular authorities are obligated to prevent and punish public blasphemies, blasphemies and perjuries, so they are also obligated to prevent and punish public false teaching, unrighteous worship and heresies in their territory and in persons over whom they have jurisdiction. And God gives this in the other commandment, saying: "Whoever dishonors the name of God shall not go unpunished. Everyone is obliged, according to his position and office, to prevent and punish blasphemy. And by virtue of this commandment, princes and authorities have the power and command to put away unrighteous worship and to establish righteous doctrine and righteous worship. This commandment also teaches them to prevent public false teaching and to punish the obstinate,

The text 3 Mos. 24. also serves this purpose: "Whoever blasphemes God shall be put to death."

(15) But the authorities must first be constantly and properly instructed, so that they may be sure and do no one wrong. For it is not right to judge by custom alone, contrary to God's word and contrary to the ancient and pure church's understanding and teaching. Custom is a great tyrant, therefore one must seek cause from God's word and the ancient pure church's understanding. For one should not accept any doctrine that does not bear witness to the old pure church, because it is easy to understand that the old church had to have all the articles of faith, namely everything that is necessary for salvation. Therefore, the Potestat 2) is obliged to let himself be thoroughly instructed from God's word and the teachings of the ancient church.

16 Now find some articles of the Anabaptists, where it is noticeable, for what disruption would follow if the children were not to be baptized? what would finally come of it, but a publicly pagan being?

Item 17: Infant baptism is so well established that Anabaptists have no just cause to overthrow it.

18) To say that children are not entitled to forgiveness of sins, and that original sin is nothing, are public and very harmful errors.

(19) Above this, the Anabaptists separate themselves from the church, even in those places where pure Christian doctrine exists and where abuses and idolatry have ceased, and set up their own ministry, church and assembly, which is also against God's command. For where the doctrine is right and idolatry is not practiced in the churches, all men are guilty before God that they remain in the proper, public ministry and do not establish any segregation. And whoever, in such a case, creates segregation and new ministries, is certainly doing evil to God.

(20) As the Donatists of old also made a rebaptism and a segregation, and had no Ursch, because only these, that there were priests and people in other churches, were not pious; they wanted to make a church that would be completely pure. We have heard this from some rebaptizers; when we asked them: "Why do they make segregation, even from those churches, since they could not punish the doctrine and worship?"

21 In this case, the law is made in Codice by Honorium and Theodosius, which says that Anabaptists are to be put to death; for Tren-

2) i.e. the one who has the power.

1) What Melanchthon said in the foregoing about the behavior of the authorities against rebellious doctrine and life is correct; but in the following he inverts the proper relationship of church and state by giving the latter the right to standardize the faith of the subjects.

The new ministers and the new government, but because of the evil customs of others, is certainly against God; and because it is very annoying and gives rise to eternal discord, the secular authorities should severely defend and punish it.

22 Some argue that secular authorities should not have anything to do with spiritual matters. This is much too broad. It is true: both offices, the preaching office and the secular government, are distinct. Nevertheless, both are to serve God's praise. Princes are not only to protect their subjects' goods and physical life, but the most noble office is to promote God's honor, to ward off blasphemy and idolatry. This is why the kings in the Old Testament, and not only the Jewish kings, but also the pagan converted kings, had those who were false prophets and idolaters killed.

Such examples belong to the office of the rulers, as Paul also teaches: "The law is good to punish blasphemers" 2c. The temporal authorities should not only serve man for his physical well-being, but first and foremost for the glory of God. For it is God's servant, whom it should recognize and praise with its office, Ps. 2: Et nunc reges intelligite.

(24) But that these words of the tares should be used against them, "Let both grow," is not spoken to worldly authorities, but to the preaching ministry, that they should not exercise bodily authority under the appearance of their office. From this it is clear that worldly authorities are obliged to prevent blasphemy, false teaching, heresies and to punish the followers in the body.

25 Where the Anabaptists have articles against the secular government, it is all the easier to judge. For there is no doubt that in the same case the obstinate shall be punished as rebellious. But if someone had articles only on spiritual matters, such as infant baptism, original sin, and unnecessary segregation, since these articles are also important; for it is not a small matter to throw the children out of Christianity and to put them in an uncertain state, even to bring them to damnation, item, to set up two nations among ourselves, baptized and unbaptized, since one sees and grasps that grossly false articles are in the Anabaptist sect: we conclude that in this case the stiff-necked may also be killed. If both worldly and spiritual errors are found in the Anabaptists and they do not desist from them, the judge is all the more certain and should punish them severely.

(26) But the measure shall always be kept, that first the people shall be instructed and admonished to desist from error. The judge should also make a distinction. Some are seduced out of simplicity, and are not defiant; they should not be hurried, nor should they be punished less severely than by reprimand or imprisonment, so that they do no harm. Some are beginners and defiant, so the judge should also show seriousness. And if they have erred in secular rule, nothing else may be done to them, except that they also go pregnant with a Münsterian rule; therefore he shall punish them as rebels.

(27) If we esteem the glory of God, we should also earnestly guard against the spread of blasphemy and harmful error.

(28) And for the instruction and confirmation of the conscience in us, this is to be well remembered: We are to notice at all times some clear articles in which the sect is grossly and markedly mistaken, knowing that the stiff-necked are blinded by the devil, and that it is certain that they have no good spirit, though they have a great appearance. For it is well known that the false prophets have sheep's clothing, that is, some good appearances, but by the fruits they shall be known. Now the most certain test is by these fruits, namely, if one stubbornly defends false articles against God's word clearly and publicly, then the judge can instruct his conscience and strengthen himself; for thus he knows that the sect is of the devil, therefore he knows that the sect must be resisted; although there may be wretched persons among them, who must be pitied; nor does he know that the seed must be resisted.

29 And in sum, intelligent examiners know how to keep this in mind, and they also understand well that under this rebaptism there is much abominable error; for it is basically a Manichaean sect and new monasticism; for outward unrighteousness and barbarism, not having one's own, not having rule: such things are their holiness, and it is to be understood that they are far from Christ and do not have the right understanding of Christ.

(30) Just as a prudent preacher teaches other estates their profession, as he teaches a housemother that bearing children is pleasing to God, (2c) so he should also teach the secular authorities how to serve God's glory and ward off public blasphemy. Anno 1536.

45 Martin Luther's warning to Lorenz Castner and his companions at Freiberg to beware of corner preachers*).

February 11, 1536.

1. grace and peace in Christ. Honorable, wise, dear friends! I must answer your writing briefly this time, because I am overwhelmed with business, and also weak 2c.

2. and is my faithful warning, beware of the high spirit that wants to enter you, and have this as a sign that he comes from himself and casts himself out, when God speaks in the prophet Jeremiah Cap. 23, 21: "I did not send them, and they ran; I commanded them nothing, nor did they preach or teach."

3 Therefore let seals and letters show you who sent him; or give signs from God that he was called by God or man. If not, let him be silent and shun him. For what God calls or sends, He does in a proper way, either by signs or by the testimony of men.

(4) Secondly, notice the devil in this, that he is afraid to go to preaching, even though Christ is preached purely; yet St. Paul rejoices that his gospel was preached even through hatred and envy in the judgment house at Rome, and allows Christians to go to idolatrous houses as guests, and yet they are not partakers of idols, as you may read in 1 Cor. 8 [and] 9. For such partaking is spiritual, and not bodily. Otherwise a Christian would not have to eat or drink with the wicked, nor talk or trade with them.

5. 2 Kings 5:18, 19. The prophet Elisha allows Naaman the prince to worship the right God in the temple of Rimmon of his king. And Jeremiah writes to the captives of Babylon that they were worshiping idols.

Servants should worship God, and not worship idols with the others. And how wise such a spirit is, he shows also herewith that he leads the saying, Christ is not here or there 2c. Is Christ not here and there (at Leisnig); how then is he at Freiberg in his house? Or does not Freiberg 1) also mean here and there, all places where you go or stay? Why then does he want to give the sacrament in his house, since his house must be called here?

And what a hopeful lie is that, if he calls it pilgrimage, when someone receives the sacrament or hears a sermon in Leisnig, or do we not know what pilgrimage means, 2) that the spirit must interpret it to us with new language? It would be good for the authorities to do this and to keep the spirit silent, because he would like to take you to Freiberg to a bath. Take good care of yourselves! By all means, do not let yourselves be persuaded that every householder should give the sacrament in his house. For I may teach at home, but I am not a public preacher, for I would be publicly appointed. St. Paul also speaks of the sacrament in 1 Cor. 11, 20 ff. that we should come together and not make each one his own supper.

7 Therefore it is not spoken: The sacrament is made by the word, therefore I may make it in the house. For it is not God's order and command; but he wills,

1) The words: "in his house - Freiberg" are missing in the editions.

2) "or - hot" is missing in the outputs.

*) This letter is found in the Wittenberg edition, vol. XII, p. 202; in the Jena edition (1568), vol. VI, p. 349; in the Altenburg edition, vol. VI, p. 907; in the Leipzig edition, vol. XXI, p. 87; in the Erlanger, vol. 55, p. 123 and in De Wette, vol. IV, p. 673. Further, in the "Trostschriften" published at Jena by Rödinger's heirs, pp. b ij ff, with good variants given to De Wette, vol. VI, p. 486, note 3, almost all of which we have included. Otherwise, we give the text of the letter according to the Jena edition. The postscript, which is found in a copy in Ooä. ekart. OotU. No. 401, is printed in Burkhardt's "Briefwechsel", p. 245 f., and included by us.

that the sacrament is administered by public ministry. For the sacrament is instituted for public confession, as Christ says, "Do this in remembrance of me," that is, as St. Paul says, "Proclaim and confess the death of Christ."

8 But how can I write everything so abstemiously and so briefly? I advise you to beware of this spirit, for it has often appeared to me, and has always been disgraced with its boasting.

(9) Go ye with the church, and let the priests do what they do. Where they preach the gospel, hear them; ask nothing of their doings, if they speak the word only, as Christ saith, Matt. 23:2, 3: "They sit in Moses' seat. What therefore they say, hear, and do; but after their doings do ye not."

10. what may the evil spirit say, if all that is not God's word, which the papists have, where then did we get the baptism and the whole Bible? or shall we then make a new Bible by this spirit? The Jews have the Bible, and we all got it from the Jews, so I hear if I heard a Jew read the prophets, it would not have to be called the prophets. Why then does St. Paul, Apost. 13, in the Jewish school at Antioch? But I cannot have more time now. Hiemit GOtt commanded, Amen. Friday after Dorothea, 1536.

D. Mari. Luther.

[Postscript.]

Tell also the other good friends, so Magistri Antonii 1) half of Leisnig wrote to me, that I heard such their heart almost gladly, and of my fortune I will gladly do the best, but they also wanted to help advise how it should be done. The good man works very hard and faithfully; but such a great disagreement has arisen between him and the parish priest there that I have no other advice to find but that he be taken from there, in addition to the fact that he also has little pay there. But this should not prevent a time when the priest and he could serve God and the souls in love and unity, so that the trouble would stop. The priest wants to be right and is not easily repudiated. So I also know and know well Magistrum Antonium that such trouble and discord hurts me, and I do not know how to advise him without divorce. Now ask both of you, as I have done, that the parish priest will not allow himself to be challenged and find a good means even in this, as he thinks that agreement can be reached between the two. For it is truly no good, lind evil mouths get cause to speak, which is not good. Hereby commanded by God. On Friday after Dorothea, Anno in 1536.

1) M. Antonius Lauterbach. Cf. Walch, old edition, vol. XXI, 1416, Luther's letter to the council of Leisnig.

46 D. Martin Luther's preface from Justus Menius' book "On the Spirit of the Anabaptists". *)

Anno 1544.

It is a proverb: The world wants to be deceived. Such a saying is heard every day, especially in the church regime. So here it is: Even if the truth is not true so pure and bright is preached, and so mightily proved, that if a cow had sense, she could grasp or grope it: nor are men so darkened as to know it not only do not want to hear, but also like to and deliberately rage against it.

*The writing of Menius was published in 1544 at Wittenberg by Nickel Schirlentz and is included in its entirety, with Luther's preface, in the Wittenberg edition (1551), vol. II, p. 350b. The preface alone: in the Jena edition (1562), vol. VIII, p. 190; in the Altenburg, vol. VIII, p. 363; in the Leipzig, vol. XXI, p. 450 and in the Erlangen, vol. 63, p. 381. According to the latter, which is the original print, we give the text of the preface, comparing the Wittenberg and the Jena.

2 From this it can and must be noticed that human reason alone does not do this, but the evil spirit helps it and shows in this what great obedience it has in the world, because it rules this high, noble, fine creature so mightily where it wants, as St. Paul says Eph 2, 2: "The prince of this world works in the children of unbelief. Paul says Eph. 2, 2: "The prince of this world hath his work in the children of unbelief," and 2 Cor. 4, 4: "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, that they see not the bright light of the gospel of the glory of Christ."

Now in this booklet He Justi Menii of the Anabaptist heresy is so powerfully refuted, ohue what he and others have written before against it, that (as I said), if a cow had reason, it would have to say, it would be the truth, and could be nothing else. So it is pure German that one cannot say that it is not spoken clearly nor understandably enough, just as they and the sacrament celebrators speak German so shamefully that not only their theology, but also their speech cannot be understood well. For God has ordained it in our time that the devil must not speak good German, as Carlstadt and Zwingel had to speak, so that it was great work for me to understand their speech.

(4) And it is the truth that the Anabaptist and the fanatic spirits are one spirit. For even though they outwardly pretended not to be of one spirit, as Zwingel and his followers pretended to be enemies of the Anabaptists in certain articles, yet in baptism and sacrament there was entirely one spirit in both. For both of them taught the great art, namely, that in baptism badly

Water is bad, and in the sacrament is bad bread and wine.

And summa, as this booklet says, no error nor heresy is alone. Where the devil puts a foot, there he goes after with the whole body. He who allows baptism to be water must allow the sacrament to be bread and wine, and so on. When this original sin has happened, and this apple has been eaten, one must then adorn oneself with such fig leaves: How can water wash souls? How can bread and wine be Christ's body and blood? Do you not see that he is seated in heaven? How can a wicked man be prince or lord? How can a wicked woman be a holy man's wife?

(6) Well, we defend ourselves as much as we can, according to our command and office, and if our defense is not in vain, this also has a certain hope that such lying spirits must perish in the end, and the truth remain, as Isaiah says in chapter 40, v. 8. and Psalm I, 4. 5.: "The wicked do not remain, but are scattered like the chaff of the wind," as the examples of the heretics from the beginning of the church testify, also now the heretic of all heretics Aboml-natio in loco sancto; he also goes there, according to his hour. 2) Without having to have stiff-necked mobs in our time, which practice and plague us, as our forefathers were plagued by heretics in their time, and the prophets were plagued by false prophets in their time. For the world must and will be deceived, and the elect must be tried, tested and purified, all to God's praise and glory forever and ever, amen.

1) Wittenberg and Jena: "nothing". This is the only variant in the whole scripture.

2) This text is consistent in all editions. The sense is undoubtedly: The pope is now also gone, after the time set for him by God has passed. According to it perhaps would like to be read: "gehet" or "goes now".

47 D. Matt. Luther's short confession of the delicate Sacrament Against the Enthusiasts. *)

End of September 1544.

Grace and peace in the Lord.

My dear friend! That Schwenkfeld spreads my letter from time to time, and speaks ill of me along with his eutychners and sacrament abusers, I must therefore believe that you have just received the copy of the same letter and sent it to me. And it is dear to me that he spreads such a letter, to his honor and glory and to my unhappiness and shame. For that is why I did not want to seal it but leave it open, nor did I want to attribute it to him but to his messenger 1) nor to honor his name. For such a damned blasphemer shall not (whether God wills it) be worthy with me, that I should ascribe a letter to him, or speak with him, nor see him, nor hear him. It is just as much to me, if he or his cursed pack of the enthusiasts, Zwinger and the like, praise me or scold me, as if Jews, Turks, Pabst, or equal all devils peeled me or praised me.

For I, who now walk in the pit, will bring this testimony and this glory with me before the judgment seat of my dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that I have condemned and shunned the heretics and enemies of the sacrament, Carlstadt, Zwinger, Oecolampad, Stenkefeld, and their disciples at Zurich and where they are, with all seriousness, according to his command, Titus 3:10. 3, 10: "You shall avoid a heretic, if he is once or twice admonished, and know that such a one is perverse and sins, as he who is evil wants to be condemned."

They are often enough, also seriously enough admonished by me and many others, the books are in the day. And all of us still preach daily against their blasphemous and lying heresy, which they know well.

3) Therefore, it alienates me not a little and makes me think that Schwenkfeld has become so bold and audacious to approach me with writings and books, because he knows, or should know, that he is my unreconciled enemy: first, in this matter of the holy sacrament, which he has made into vain bread and wine in Silesia, deceived so many thousands of souls, for which he has not repented, but, as Solomon says [Prov. 2, 14]: exultat in rebus pessimis, as if he had done well, and yet thinks that Luther must be glad of his letters and books. For from this should probably arise a delusion 3) as if Luther were well at one with Schwenkfeld and the enthusiasts, and had revoked everything, taking and giving letters* and books to each other as good friends 2c.

(4) It is true that I have often been told before that the fanciers should boast that I was one with them, which I did not want to believe because no one wanted to write it publicly. But by this means faith shall come into my hands before I fail. It is true, fifteen years have passed since Zwinger and Oecolampad, and we some too, were in Marburg [1529].

2) "körrn" in the Wittenberg and Jena editions, probably as much as "dreist"; while "körre," which the Erlanger offers here, is as much as kirre, tame. Cf. Erlanger, vol. 22, p. 68.

3) Walch and the Erlangers: "such a delusion".

1) This letter (dated November 8, 1543) is in this volume No. 34.

*This writing appeared in the year 1544 at Wittenberg with Hans Luft; further in the same year without indication of the printing place. Similarly, in 1545, also without indication of place and printer. In the collections: Wittenberger (1551), vol. II, p. 255; Jenaer (1562), vol. VIII, p. 174; Altenburger, vol. VIII, p. 345; Leipziger, vol. XXI, p. 439 and in the Erlanger, vol. 32, p. 396. In the Erlanger edition, this writing is erroneously assigned to the year 1545, although all editions, including Mathesius, Luthers Leben, St. Louiser Ausgabe, p. 265, place it in the year 1544, yes, although the Erlangen edition itself had cited the two above-mentioned individual editions from the year 1544. We have taken the closer time determination from Köstlin, Martin Luther, vol. II, p. 593. We give the text according to the Jena edition, comparing the Wittenberg and Erlangen editions.

We came together and made up in many articles, which are completely Christian, as the printed note testifies; but in the article about the sacrament it got stuck, so that we should otherwise be good friends, so that the sharp writing against each other would rest, whether God would in time, through our prayer, also give unity of mind in this, and I had quite a bit of hope, because Zwingel and his gave up so many good articles, that in time some article would also be found. And so there was a silence between us with writing against each other for several years.

However, the Zwingel was miserably slain in the field by that part of the papists, and Oecolampad, much too weak to bear such an accident, also died of suffering. Which caused me such heartache myself two nights, 2) that I could easily have stayed, because I was hopeful of their recovery, and yet I had to grieve for their souls to the highest degree, because they, still immersed in error, 3) thus perished in sins.

But after Zwingel's death a booklet went out, which he is said to have made hard before his end, with the name: Christianae fidei expositio, ad Christianum regem etc. It was supposed to be an exception to all his previous books. And that it had to be his, the Zwingel's, gave the nature of his wild, wild speech, and his previous opinion. I was very frightened by this booklet, not for my sake, but for his. For since he may have written such things according to our agreement at Marburg, it is certain that he acted against us in Marburg with a false heart and mouth, and [I] would have to despair (as I still do) of his salvation, since he died in such a sense, regardless of the fact that his disciples and descendants made him a saint and martyr. Ah, Lord God, the saint and the martyr!

For in this booklet he not only remains an enemy of the holy sacrament, but also becomes a pagan altogether; so finely has he improved, according to my hope. You can notice that, among other words, he addresses the same king thus: You will see there in all kinds of company all holy, pious, wise, manly, honest people, the redeemed and redeemer, Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, Moses, Joshua, Gideon, Samuel, Pinhen, 5) Eliam, Elisäum, also Jesaiam, and the virgin, God's child-bearer, of whom he prophesied, David, Ezechiam, Josiam, the Baptist, Petrum, Paulum, Herculem, Theseum, Socratem, Aristidem, Antigonum, Nurnam, Camillum, Catones, Scipiones, and your ancestors all who died in faith 2c.

This is written in his booklet, which (as said) is supposed to be the most precious and best booklet, made hard before its end. Say now, whoever wants to be a Christian, what may one believe in baptism, sacrament, Christ, the Gospel, or the prophets and holy scriptures, if such godless pagans, Socrates, Aristides, yes, the abominable Numa, who first founded all idolatry in Rome through the revelation of the devil, as St. Augustine de civitate DEI writes, and Scipius, who was the first to be born in Rome. Augustinus de civitate DEI writes, and Scipio, the Epicurus, are blessed and holy, with the patriarchs, prophets and apostles in heaven, if they have known nothing of God, Scripture, Evangelio, Christo, baptism, Sacrament, or Christian faith? What else can such a writer, preacher and teacher believe about the Christian faith, but that it is equal to all faiths, and that everyone can be saved in his own faith, even an idolater and epicurean, than Numa and Scipio?

Because in this booklet Zwingel has not only fallen away from the Marburg treaty (yes, the same is not meant seriously), but has become much worse and even a pagan, and yet the enthusiasts, his companions, praise and honor such a booklet (in which there are also many more abominations), I have also abandoned all my hopes of their improvement, and have so completely disregarded them that I have also not wanted to oppose such a booklet.

1) In the editions: "bleib's"; this is the imperfectum, as is clear from 10.

2) "that" is missing in the Wittenberg and Jena, but is found in Walch and in the Erlanger.

3) In the Wittenberg and Jena editions: "verteufft", which we have resolved with "vertieft". Luther derives "baptism" from "deep". Erlanger: "verteift".

4) Thus the Wittenbergers and the Jenaers. Erlanger: had to.

5) i.e. Phinehas. 4 Mos. 25, 7. 13.

I pray for them even more, because I saw that all my previous writings and exhortations, as well as my Christian love and faithfulness, shown at Marburg, had to be so badly invested and so shamefully lost.

(10) Now, if anyone has heard or talked out of such a contract that I am in league with the enthusiasts and that we are one in this matter, I sincerely ask him for God's sake not to believe it. Then God protect me, as He has done until now, that I should knowingly cover up or 1) strengthen the very smallest article of the enthusiasts with my name. For even at Marburg we did not come to them in a single article, they came to us in all articles, without the Sacrament article (as the note printed indicates), which (as said) remained stuck on hope that it should also finally follow. But how this hope turned out, you have now heard. I would much rather, I say, let myself be torn or burned a hundred times, before I wanted to be of one mind or will with Stenkefeld, Zwingel, Carlstadt, Oecolampad, and whoever else they are, the tiresome enthusiasts, or approve of their teachings.

11) For I still think, it is also still written in their books, how exceedingly shameful they blasphemed us with our dear Lord and Savior, calling him a baked god, a broiled god, a weeping god, a breaded god 2c. They call us flesh-eaters, blood-drinkers, 2) Anthropophagos, Capernaites, Thyestas, 2c., since they knew that they were wilfully and exceedingly blaspheming the Lord and us and telling shameful lies about us; which was a sure sign that there could be no good spirit in them. We still let it all go in Marburg, in the hope that they would and would completely mend their ways. For they knew very well that we had never taught nor believed such things, without which they would have liked to make the illusion for their glory and for our disgrace before the mob, as if we were such mad, senseless, raving people, who had believed in Christ in the name of the Lord.

crament localiter, and eat them as a wolf eats a sheep, and drink blood as a cow drinks water. Well did they know (I say) that in this they called us flesh-eaters and blood-drinkers out of the devil's gear with obviously insolent lies; for the papists also never taught such things, as they also well knew, so that they also wanted to hurt us with the name papists, the holy, spiritual people.

12. For this is how it was taught under the papacy, as we also keep and still teach, as the true old Christian church has kept from 1500 years ago (for the pope neither founded nor found the sacrament, which the zealots must also testify themselves, as almost they want to make it papist), when you receive the bread from the altar, you do not tear an arm from the body of the Lord, or bite off his nose or a finger, but you receive the whole body of the Lord; the other also, if it follow thee, the same whole body, as the third, and a thousand after a thousand for and for. Likewise, when thou drinkest the cup or wine, thou drinkest not one drop of blood from his finger or foot, but drinkest all his blood, so also he that followeth thee unto a thousand times a thousand, as Christ's words plainly are, "Take, eat, this is my body." He does not say, Petre, you eat my finger; Andrea, you eat my nose; John, you eat my ears 2c., but: It is my body, take it and eat it 2c., each one for himself undivided.

No, praise God, we, the holy church under the papacy, are not such coarse dolts, as the evil spirit would have liked to have imagined us through the enthusiasts to adorn their heresy with such desperate lies to the great annoyance and displeasure of the people. For they knew that their mouth was a lying mouth, also because they had undoubtedly often sung and read the masses of the Holy Corpus Christi (as it was called) themselves, in which, among many others, it is clearly written: Sumit uniis, sumunt mille, quantum iste, tantum ille, nec sumptus absumitur. Therefore, they knew well that we were not carnivores, blood drinkers, Thyestes, Capernaites, nor localists, and that our God was not a ge-baking god, weeping god 2c. could be. 1) Nor did we have to hear such their courageous, recognized blasphemy, and, who will not leave it with them, still blasphemers, because they read it in their books.

1) Wittenberger: "and".

2) Wittenberger: "Blutfrefser".

(14) We still let everything go to Marburg (as I said), so that we would show abundant Christian love. For (help God!) how we had to hear that we had no Christian love, despised the servants of Christ, distressed and confused the churches 2c.! And there were no sinners on earth, because we alone, and no saints in heaven, because the enthusiasts alone, with them was vain fire of love, with us vain ice of unmercifulness; because we were carnivores, they were vain pure, pure, pure, the spirit itself.

(15) But what good has such superfluous love and humility done us? without making everything worse and our good hope miserably lacking; for love is and must be deceived, because it believes and trusts everything, 1 Cor. 13:7. But faith cannot be lacking, for God does not lie as man does, 1 Sam. 15:29. 15, 29. How should and could I now burden my poor conscience with such unrepentant blasphemy of the impenitent blasphemers and blasphemers, as I would have to do if I joined them with books, writings or words, as Stenkefeld seems to me now? St. John says, 2 John v. 10 f.: "If any man come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not at home, and salute him not: and he that saluteth him maketh himself partaker of his evil works." Here you hear who is the man who calls me neither to hear nor to see the heretics, but to shun and condemn them, as I also said above from 2) St. Paul, Titus 3:10: "You shall shun a heretic when he is once or twice admonished" 2c.

16 And if it were per impossibile, and they were right, that all bread and wine were in the Lord's Supper, should they therefore rage and thunder against us, with such abominable blasphemies: baked God, baked God 2c.? Should they not be accused of the holy

1) Wittenberg and Jena: "could". Walch and the Erlangeners: "could".

2) "from" is missing in the Wittenberger.

(which we have not invented): "This is my body", in which he ever clearly calls the offered bread his body? So they would also blaspheme him 3) a cloth-covered, woven-in, sewn-in God, because he walked in skirts and garments, sewn and woven; item, a watery God, because he was baptized in the Jordan; a cloudy God, because he went up to heaven in clouds.

17. I would have known how to call their God, and I would have done so, if I had not spared the name of God, and I would have given them their right name, so that they would not be bad bread eaters and wine drinkers, but soul eaters and soul murderers, and they would have a devilish, devilish, over-devilish, blasphemous heart and lying mouth; and would have told the truth with it, because it cannot be contradicted that they have lied brazenly with such their blasphemies, against their own conscience, and have not yet repented, even boasting in their wickedness.

(18) Well then, no one of the Christians should and can pray for the devotees, nor take care of them. They are given and sin unto death (as St. John says). I speak of the masters; the poor people who are among them, may the dear Lord Christ help them from such murderers of souls. They are (I say) highly and often enough admonished, they do not want mine; so neither do I want theirs; they have nothing from me (they boast), of which I thank God; so I have much less from them, praise be to God. Let always go what does not want to stay, it will find itself, has it not already found itself too much.

19 First, they were warned in the beginning by the Holy Spirit, because they were divided into seven spirits over the text, always one different from the other.

The first, Carlstadt, made the text thus: "This is my body" should mean so much: Here sits my body. And the text should stand thus: And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave to his disciples, saying, Here sitteth my body.

3) Taken by us from the old edition of Walch. In the old editions: "jnen", that is, them.

my body, which is given for you. Oh, this was so certain that not only the Holy Spirit, but the heavenly Father Himself had revealed it to him, of which I have written enough against the heavenly prophets.

The other, Zwingel, said that this was not done correctly, regardless of the fact that the heavenly Father Himself had revealed it. And made the text by his other holy spirit thus: Take, eat, that means my body, which is given for you. Here "is" had to mean "means".

22 The third, Oecolampad, brought forth the third Holy Spirit, who again made the text different, that is, Take, eat, this is the sign of my body.

23) The fourth, Stenkefeld, thought his stench was theses 1) in all the world, brought 2) from the fourth holy spirit this rule: One must put these words "this is my body" out of one's sight; for they hinder the spiritual mind. You must remember this rule if you want to become a theologian; namely, where the bright words of God hinder your understanding, you must seek another that pleases you, and then say that it is the Holy Spirit, and then arrange and interpret the words as seems good to you. So, here you must first grasp the high spiritual understanding that bread is bread, wine is wine, which no pope nor Luther ever understood, nor any baker nor Kretzmaier. 3) And therefore make the text so, putting the hindmost first, namely: Take and eat, my body, which is given for you, is this (hear, a spiritual food). There you have it; now go and say that Stenkefeld does not have the Holy Spirit far above the three holy spirits of Carlstadt, Zwingel, and Oecolampad.

(24) The fifth holy spirit, and some of his covenants and ungodly ones, thus say, Take, eat; that which is given for you is my body.

The sixth Holy Spirit thus says: "Take, eat, this is my body, for a memorial," should be so much: Take, eat, this is my body's memorial (nominativum).

1) "Thesem" a fragrance from the thesema apple.

2) Wittenberger: needs".

3) Kretschmar - Krämer, Wirth, Weinschenk.

corpus per genitivum corporis exponendo) given for you 2c.

The seventh holy spirit, John Campanus, makes it thus: "Take, eat, this is my body", corpus, scilicet paneum, should mean so much: The bread, which I give you, is a body or body for itself, not my living, natural body, but a dead, lifeless body, as stone and wood is a body. But because it is my creature, it is also my body, which I have created. This is the most high holy spirit, against and above all others, so that he takes the honor from the baker, who nevertheless also made something in the bread, and God does not create the bread, but the grain for the bread.

(27) Above these, another holy spirit (for the devil is holy and a great spirit) was wandering around, saying: there is no article of faith here, therefore one should not quarrel about it, everyone may believe here what he wants. This holy spirit seems to me to be a young holy spirit, which the old holy spirit, Stenkefeld, has incubated and hatched. For he finely keeps Stenkefeld's rule, and not only puts the text out of sight, but throws it away behind him, with faith and all, like a numb nut, making nothing else out of it.

(28) These holy spirits, though they may disagree about the text, agree together in the high spiritual sense that bread is bread and wine is wine. And he that hath not such a high understanding should be led astray, and believe that bread is not bread, but wood or stone; that would be a dangerous thing.

29) So the Lord's Supper with them is nothing else than a daily common meal, where bread and wine are needed; for in it one can speak of Christ, read, praise, give thanks, and thus eat spiritually, just as in the Lord's Supper of Christ. And Christ is exceedingly a great fool, in that he institutes a separate supper, which the world before is full, full, and daily. It would have been enough if he had said, "When and where you eat bread and drink wine, do it in remembrance of me. Just as St. Paul said of the

In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, whatever you do, do it, giving thanks to God the Father through him" [Col. 3:17]. What is this but to keep a spiritual meal in everything we do, that is, to remember the Lord and to strengthen our faith? Thus, in time, the Lord's Supper would become a fine fellowship, as the Corinthians began.

(30) Secondly, they were warned by many, and by me in particular, because I wrote so diligently against them, and greatly misrepresented their reasons and causes, that their consciences felt it. For they had two sayings for themselves, one, Joh. 6, 63. 1): "Flesh is of no use," which Oecolampad called his iron wall. The other, "Christ has gone to heaven", Eph. 4, 10, therefore his body and blood cannot be in the Lord's Supper. And more of the sayings that speak of Christ's ascension taught us very vehemently that Christ had gone to heaven, just as if we had never heard such a thing 1500 years ago. But that therefore all bread and wine were in the Lord's Supper, they would never bite nor touch the little nut, as my books, where they exist, testify against them.

I took the first saying, "Meat is not useful," from them so powerfully that even Zwingel no longer remembers it in his last booklet.

(32) The other also I took away from them, namely, that it was impossible that they should be moved in earnest to deny the body and blood of the Lord in the Lord's Supper for the sake of the saying, "He is gone up to heaven," as they always insisted in many books and with proud words; but they must surely lie in this. I proved this for this reason: Christ instituted the Lord's Supper and gave his body and blood to his disciples, as the words are written, "Eat, this is my body," before he ascended into heaven. For there he sitteth over tables on earth, and keepeth the first supper. Therefore it cannot be true that they boast, namely, that they were moved by the sayings of the Ascension.

1) The Erlangen edition has again reprinted Walch's wrong Bible quote here: "Joh. 6, 65."

For it is contrary to this that Christ holds the Lord's Supper before he ascends to heaven. If then his ascension hinders the first supper, how can it be true, and not a lie, since they say that the ascension moved and hindered them? since we now keep 1500 years no other supper, than that which the Lord instituted and commanded at the first, as he says: "This do in remembrance of me. They do not know or understand what "go to heaven" means, so how could they have been moved to do so?

They could do nothing more against this, and sought ways to mend their wicked ways, and to compare themselves with us. Then the colloquium was held in Marburg, in which they rectified the matter and admitted that it was not just bread and wine in the Lord's Supper, as they had so far most vehemently disputed, but that the body and blood of Christ 2) were also in it, but not bodily, but spiritual. Such would not hold the sting either; for spiritual partaking is of the saints and righteous alone. But St. Paul says that the unworthy receive the body and blood of Christ as well as the worthy, 1 Cor. 11:27, 29.

(34) And the disciples had a long discourse with me on local inclusion, that the body of Christ could not be in the bread as in the room or vessel, just as if we taught that Christ's body was in the bread as straw in a sack, or wine in a barrel. Accordingly, some of them excused themselves, saying that they had not understood it otherwise, that we and the papists taught that Christ's body was in the sacrament localiter than straw in sackcloth. Oh, that was a lazy, cold, lame excuse. For they knew very well that neither the papists nor we had taught so. And even if they (unbelievably to speak) had not understood otherwise, they would have to confess that they, as the nonsensical ones, dispute such things which they themselves had never heard nor understood. For the teaching of the papists was much more at that time, than now, in the day, yes, there was no other teaching in the day, that the fanciers must have had the same science.

2) "Christi" is missing in the Erlanger.

(35) Now the papists, yes, not the papists, but the holy Christian church, and we with them (for the pope, as I said, has not instituted the sacrament), teach that Christ's body is not localiter (like straw in a sack) in the sacrament, but definitive, that is, it is certainly there, not like straw in a sack, but still bodily and truly there; as I have strongly proved in my little book. This, I say, they knew well, or were ever guilty of knowing, since they wanted to rage so horribly against that which they did not know.

So we left Marburg with such hope (as said), because they yielded to all Christian articles, and in this article of the holy sacrament also departed from the previous error (that it would be bad bread), that they would come to us fully and completely with time. Because now, through the devil's business, such a thing has failed, and I have been deceived, as I found out from the booklet, after Zwingel's death, that he became worse after the colloquio than before, and certainly acted wrongly with me at Marburg: I am forced not to accept the fellowship of any of the enthusiasts, called Stenkefeld, Zwingel, Oecolampad, Carlstadt, or whoever they are, the enthusiasts, bread-eaters and wine-bibbers, that is, Christ's blasphemers and enemies, but must neither know nor see nor hear their letters, books, greetings, blessings, writing, names or memory in my heart.

37 For because I am sure, and their own conscience must be against them, that they are unrighteous and blaspheme God, I will and can gladly say before my dear Lord Jesus Christ at the last day, Lord Jesus, I have faithfully warned and admonished them, and their own conscience has convinced them, and they must confess this before you, you know, dear Lord.

38 For the third time they were admonished by the terrible judgment of God, when the devil was so miserably slain, as the histories and their letters testify, and with him about five hundred 2) men, very fine people. Although they immediately wanted to interpret such a wrathful judgment as a sign of grace, and the Zwingel as a saint, who (as all saints must suffer much) was also innocently slain. What does it help if God sends even more plagues upon them than he did upon Pharaoh, because they are of such a mind that they want to make vain holy suffering out of it? as the Jews now also interpret their suffering and misfortune for 1500 years and harden themselves with it, so that they are admonished so horribly. But I, as certain as I am that Zwingel (as his last booklet testifies) died in great and many sins and blasphemies, cannot believe their interpretation.

39 Although I wish and wish that God would have used with him the saying of St. Paul 1 Cor. 5, 5: "Delivered to the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus"; and 1 Cor. 11, 32: "When we are punished, we are chastened of the Lord, that we be not condemned with the world. Oh, how I would have liked him to follow these sayings, for I was, and still am, exceedingly sorry for his misfortune. If suffering is to be called holy and make holy, there must first be innocence and a good divine cause, as St. Augustine also says: Non poena, sed causa facit martyrem. Now you know well that Zwingel, beyond the blasphemy against the sacrament, also had a worldly evil cause, since he acted sacrilegiously against that part of the 3) street. That it is more likely that he was judged according to this sentence: Qui acceperit gladium, gladio peribit [Matth. 26, 52]. Yes, so we must think and hold, they may interpret, say, decorate, what they want; the histories and their writing are against themselves.

40 They also comfort themselves (I hear them say) by writing many books and doing great work in the church and on the Scriptures. What does it help, because they counterfeit and pervert God's Word and Sacrament, and do not want to hear? He who does not hear God does not hear him again, but his prayer is an abomination, Proverbs 28:9. The Jews also work very hard on the Scriptures, now probably 1500 years. Yes, which

1) Wittenberger: by.

2) Thus the Wittenbergers and the Jenaers. Erlanger: five thousand.

3) The five Catholic cantons were deprived of their supply by occupying the roads, which caused them to wage war against the Zurichers.

4) Erlanger: Theils.

Heretics have not worked much more with teaching and writing, than the Christians? The devil's martyrs (as they say) will deserve hell much more sourly than heaven to the right saints.

41. Because so many and great warnings and admonitions of God are badly lost on them; for my writing, which went out 17 years ago 1) I can also boast with a good conscience and strong faith [as a] divine admonition, besides the other two admonitions; I am also not too low, that they should be admonished by me, if they boast highly; for I am also a servant of Christ, as well, if not more, than they, and have also worked in his church, before them, will not boast too highly: I must let them go and shun them as the autokatakritos [αὐτοκατακρίτους, Tit. 3, 11.] who knowingly and willfully want to be damned, and have no fellowship of any kind with any of them, neither with letters, writings, words, nor works, as the LORD gives Matt. 18, 17. For I count them all in one cake, as they also are, who will not believe that the bread of the Lord in the Lord's Supper is his true natural body, which the ungodly, or Judas, receives orally, as well as St. Peter and all the saints. Whoever does not want to believe this (I say), let me be satisfied with letters, writings or words, and hope for no fellowship with me; nothing else will come of it.

Herewith you have, my good friend, my reason why I did not want to hear the blasphemer, Schwenkfeld, nor answer him; you may, if it is revealed to you otherwise, report this to those whom perhaps Stenkefeld is chewing the fat against me. I (as I said) like it that such blasphemers disgrace me, and that they are very angry with me; there is no one here who gives in to their anger. May they reproach the father of the house Beelzebub, what should they not reproach his servants? that is, may they reproach our dear Lord Jesus Christ, and may they reproach his servants?

1) In the first edition it says "15 years". What is meant is the writing No. 20 in this volume, which went out in 1527.

To give the lie to his words "Take, eat, this is my body" 2c. and to interpret and turn his blessed, consoling sacrament into a peasant's lark: what should the most arrogant spirits not do to poor Luther?

Summa, they are invented by me and overcome manifold as the blasphemers and liars. First, since they taught in the beginning that there was nothing but bread and wine in the Lord's Supper, they called us carnivores, blood drinkers, Thyestas, Capervaites; our Lord the baked God, the baked God, the weeping God 2c., as the books of the day testify forever. What Christian heart can or will believe that the Holy Spirit, and not rather the wretched devil, is in them again and forever? because they interpret the bright words of the Lord, "Take, eat, this is my body," out of their own thirst and iniquity, to their dream that he is there spiritually and not bodily. For we know very well that although the Lord Christ dwells in our hearts through faith (as St. Paul teaches Eph. 3:17), which is called a spiritual dwelling place, he has not taken a spiritual body or blood, nor given it for us, as he says Luc. 24:39: "Take hold and see, a spirit has no flesh and legs, as you see that I have," and yet he dwells spiritually in our hearts.

44 Secondly, the sayings which they have spoken, such as those concerning the ascension into heaven and the useless flesh, I have clearly proved that they have interpreted them falsely and used them in a lying mind, and thus have been caught in many gross lies, and in such public blasphemies and lies they remain unrepentant, obdurate, and stiff-necked to this day. So I would have to condemn myself to the abyss of hell, together with them, where I should hold it with them, or have fellowship with them, or keep quiet about it, if I noticed or heard that they presumed or boasted of my fellowship; this the devil and his mother do or keep quiet about, I do not.

I will stand with the holy father Abraham and all Christians on the saying Rom. 4, 21: "What God speaks, that He is able to do", item Psalm 51, 6: "That you may

I do not want to first ask my reason how it rhymes or is possible that I may receive his body and blood verbally, and then, as a judge of God, interpret his words according to my conceit. No, I will not rave like that; he has said it, so I will leave it at that; if he deceives me, then I am blessedly deceived. He has never lied, nor can he lie. But the enthusiasts are public liars invented by me and by themselves; they must also continue to lie, because they trust their conceit more than the word of God.

46 And whoever does not want to do this, and does not stand on the or similar sayings: "What God speaks, that He can do"; item: "God cannot lie" 2c., to him I faithfully advise that he leave the holy Scriptures and the articles of the Christian faith alone; for with his interpretation he demonizes himself the longer the more, and it is better for him to remain a damned heathen than to become a damned Christian.

O dear man! who will not believe 2) the article in the Lord's Supper, how will he ever believe the article of the humanity and divinity of Christ in One Person? And if it offends you that you receive the body of Christ orally when you eat the bread from the altar; item, the blood of Christ orally when you drink the wine in the Lord's Supper: then it must certainly offend you much more (especially when the hour comes), how the infinite and incomprehensible Godhead, which is and must be essential everywhere, is bodily resolved and comprehended in the humanity and in the virgin's body, as St. Paul says Col, 1, [2]. Paul says Col, 1, 19. [2, 9.]: "In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily."

(48) And how is it possible that you should believe that the Son alone became man, and not the Father, nor the Holy Spirit, when the three Persons are none other than the one God, in the very essence and nature of the one Godhead? How can it rhyme? How is it possible that the unified whole perfect Godhead of the Son can be

1) i.e. sunk; cf. K 5 of this paper. Erlanger: verteifet.

2) Wittenberger: does not want.

So should we separate or divide it, so that it is at the same time united with mankind, and the same one Godhead of the Father and the Holy Spirit is not united in mankind? And is at the same time one Godhead in Christ with mankind One Person, and not the Father or the Holy Spirit. Oh, how they shall rave, stagger and rumble when they come here! There they shall find to interpret; as I then hear that they go on confidently and piously with eutychei and nestorei. For I thought so, I also said that they must come here; the devil cannot celebrate where he founds a heresy, there he must find more, and no error remains alone. If the ring is broken in one place, it is no longer a ring, no longer holds, and always breaks away 2c.

(49) And if they boast much that they believe this article about Christ's person, and talk much about it, you must not believe it, they certainly lie about everything they say about it; they say it with their mouth (as the devils in the Gospel also call the Lord the Son of God [Marc. 5, 7]), but the heart is far from it, Matth. 15, 8, that is certain. Just as the Jews swore by the living God, but swore falsely, says the prophet. The Turk also praises the name of God, but in death they find out who their God is. For it is certain that whoever does not believe an article rightly, or does not want to (after he has been admonished and taught), certainly does not believe one with earnestness and right faith. And whoever is so bold that he may deny or punish God with a lie in one word, and does this wantonly against and above that which he has been admonished or instructed once or twice, may also (certainly does) deny and punish God with a lie in all his words.

(50) Therefore it is called round and pure, whole and all things believed, or nothing believed. The Holy Spirit cannot be separated, nor divided, so that he should teach or make believe one part true and the other false. Wherever there are weak people who are willing to be taught and not 3) stubbornly contradict. Otherwise, where that should apply, that

3) In the editions: "to be taught".

If every one of them were to deny one article because he considered all the others to be right (although this is impossible in principle), then no heretic would ever be condemned, nor would any heretic be able to be on earth. For all heretics are of this kind, that they first begin with one article alone, then they must all be denied afterwards, and all together, just as the ring, if it gets a bristle or a scratch, it is no longer good at all, and if the bell bursts in one place, it also no longer rings anything and is completely ineffective.

51 Let the examples teach you this. Arius took this one article, that Christ was not God, but a creature; the other articles all, and especially that God the Father was one God, Creator of heaven and earth, that Christ died for our sins, that baptism, sacrament, key, resurrection of the dead and eternal life, he believed more devoutly (as his words read) than the true Christians believe: nor does the holy scripture stand, and testify that he believed no article. For thus saith St. John 1 John 2:23 [4:15], "He that denieth the Son hath not the Father; and he that confesseth the Son hath the Father also." 2c. If Arius does not have the Son and the Father, then he does not have God, nor the Creator of heaven and earth, that is, it does not help him that he calls God the Father Creator of heaven and earth with his mouth and praises Him highly, although no other God is Creator of heaven and earth than the one whom Arius calls with his lying mouth; nor is he a God to him, to Arius, because he denies his only Son Christ and blasphemes that he is not God.

So baptism is no longer baptism, forgiveness of sins is no longer forgiveness of sins, sacrament is no longer sacrament, that is, it is no longer of use to him, even though he was previously baptized correctly, received correct forgiveness, and correct sacrament. So he has lost all articles of faith, because he denies the right God of faith, Christ, and no article is of any use to him, and he can also deny no article with right forgiveness.

He must not believe in it seriously, but must use it all for his condemnation, as the other commandment says: "You shall not take the name of your God in vain" [Ex. 20:7]. There you hear that even the right holy name of God does not help, 1) but harms those who do not believe rightly, but misuse it. Therefore the old fathers also disputed whether Arian baptism was also true baptism. So one misfortune always comes from another.

Macedonius, bishop of Constantinople, the heretic, also believed all the articles, without the one that the Holy Spirit was true God. What did it matter to him and his people, he believed none of them. And even if he pronounced and named them correctly with his mouth, he still has no God, because he does not consider the Holy Spirit to be a God; therefore he also has no Creator of heaven and earth. His baptism is nothing, no forgiveness of sins, no sacrament, no eternal life. And even if he lives strictly and leads an apparently Christian life, nor is he a true Christian, but a great hypocrite, it would be much better for him not to be a Christian, nor to misuse the Christian name in such a way, and to lead it falsely, that is, to lead and honor it so damned.

So Nestorius also, bishop of Constantinople, was with his own a strict man in all the other articles, but in the one he was a heretic, that the Son of God, Christ, was not born of Mary of virgins, and Mary was not, and could not be, the mother of God. With this, the other articles were also nullified for him, without what he could call them with his mouth and abuse them. Therefore, from these three heretics, many more heresies finally broke out and appeared in the day (because they were hidden inside before), until the troublesome Mahomet came out; because all histories testify that Mahomet came from the Arians, Macedonians and Nestorites, in whom he was also in time and from the beginning.

55 And whence has the pope become so full of heresy, and has always been a heresy after heresy?

1) So the old edition of Walch and the Erlanger, "helps" is missing in the Wittenberger and the Jenaer, but the latter has the Randglosse: "perhaps: nützet".

until now in Rome, especially in the Pope's court, they are vain epicureans and mockers of the Christian faith? namely, because they have fallen from the faith of Christ to works, that is, to their own righteousness. Of what use is it to him that all the other articles remain? What does it help him that he praises with his mouth the right God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, and puts on a good show of a Christian life? Nevertheless, he is and remains the greatest enemy of Christ and the real antichrist, has made himself the head of Christianity, yes, the underhole and backhole of the devil, through which so many abominations of masses, monasticism, fornication are thrown into the world, until so long even the monks helped the dying Christians to heaven with their lousy caps.

(56) So it will not help the fanciers that they make a big fuss about the spiritual eating and drinking of the body and blood of Christ, and about the love and unity of the Christians. For these are vain fig leaves, since Adam and Eve wanted to cover and adorn themselves with them, so that God should not notice their shame and sin. Much less will they help their great work with teaching and writing, with serious chaste behavior; that is still all a pagan thing. This also is lost, that they believe God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, and Christ the Savior. All, I say, is lost with all articles, however rightly and blamelessly they call or give them with the false blasphemy, because they deny this one article and punish it with lies, since in the Sacrament Christ says: "Take (the bread) and eat, this is my body, which is given for you" 2c.

For all their talk about spiritual food and love is intended to cover up and adorn such harm and poison that it should not be respected or seen, but should be regarded as the best and most special Christians. That means in German, to put a devil's specter before the eyes, and to adorn the dark devil (as St. Paul teaches [2 Cor. 11, 14.]) with the bright garment of the light angels. Therefore, their great boast and much work, because they do not want to be Christians in this some article, lost.

(58) This is what the Lord says in Luc. 11:35: "See to it that the light in you is not darkness. If therefore thy body be all light, and have no part of darkness, it shall be all light. There you see that the Lord wants everything to be light in us, and not a piece of darkness under it. As also Matt. 6:23: "If the light that is in thee be dark, how great shall be the darkness itself?" and Paul Gal. 5:3: "I testify unto every man, that whosoever shall be circumcised (which was one piece) is fallen from Christ and from grace, and is guilty of keeping the whole law." Hence the saying Jac. 2, 10. f.: "He that keepeth the whole law, and sinneth in one piece, is guilty in all pieces: for he that commanded, Thou shalt not commit adultery, commanded also, Thou shalt not kill" 2c. There is One God who has commanded all things; he who is angry with Him in one, with you again are angry all creatures and all commandments of God, even his own good works which he thinks he has done according to the other commandments; for they are not done in the right obedience of God, nor in the faith of Christ 2c.

(59) Would you like to say: Oh, dear Luther, it is to be hoped, or ever not to be feared, that God should be so fiercely and cruelly strict that He would condemn men for the sake of one article, when they otherwise faithfully keep and believe all other articles. For not only the heretics, but also other sinners, as Sirach writes [Cap. 7, 9], comfort themselves as if God would look upon their other good works and be gracious; just as King Saul wanted to adorn his disobedience with his devotion and sacrifice, 1 Sam. 15, 15. So go there safely and surely, as if there were no need for them: the many great works and labor, which they otherwise do, will outweigh a few things. On the other hand, it must be said that God can neither hope nor provide for His poor, miserable, blind creature to be so foolish and proud against its Creator and Lord that it would deny, punish with lies and blaspheme His divine word; rather, it is to be hoped that its humble, submissive, obedient, and faithful creature will be able to do the same.

The creature will not deny and blaspheme a single word, but will warmly accept all and every one in particular, and will give thanks with all joy that it is worthy to hear a single word from its dear God; indeed, this is how God is to be remembered.

60 Now the heretics do nothing else with the word of God, except as if it were the word of men, or the word of a fool, which they despise, mock and blaspheme, and could make everything better according to their own beautiful conceit. They will not let themselves be instructed to do so; then all is lost. And here the great many good works and labors will not outweigh the few evil things. For there is neither much nor little, neither small nor great good works, but vain, evil, damned works; for unbelief or blasphemy makes even the good (as they call it) works vain and damned. Yes, such good works are worse than the bad sins, because they go and happen in blasphemy and stubborn denial of God's name and word, so that it would be much better and desirable if they did sin and evil works for it, so that they would know what they were doing.

(61) Now it is according to the saying of Solomon, Ecclesiastes 5:1: "Keep thy foot when thou goest unto the house of God, and come near to hear: for this is better than the sacrifice of fools, which know not how evil are their works. Sacrifice is a good work; it is still called evil when the fools who do not want to hear (that is, the godless or heretics) do it. But they will be judged much more harshly and cut by the saying Ps. 50:16: "God says to the wicked, 'Why do you take my word into your mouth? That is enough of that, let him who will not hear go away.

In the end, I must also add this. I hear it said that some are moved to think that we are at one with the enthusiasts, that we have dropped the elevation in our churches and left it standing, so that we should confess that Christ's body and blood are not in the sacrament, nor are they received orally. But this is the way it is: it happened twenty or twenty-two years ago, when I began to condemn the Mass, and wrote harshly against the papists that they were would not be a sacrifice nor our work, but a gift or testament of God, which we could not offer to God, but should and must receive from God, just as baptism would not be a sacrifice, but a gracious gift of God, 2c. I was at the same time well inclined to abolish elevation for the sake of the papists, who held it to be a sacrifice and work offered by us to God, as they still do, and have done for over six hundred years so far.

But because at that time our doctrine was new and beyond measure annoying in the whole world, I had to go clearly, and for the sake of the weak I had to let up a lot, which I did not do afterwards; so I left the elevation, because it could have a good interpretation, as I wrote in the booklet De captivitate ba-byconica 1), namely, that it was an old custom, taken from Moses, and remained with the first Christians for and for. For what Moses writes of the Tnuphah and Trumah, especially 2 Mos. 35. and 25., 2) can now be read by any layman in the German Biblia, that they were not sacrifices to propitiate God for sin, as the papists held their sacrifices and sold them most shamefully 2c., but vain thank offerings or thanksgiving for the received goods of the land 2c.

This would also be a fine interpretation, that the priest with the abolition of the sacrament did nothing else, but that he transfigured the words "this is my body", as if he wanted to say with the deed: Behold, dear Christians, this is the body that was given for you. So that the lifting up was not a sign of the sacrifice (as the papists would have it) against God, but an admonition against men to provoke them to faith, especially because he lifted it up just after the words "this is my body, given for you," and yet did not report a single letter of the sacrifice. You will find this in the book De captivitate Babylonica.

In thinking and remaining like this, Hans Unver-rumbles and rumbles against me.

1) Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIX, 4ff. The passage Luther is referring to here is found in Col. 50.

2) In the original edition, the Wittenberg and the Jena erroneously: "Deuteron. 16."

Carlstadt, with his heavenly prophets, and sends out a booklet against us, in which he calls us Wittenberg Christ murderers, Christ crucifiers, new papists 2c. and makes it very crude and insensitive. 1) He had no other reason than that we had abolished the sacrament. He interprets such abolition as sacrificed. He further interprets sacrificed as much as Christ was crucified, murdered, slaughtered, and acted much worse than the Jews had ever done. Now he knew very well that we Wittenbergers did not consider the sacrament a sacrifice, but had argued against the papists for almost three years that it could not be a sacrifice, nor could it be called one, but a gracious gift and testament of God (as said above), and we did not have to thank him for the teaching that the sacrament was not a sacrifice, because we had not learned it from him so long before, but he had to thank us, from whom he had learned it; otherwise it might never have fallen into his head.

When I saw such a mad spirit raging against us without cause, that he wanted to make us sin, and such an abominable sin, since there was no sin, nor could there be any sin, I closed and kept the elevation, contrary to the same devil and to annoyance, which I was nevertheless inclined to drop against the papists. For I did not want to suffer it, nor did I want the devil to teach me anything to order or set in our church. Especially not that I should have such an awful conscience, as if I had murdered, crucified, desecrated Christ 2c., where I held the elevation and did not abstain, as the mad spirit pretended, and for the sake of such an evil conscience would have to and would be forced to abstain from the elevation. No, no, I was innocent of such a conscience, I knew that for sure, and if I could not accept it, he knew it well. For before I would accept such a conscience or burden myself with it, that I would have to drop the elevation because of it, that I would consider myself a murderer of Christ, an executioner, I would not only keep the elevation this very day, but, if it was necessary

One would not be enough, three, seven, ten elevation would help. That is why I want it to be free (as it is and must be a free thing), so that no sin could occur if it were held or dropped.

For this reason elevation has remained with us. For what is free, that is, neither commanded nor forbidden, in which one can neither sin nor earn, that shall be in our power, as subject to our reason, that we may use it or not, keep it and let it go, without all sin and driving of the conscience, according to our liking or need; In short, we want to be free masters in this, and not servants, who may do with it as, what, where and when they want, and not be forced to abjure such grave, great, terrible sin, as Carlstadt's spirit wanted, nor to abjure it at the loss of the soul's blessedness, as the devil of the pope wants; but it should be said: If you do not want to pick it up, leave it; if you do not want to leave it, pick it up. What does God ask about it? What does my conscience ask about it? Just as little as the altar asks about it, whether you want to lift it up or lay it down is equally important to it.

68 Accordingly, the enemies of the sacrament have no reason to boast that we are doing it for their sake and service by dropping the elevation. And let no one think that we thereby incline to their blasphemous error, much less commit it; but let us steadfastly and firmly hold them for God's and our damned enemies, and not deny, profane, and pervert Christ's word along with them, as if we had to learn from them to eat bread and drink wine, which we can well do without Christ's Supper, and the whole world does too much daily without God.

69 But this is the only reason that we leave the abolition in place: because almost all of the churches have long since abandoned the abolition, we wanted to compare ourselves to them and not practice something special in such a piece, which in itself could stand or lie freely and without danger to the conscience. Especially because I was inclined to do so from the beginning and certainly would have done so at the time when Carlstadt did not have such greu-

1) i.e. inedible.

The church would have made a sin out of it, as has been said. For, where it can otherwise be done without sin and danger or without annoyance, it is quite fine that the churches compare themselves, even in outward things, which are nevertheless free, as they compare themselves in spirit, faith, word, sacrament, 2c. For such is fine and pleases everyone.

70 Also because such inequality, being unnecessary, looks very much like a schism, disunity or division of hearts. For from the beginning of the Church, the ceremonies have caused much unhappiness in the Church; as, the Easter feast caused such an essence that few churches were of one mind with each other about it. And the bishop of Rome, Victor, put under ban all the churches in Greece and in the east, because they did not keep Easter on the same day with the Roman church. But he was punished by the bishop of Lyons, Irenaeus, so that he had to desist and let every church have its own way and day for Easter, because it could not be compared without danger and annoyance, and there was no question whether Rome kept Easter on a different day, and the Greeks also on a different day.

71 Such a thing is much more, in which the Greeks did not compare themselves with the Romans, nor do they compare themselves yet. And what does the bishopric of Milan still do today, which lies under the pope in the French lands? Since not only the elevation, or a part of the mass, is unequal to the other churches, but the whole mass, especially that it does not have the small canonem, and all things have their own way in the mass, so that in 1510, when I passed through there, I could not say mass in any place, 1) and the priests told us: OS SUMUS Ambrosiani, non poteritis hic celebrare. And what may it be much words? There is no church on earth with so many inequalities and ways in worship and in the church as in the Roman church. This shows not only the experience, but also the books in the spiritual law, which would be much less, where more equality would have remained in the Roman church. But it was of use to the pope that much or everything was unequal, if they became equal only in that they considered him the head of the whole Christendom.

72 Hence the saying went among them: Si fueris Romae, romano vivito more, if thou art at Rome, keep thyself Roman. So I may also say here: If you come to a place where elevation is still held, you should not be angry, nor condemn it, but let it be, because it is done without sin and danger to the conscience; perhaps they cannot yet change it. But nevertheless it is finer and better that the piece be compared in all churches. And since elevation is offered and unnecessary, as without God's command of human devotion, it is cheaper to compare with the churches that do not have elevation than with those that do. For St. Paul faithfully teaches us everywhere to be diligent to teach and live alike and in one accord, and to guard against disunity or inequality where we can, Rom. 12:16: "Have one mind among yourselves"; 1 Cor. 1:10: "I remind you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you speak one mind, and do not suffer division among yourselves."

But where this cannot be, the 14th chapter of Romans should be followed. V. 1 ff.: "Do not confuse consciences. One thinks he may eat all things, but he that is weak eats herbs. One man keeps one day before another; another man keeps all days alike. Let every man be sure in his own mind. [The kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. Therefore let us strive after that which leads to peace, and serve for the betterment of one another." This help us all our dear Lord Jesus Christ with God the Father and the Holy Spirit, praised forever and ever, amen.

1) Compare the Table Talks, Cap. 35, § 6. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 1001 f.

The following writings also belong to the above section:

Luther's report to Melanchthon of the new prophets who reject infant baptism. January 13, 1522.

Walch, old edition, vol.XV, appendix, no. 103.

Luther's letter to two pastors about rebaptism. Beginning of February 1528.

Walch, old edition, vol. XVII, 2643.

Luther's Preface to the Book of Justus Menius on Anabaptist Doctrine and Mystery. 1530.

Walch, old edition, vol. XIV, 276.

Luther's sermon on Holy Baptism.

January 6, 1535.

Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. X, 2054.

Luther's preface to the new Münster newspaper. Beginning of 1535.

Walch, old edition, vol. XIV, 328.

Luther's preface to Rhegius' refutation of the Münster Anabaptists. 1535.

Walch, old edition, vol. XIV, 323.

Third Section.

Luther's writings against the errors, blasphemies and abominations of the Jews and Turks.

I. Luther's writings against the Jews, and what ways he proposed to deal with the Jews to convert them.

48 a. D. Matt. Luther's scripture that Jesus Christ was born a Jew.*)

Anno 1523.

But a new lie has 1) gone out about me: I am said to have preached and written that Mary, the mother of God, was not a virgin before and after childbirth but she had Christ from Joseph, and after that she had more children. About all this I am also said to have preached a new heresy, namely, that Christ is Abraham's seed. How well this lie tickles my dear friends,

1) but - again.

*)This writing appeared in 1523 at Wittenberg in seven individual editions (Erl., vol. 29, p. 45), all without indication of the printer; one of them has the title Lotthers (Dietz, Wörterbuch, p. XHII). In the collections it is found: in the Wittenberger (1556), vol. V, p. 434b; in the Jenaer (1585), vol. II, p. 216b; in the Altenburger, vol. II, p. 313; in the Leipziger, vol. XXI, p. 646 and in the Erlanger, vol. 29, p. In 1577, Selnecker had all of Luther's writings Wider die Juden at Leipzig (in octavo) reprinted, namely: this writing; wider die Sadbather; von den Juden und ihren Lügen; and vom Schem Hamphoras. We give the text according to the Jena edition with comparison of the Wittenberg. A Latin translation of this writing made by Justus Jonas in 1523 is found in the Wittenberg edition, Lora. VII, col. 156. By comparing them, we have been able to correct many readings. However, in some cases the translation is such that it is not possible to decide on the variants, but these are usually only insignificant.

the papists! And because they condemn the gospel, they are worth nothing better than that they atone for and feed their heart's joy and lust with lies. I would bet my neck on it, whether the same liars, who pretend such great things to honor the Mother of God, would believe this article from the heart, and yet want to pretend with such lies, as [if] they are highly interested in the Christian faith.

(2) But it is such a poor merciful lie that I despise it and would not answer it. For these three years I am almost accustomed to hearing lies, even from our closest neighbors; and again, they are also accustomed to the noble virtue that they do not turn red, nor are they ashamed if they are publicly overcome by lying, let themselves be called liars, and do it more and more; nevertheless, they are the most Christian people, who want to eat the Turk, and exterminate all heresy with body and soul.

But because I must answer this lie for the sake of others, I have thought to write something useful as well, so that I do not rob the readers of their time in vain with such lazy, loose jokes. Therefore I will tell from the Scriptures the causes that move me to believe that Christ is a Jew born of a virgin, whether I might also provoke some of the Jews to the Christian faith. For our fools, the popes, bishops, sophists, and monks, the coarse asses, have thus far dealt with the Jews, that whoever would have been a good Christian might well have become a Jew. And if I had been a Jew, and had seen such dolts and gags governing and teaching the Christian faith, I would have become a sow rather than a Christian.

(4) For they have dealt with the Jews as if they were dogs and not men; they could do no more than to bark at them and take their goods when they were baptized; they have been shown neither Christian doctrine nor life, but have been subjected only to piety and monasticism. When they have seen that the things of the Jews have such strong Scripture for themselves, and the things of the Christians have been mere babble, without any Scripture, how may they still their hearts, and become really good Christians? I have heard it myself from devout baptized Jews that if they had not heard the gospel in our time, they would have remained Jews under the Christian mantle all their lives. For they confess that they have never heard of Christ from their Anabaptists and masters.

(5) I hope that if the Jews were dealt with kindly, and were carefully instructed from the Scriptures, they would become many true Christians, and return to the faith of their fathers, the prophets, and the patriarchs; but they would be further frightened if their cause were rejected, and nothing at all left, and only acted with arrogance and contempt toward them. If the apostles, who were also Jews, had thus dealt with us Gentiles, as we Gentiles do with the Jews, there would never have been a Christian among the Gentiles. If then they have dealt so brotherly with us Gentiles, let us again deal brotherly with the Jews, if we may convert some; for we ourselves are not yet all gone, let us not say all gone.

(6) And though we boast highly, yet we are Gentiles, and the Jews are of the blood of Christ; we are sisters and strangers, they are blood friends, cousins and brethren of our Lord. Therefore, if one should boast of blood and flesh, the Jews belong closer to Christ than we do, as St. Paul also says in Romans 9. God has also proven this by deed, for He has never done such great honor to any nation among the Gentiles as He has to the Jews. For no patriarch, no apostle, no prophet has ever been exalted among the Gentiles, not to mention very few true Christians. 1) Paul says Rom. 3, 2. and Ps. 147, 19. 20.: "He proclaims his word to Jacob, and his statutes and his judgments to Israel. He has not done so to any nation, nor revealed his judgments to them."

7 I hereby ask my dear papists if they are tired of calling me a heretic.

that they now began to call me a Jew. For I will perhaps also become a Turk, and what my Junkers only want.

8. the first is promised to Christ soon after Adam's fall, when God said to the serpent: "I will put enmity between you and the woman, between your seed and her seed; the same shall bruise your head, and you shall bite his heels". [Gen. 3:15. Here I leave it to prove that the serpent spoke possessed by the devil, because no unreasonable animal is so clever that it could speak and hear human language, much less speak and ask of such high things as the commandment of God is, as the serpent does here; therefore it must certainly have been an understanding, highly reasonable and powerful spirit that can make human language, and so masterfully handle of God's commandments and saw and guide human reason.

(9) Since it is certain that a spirit is higher than man, it is also certain that this is an evil spirit and an enemy of God, for he breaks God's commandment and does against His will; therefore it is certainly the devil. So the word of God, which speaks of the trampling of the head, must also refer to the devil's head, but not excluding the natural serpent's head, for he speaks with the same word of the devil and the serpent, as of one thing; therefore he means both heads. But the head of the devil is his power, so that he rules, that is, sin and death, so that he has brought Adam and all Adam's children under himself.

(10) Therefore this woman's seed must not be a common man, because it must tread down the devil's power, sin and death, since all men are subject to the devil through sin and death, so it must certainly be without sin. Now human nature does not bear such seed or fruit, as has been said, because they are all under the devil with sin. How then will it be here? The seed must be a natural child of a woman; otherwise it could not be called nor be the seed of a woman. Again, human nature and birth do not bear such seed, as has also been said. So finally the means must remain, that this seed

Let him be a natural son of the woman, not coming naturally from the woman, but by a special work of God, so that the Scripture may affirm that he is only the seed of a woman, and not of a man, as the text clearly indicates, that he will be the seed of a woman.

11. So this is the first saying, in which the mother of this child is described as a virgin, and that she is a quite natural mother, and yet should only conceive and give birth supernaturally by God, without a man, so that he may be a special man without sin, and yet have common flesh and blood, like other men; which could not have happened if he had been conceived by a man, like other men, because the flesh is burned and corrupted with evil desire, his natural work and chastening cannot be done without sin, and what is inseminated and impregnated by the work of the flesh also bears a carnal and sinful fruit. Therefore St. Paul Eph. 2, 3. says: that we are by nature all children of wrath.

This saying has now become the very first gospel on earth. For when Adam and Eve, seduced by the devil, had fallen and were summoned to judgment by God, Genesis 3:9 ff, they stood in mortal peril and in the fear of hell, seeing that God was against them and condemned them, from which they would have gladly escaped and could not. And if God had left them in fear, they would have soon despaired and died. But when, after the terrible punishment, he let them hear this comforting word that he would raise up the seed of the woman over the serpent's head to trample it underfoot, their spirit was refreshed, and they drew comfort from such a word, with firm faith in such a future blessed seed of the woman, which would trample underfoot the serpent's head, sin and death, by which they had been trampled underfoot and corrupted.

(13) Now this gospel the fathers preached and preached from Adam onward, by which they also knew and believed in the future seed of this woman, and so were preserved by faith in Christ, as well as we, are also true believers.

Christians, as we are; without 1) that in their time such gospel was not preached publicly in all the world, as was to happen after Christ's future, but remained alone with the holy fathers and their descendants, until Abraham.

14 Secondly, Christ is promised to Abraham, Genesis 22:18, where God says, "In your seed shall all the Gentiles be blessed." If all the Gentiles are to be blessed, it is certain that otherwise they are all unblessed and cursed, except for this seed of Abraham. But from this it follows that human nature has vain cursed seed and bears unblessed fruit, otherwise it would not be necessary for them all to be blessed through this seed of Abraham. He who says "all" excludes none. Therefore, besides Christ, they must all be cursed in sins and death under the devil, who are born of men.

15 Now here the mother of God is proven to be a pure virgin. For since God cannot lie, it had to happen that Christ would be Abraham's seed, that is, his natural flesh and blood, like all Abraham's children. Again, because he is to be the blessed seed that should bless all others, he could not be begotten of man. For such children, as said, may not be conceived without sin, for the sake of the corrupt and poisoned flesh, which cannot do its work without poison and sin.

(16) Thus the Word, when God promised Christ to Abraham's seed, compels that Christ should be born of a woman and become her natural child. For he came not as Adam from the earth, nor as Eve from Adam; but as a woman's child comes from her seed. For the earth was not natural seed to Adam's womb; so Adam's rib was not natural seed to Eve's womb; but the flesh and blood of virgins, whereof children are otherwise born in all women, was natural seed to Christ's womb, even as she was of the seed of Abraham.

17 Again, the Word, when God promises blessing on all the Gentiles in Christ, compels that Christ should not be blessed by any man or woman.

Man's work come. For the work of the flesh, which is cursed, does not suffer with that which is blessed and blessed. So this blessed fruit had to be the fruit of a female body only, not of a man; although the same female body comes from the man, yes, also from 2) Abraham and Adam, that this mother is a virgin and yet a real natural mother; but not by natural ability or power, but by the Holy Spirit and God's power alone.

18 This saying has been the gospel from Abraham to David, and also to Christ, and is a short saying, but it hastened to become the gospel, and was wonderfully practiced by the fathers, both in writing and in preaching. Many thousands of sermons have been preached from this saying, and countless souls have been saved. For it is a living word of God, which Abraham believed with his descendants, and thereby redeemed and kept from sins and death and all the power of the devil. Although it has not yet been proclaimed publicly before all the world, as happened after Christ's future, but remained only among the fathers with their descendants.

19) But look at the perverse praisers of the Mother of God, who, when asked why they think so harshly of Mary's virginity, truly could not say. For the foolish 4) idolaters do it 5) no further than to honor the Mother of God, that they exalt her 6) for the sake of virginity and immediately make an idol out of it. But the Scripture praises this virginity nothing at all for the sake of the mother; she is also not preserved a virgin for her sake; yes, cursed.

2) Jenaer: from.

3) Thus the Jena. Wittenberg and Erlangen: right. The reading given by us is confirmed by the translation of Jonas: opulentissimae gratiae nun- cium.

4) The Jenaer has as marginal gloss: "unvernünftigen", what the Wittenberger and the Erlanger have in the text. Jonas: stulti.

5) Thus the Jenaers. Wittenberg and Erlangen "thun".

6) "dieselbe" taken by us from the old edition of Walch. In the other editions: "the same". Our reading proves to be correct by the translation of Jonas.

1) Wittenberger: "and" instead of "on" in the Jena.

This virginity, and all virginity, would be there for its own sake, and nothing better would work than its own benefit and praise.

(20) But for this the Spirit praises virginity, that it was necessary for it to conceive and bear this blessed fruit. For after the corrupt flesh such blessed fruit could not come without through a virgin. So that this tender virginity went in foreign service, for God's honor, not for her own honor. And if it could have come from a woman, it would not have taken a virgin; because virginity is against the appointed nature and was condemned in the law before times, and is now only praised because the flesh is poisoned and remote appointed nature cannot give its fruit without cursed works.

21 Therefore we also see that St. Paul does not call the mother of God a virgin, but only a woman, when he says Gal. 4, 4: "The Son of God was born of a woman. Not that he meant that she was not a virgin, but that he praised her virginity in the best possible way with her right praise; as if he should say: "To this birth no woman came, no man, namely, that there remained everything that belongs to it in a woman, that a child might be conceived, born, nursed and nourished, which works no man's image can do; therefore, if it is only a woman's child, then she must certainly be a virgin. But a virgin may also be a man; a mother cannot be only a woman's image.

(22) Therefore the Scripture neither denies nor says anything about the virginity of Mary after the birth, so that the hypocrites are highly concerned, just as if they were serious about it, and all blessedness would depend on it; although it should be enough for us to hold that she remained a virgin after the birth, because the Scripture neither says nor gives that she was crazy afterwards, and no doubt no one is so powerful 1) to fear that he extends without Scripture from his own head that she did not remain a virgin. But the Scripture remains that she was a virgin before and in childbirth; for so far from her virginity did God

We need him to give us the blessed promised seed without all sin.

23. the third saying is said to David, 2 Sam. 7, 12-14.: 2) "When your time is up, and you sleep with your fathers, I will raise up your seed after you, who will come from your womb, and I will establish his kingdom forever. He shall build an house unto my name, and I will establish his kingdom's throne for ever: I will be his father, and he shall be my son."

24 These words may not have been spoken by Solomon. For Solomon did not come from David and rise after his death. So also after Solomon (who was born and became king in David's time) God never called anyone his son, and gave him an everlasting kingdom, or built him a house. Therefore it is all said of Christ. But because this saying is too far, and would cost much to interpret, we leave it now. For it would be necessary to show here how Christ must be the son of a woman alone, that he should be called the child of God, who could not nor should come from cursed works.

The fourth saying is Isa. 7, 14: "God will give you a sign Himself; behold, a virgin is with child and will bear a son. This 3) may not be said of a virgin who is yet to become a bride. For what great sign would it be for a virgin to bear a child for more than a year, since the common course of nature is 4) daily before our eyes? Therefore, if it is to be a sign of God, it must be something special and great, which the common course of nature cannot give, as all signs of God tend to be.

026 Neither do the Jews help themselves that they would escape here, and make up such an excuse, that it is therefore a sign that Isaías saith even now, that it shall be a son, and not a daughter. For this would not be a sign for the virgin, but for the prophet Isaiah, as he had just guessed that it should not be a daughter. Thus

2) Here the Erlangen edition has reprinted Walch's wrong Bible quotation: "2 Sam. 23, 7."; furthermore in this writing two other wrong quotations.

3) Wittenberger: "this".

4) "is" is missing in the Wittenberg and the Erlanger.

1) powerful - very.

the text should read on Isaiah, thus: Behold, God will give you a sign himself, namely, that I will tell Isaiah that a young woman bears a son and not a daughter. But this is shameful and childish.

27 But now the text powerfully presses the sign on the woman's image, and clearly says: This is a sign, when a woman bears a son. Now it is not a sign that a mad woman bears a child, be it Ezekiel's mother, or whatever woman the Jews may interpret; but it must be something new and different, and an especially great work of God, that this woman is with child; the impregnation is to be the sign. So I do not consider any Jew so rude who does not give God so much power that he may make a child from a virgin, since they must confess that he made Adam from the earth and Eve from Adam, which requires no less power.

028 But if they pretend that it is not written in the Hebrew, saying, A virgin is with child; but, Behold, an Alma is with child. But Alma is not called a virgin, but Bethula is called a virgin, but Alma is called a young harlot. Now let a young harlot be a mad woman, and be called the mother of a child.

29. here is easily answered by the Christians from St. Matthew [1, 22. 23.] and Luke [1, 31.], which both lead the saying of Isaiah on Mariam, and interpret the word Alma virgin, which is more to believe than all the world, let alone 1) the Jews. And even if an angel from heaven said that it was not called a virgin, we should still not believe it. For God the Holy Spirit speaks through St. Matthew and Lucas, whom we certainly believe to 2) understand the Hebrew language and words well.

(30) But because the Jews do not accept the evangelists, we must meet them differently, and say here first, as before, that it is not a miracle nor a sign when a young woman becomes pregnant; otherwise one would like to call the prophet Isaiah by all means a miracle.

1) Wittenberger and Erlanger: "denn wenn".

2) So the Jenaers. Wittenberg and Erlanger: "and understand".

Rightly mock, and say, What other women should conceive, but the young? Are you drunk, or is it so strange with you that a young woman bears a son? Therefore such a requested answer of the Jews is only a vain defense word, that they only do not keep quiet.

31 And another thing, let it be said that Bethulah is called a virgin, and not Alma; and that Isaiah saith not Bethulah, but Alma: yet all this is a vain word of defence. For they pretend not to know that in no place in all Scripture is Alma called a madwoman, and yet they know it so well, but in all places she is called a young maiden, who is unchanged, and has never been guilty of any man, who is ever called a virgin, as St. Matthew and Lucas here interpret Jesaia.

32 And if they are so eloquent, and so attached to the letters, we admit that Bethula is another word than Alma. But with this they have won nothing, except that this woman is not called here by the name virgin, but she is called by another name, which also means nothing else, but such a woman, who is still young and unchanged. Now call it what you will, so it is ever a virgin in the person. But it is childish and shameful to make do with words when the interpretation is the same.

(33) Therefore, for the sake of the Jews, let us not translate Isaia, Behold, a virgin is with child, lest she mistake the word virgin; but rather, Behold, a maid is with child. For as in German "Magd" is called such a woman, who is still young and wears the wreath with honor and walks in the hair, that one says: It is still a maid, and not a woman; although it is another word than the word virgin, so also in Hebrew Elem is a young man who has never 3) had no wife, and Alma is a maid who has no husband yet; not like a maid, but who still wears a wreath. So Mosi's sister is called an Alma, 2 Mos. 2, 8. and Rebekka, 1 Mof. 24, 16. since they were still virgins.

3) "never" is missing in the Wittenberg and Erlanger.

34 If I were to say in German, Hans has entrusted him with a maid, and someone were to say, Je, so he has not entrusted him with a virgin, then everyone would laugh at him as a useless word warrior, who does not want to let virgin and maid be one thing, because they are two words. So it is also in the Hebrew, because the Jews help themselves here in the saying of Isaiah and say: Isaiah would not speak Bethula, but Alma. And I appeal to their own conscience among themselves, that it is so. So let them say, as they will, Bethula or Alma, so Isaiah means such a harlot, who is manly and still walks in the wreath, which we call a maid in the most proper German. Therefore one also says rightly of the mother of God "the pure maid", that is, the pure Alma.

035 And if I had spoken the name of Isaiam, he should have spoken unto me even as he spake, saying not Bethula, but Alma. For Alma is better suited here than Bethula. It is also clearer when I say, Behold, a maid conceives, for a virgin conceives. For virgin is a broad word, which may well be a woman of fifty or sixty years, unfit to bear fruit. But "maiden" actually means a young woman who is manly, capable of fruition and unchanged, so that she not only understands virginity, but also youth and fertile womb. Thus, in German, the young people are commonly called Mägde or Mägdevolk, and not Jungfrauenvolk.

36 So this is certainly the text of Isaiah in the most authentic German: "Behold, a maidservant conceives. That these are the words in Hebrew, no Jew will deny to me, who understands differently Hebrew and German. For we Germans do not say concepit, the woman has conceived; the preachers have made such German out of Latin; but so speaks the German man and the mother's tongue: the woman goes pregnant, or goes heavily, or is pregnant.

(37) But here in the Hebrew it is not written, Behold, a maid shall conceive, as though she were not yet with child; but, Behold, a maid shall conceive, as having the fruit already in her womb, and yet being a maid.

That 1) you must look at the prophet, how he is amazed that there stands before him a maidservant, who carries a child, before she recognizes a man; she should have a man, would also be skilled for it, and big enough; but before she comes to it, she is a mother. This is a strange miraculous thing.

38) In the 2) way St. Matthew acts this saying, when he says: "When Mary, Jesus' mother, was trusted, before they sat together at home, it was found that she was with child of the Holy Spirit" 2c. Matth. 1, 18.]

039 What else is this said, but that she was a young maid, which had not yet known a man, and yet was able, but before she knew the man she was with child? This was a strange thing, since no maid conceives before she is guilty of a man; so that the evangelist looked upon her even as the prophet, and made her a sign and a wonder.

(40) Now herewith also the false understanding is accounted for, which some have drawn from the words of Matthew, 3) when he saith, Before they sat together in the house, it was found that she was with child. They interpret this as if the evangelist wanted to say: Afterward she sat at home with Joseph, like another woman, and made love, but before this happened she was with child without Joseph. 2c. Item, when he speaks v. 25: "And Joseph knew her not, until she bare her first son." This they barked, as if the evangelist wanted to say that he had recognized her, but not before she had given birth to her first son. Such opinion Elpidius 4) held, and is punished by St. Jerome.

1) Wittenberger and Erlanger: Da.

2) Wittenberg and Erlanger: these.

3) Wittenberger and Erlanger: "gesogen", which has the Jenaer at the edge. Jonas: acceperunt, which confirms our reading.

4) "Elpidius" is probably a misprint instead of "Elvidius". Otherwise, we find in Luther's writings everywhere the spelling: "Helvidius", e.g. in the Table Talks, Cap. 7, § 26, para. 2. Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XXII, 283; ibid. there, vol. XIX, 200 towards the end of the Columne, and in this volume in Luther's writing of the Shem Hamphoras, §167 (Walch, old edition, vol. XX, 2617). Against Helvidius at Rome" Jerome wrote his book at the end of the fourth century: Adversus Helvidium. Jonas offers: Helvidium.

For such carnal senses do not consider the opinion and cause of the evangelist. The evangelist, as I said, wants to put this great miracle, like the prophet Isaiah, before everyone's eyes and say how strange it is that a maid should conceive before her husband takes her home and puts her to sleep, and he does not recognize her until she has a son, whom she should have known beforehand.

(42) So that the words of the evangelist do not refer at all to what happened after the birth, but only to what happened before the birth. For the prophet and the evangelist, as well as Saint Paul, do not treat this virgin any further than until they have the fruit of her, for the sake of which she is a virgin and everything. After the fruit they leave the mother and say nothing about her, how it was with her, but only about the fruit. Therefore it cannot be concluded from these words that Mary became a woman after the birth, therefore it is not to be said nor believed. For all the words only indicate the miracle that she became pregnant and gave birth before she was asleep.

(43) The common tongue also has this way of speaking, as if I said, Pharaoh did not believe Moses until he was drowned in the Red Sea. Here it does not follow that Pharaoh believed after he was drowned, but the contradiction that he never believed. So when Matthew says that Joseph did not recognize Mary until she gave birth to her first 1) son, it does not follow that he recognized her afterwards, but the contradiction that he never recognized her afterwards.

(44) Pharaoh overtook the Red Sea before he came out. Nor does it follow that Pharaoh came out after the Red Sea had overtaken him, but rather that he did not come out. Neither does it follow that Mary was asleep afterwards, since Matthew says: "She was found to be with child before they sat together in the house" [Matth. 1, 18], but rather that she was not asleep.

45) In the 2) way also the Scripture speaks, Ps. 110, 1.: "God said to my Lord:

- 1) "first" is missing in the Wittenberg and Erlanger.
- 2) Wittenberg and Erlanger: these.

Sit at My right hand until I put your enemies at the footstool of your feet". It does not follow that Christ does not sit thereafter when His enemies are placed at His feet. Item, Gen. 28:15: "I will not leave thee till I fulfill all that I have spoken unto thee." Here God did not leave him after the fulfillment happened. Item Isaiah 42:4: "He will not look sour nor storm until He establishes justice in the earth." And much more like that; that such talk of Elpidii has no reason, and he neither respected nor perceived the Scriptures, nor the common language.

(46) Let this be enough for this time, that it may be proved strongly enough that Mary is a pure handmaid, and that Christ of Abraham's seed is a true Jew. For although more sayings may be used, these are the clearest. In addition, whoever does not believe a light saying of the divine majesty, it is to be assumed that he also does not believe any other dark saying.

(47) Thus no one can doubt that it is not impossible for God to make a maid pregnant without a man, since He also made all things from nothing. Therefore, the Jews have no reason to deny this, because they confess the omnipotence of God, and here Isaiah the prophet is clear.

The other part.

How to deal with the Jews, to convert them. 3)

(48) But because we are about to answer not only the useless liars who have carried me off in these matters, (4) but also would gladly serve the Jews, if we might bring some of them to their own right faith, which their fathers had, we will continue to deal with them, and present to those who wish to deal with them a manner and sayings which they shall use against them. For many of the sophists have also subjected themselves to this. But

3) This caption is missing in the Jena edition and in the Latin.

4) So the Wittenberg and Erlanger; Jenaer: austragen. Jonas: traduxerunt.

Just as they attacked it in their own name, nothing came of it; for they wanted to cast out the devil with the devil, and not with God's finger.

49] First of all, that the present faith of the Jews and the waiting for the future of Messiah is wrong is proved by the saying Gen 49:10, 11, 12, where Jacob, the holy archfather, says: "The scepter shall not be turned from Judah, nor a teacher from those at his feet, until the Shiloh come, and the nations shall cleave unto him. He shall bind his colt to the vine, and his ass to the noble branches. He shall wash his robe with wine, and his mantle with the blood of grapes. His eyes will be redder than wine, and his teeth whiter than milk.

(50) This saying is a divine promise, which cannot lie, and must be fulfilled, or else heaven and earth shall pass away. Thus the Jews could not deny that, since Jerusalem is disturbed, they have not had a scepter, that is, a kingdom or a king, for fifteen hundred years. Therefore the Shiloh or Messiah must have come before these fifteen hundred years, and before the destruction of Jerusalem.

(51) And if they would say that the scepter of Judah was also used at the time of the Babylonian prison, when the Jews were led into Babylon, and were captives seventy years, and yet at that time Messiah did not come, it must be answered that it is not so, for all the time of the prison the royal tribe remained in King Jechoniah, and afterward in Zorobabel, and other princes for ever, until Herod became king. For the scepter means not only kingdom but also principality, as the Jews well know. In addition, they had prophets everywhere, so that the kingdom or principality never fell, even though they were out of the country for a time, nor were they all driven out of the country, as has happened these fifteen hundred years, when they had neither princes nor prophets.

52. for this reason God created for them the prophets Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Haggaume, Zechariah at the same time, who told them how to get rid of Babylon.

lest they think that the saying of Jacob the archfather 1) was false, or that Messiah had come. But these fifteen hundred years they have had no prophet to proclaim to them that they should be delivered, which God would not have allowed to happen for so long a time, because he did not allow it to happen for such a short time that time. That he might abundantly shew that this saying must be fulfilled.

53) Since Jacob says: "Let the scepter last until Messiah comes," it clearly follows that such a scepter must not only not perish, but also become much more glorious than it ever was before Messiah came. For all Jews know well that Messiah's kingdom is to be the most glorious and greatest that has ever been on earth, as the 2nd, 72nd and 89th Psalms say. For David was also promised that his throne would last forever. Now the Jews must confess that their scepter is now nothing from fifteen hundred years ago, but that it should have become more glorious.

54 Therefore this saying is not to be understood of any other than Jesus Christ our Lord, who is of the tribe of Judah, of the royal house of David, and came in when the scepter came to Herod the stranger, and has been king until now, and remains these fifteen hundred years to eternity. For his kingdom is extended to the ends of the earth, as the prophets have said, and the nations have fallen to him, as Jacob says, and it is not possible that a greater king should be established on earth, of whose name more nations have boasted, than this Jesus Christ.

55 It is true that some of the Jews feel this saying, that it penetrates mightily and is deceiving; therefore they seek some wild help and evasion, which, if one pays attention to it, even sees itself; as when they say here that Shiloh is not called Messiah or Christ; therefore the saying should not penetrate them. His name is not Shiloh or Messiah; we do not deal with the name, but with the person, that the same shall come to pass when the scepter is turned from Judah.

1) So the Jenaer. Instead of "Jacob, the archfather" the Wittenberg and the Erlangen have: "Jacobi". Jonas: Patriarchae.

will. Such a person cannot be found, except JEsu[m] Christ; or the saying is false. He will never be a cobbler or a tailor, but a Lord, to whom nations will fall, so that his kingdom will be more glorious than the scepter ever was before, as has been said.

(56) So also is the remedy, when they say, The nations that fall to him may be the Jewish people alone, and Shiloh is called a lord. But be it as it may, I will not almost dispute what Shiloh means. 1) Although it seems to me that it means a man who is happy, who is well off, and who has enough and gives enough. From there comes the little word Lalve, which means, copia, felicitas, abundantia, full sufficiency of all goods, as Psalm 122,

7: Et abundantia in turribus tuis: It is all full and enough, and is well, that I would like to call Schilo in German: Wohlfahrt.

(57) Now his name is called Lord, or welfare, or prosper, or felix, there is nothing said that it should mean one of the former kings, princes, or teachers; for the scepter of Judah certainly comprehends all who have been kings or princes of the tribe of Judah, except this Shiloh, who is here singled out and preferred to all those who have had the scepter of Judah, as even a special one, because he says, "The scepter of Judah shall endure until Shiloh. What kind of speech would this be to me, that I would make Shiloh one of those who have had the scepter of Judah and the nations, since the saying here is that Shiloh is to come after all of them as a glorious and great king, and that no one is to come after him? Why else would he not have said so much more: The scepter of Judah shall last forever, and not wait for Shiloh?

58) Therefore Christ's kingdom is certainly described here so masterfully that before him the scepter of Judah should have many kings, 2) until he himself came and took it alone forever, so that no one would succeed him, nor would any other king from 3) the tribe of Judah. This indicates that his king

The kingdom was to be spiritual, succeeding the physical kingdom, for no person can have an eternal kingdom if he is mortal and rules in the flesh.

059 Therefore the scepter of Judah was established from David until Shiloh, when it was in the flesh, and had kings in the flesh one after another; but when Shiloh was come, it abideth in one person for ever, and hath no more kings one after another.

(60) From this it follows that this Shiloh must first die and then rise again from the dead. For since he is to come from the tribe of Judah [Gen 49:11], he must be a true natural man, mortal like all the children of Judah. Again, because he is to be a special king before all who have had the scepter of Judah until him, and is to reign alone for and 5) for ever, he cannot be a mortal man, but must be an immortal man; He must leave this mortal life through 6) death, and through resurrection take on an immortal one, that he may be sufficient for this saying, and become a Shiloh, to whom all the world belongs, and be a true living man, and King of the tribe of David, and yet immortal, eternal, invisible, and so rule spiritually in faith. But these lovely speeches are still too high and too heavy for the Jews.

011 But if they say, Yea, hath not this Jesus yet done that which Jacob saith afterward of this Shiloh, namely, "He shall bind his colt to the vine, and his ass to the precious branches; he shall wash his garment in wine, and his mantle in the blood of the grape." Answer: A foolish man might understand this, as if this Shiloh should become such a rich king that the wine would be as cheap as water in his time, since one washes clothes with it 2c.

(62) But we have seen from the foregoing that this Shiloh is to reign forever, a single person, that he has no heir after him, which also all the prophets say.

1) Wittenberger and Erlanger: means. Jonas: significet.

2) So the Jena. Wittenberg and Erlangen: should. "Kings" inserted by us according to the Latin.

8) Jonas: de tribu Judae. In all editions: on.

4) "den" is missing in the Jena.

5) So the Jenaer. Wittenberg and Erlangen instead of "for and for" - "furt".

6) "durch" is missing in the Wittenberg and the Erlanger. Jonas: per mortem.

Therefore, it may not be a kingdom in the flesh, in mortal perishable goods and beings.

(63) And though it did not compel 1) that this wine and vine should be spiritual, yet the manner and nature of speech and words compelled it. For what praise would it be to praise such a glorious kingdom above all kingdoms with these four pieces, namely, to bind his fill to the vine, and his ass to the noble branches, to wash his garment with wine, and his mantle with the blood of grapes? Could he find no other praise than what concerns drinking? Must such a king have nothing but wine? Item, is there nothing else praiseworthy about him, except that his eyes are redder than wine, and his teeth whiter than milk? What does it help a kingdom, 2) that he has white teeth, reddish eyes, and a filler tied to the vine?

(64) I suppose it is said of other riches; why does he not rather say, he will wash his garment in balsam or myrrh? That would be even more delicious. Who ever heard of wanting to wash clothes with wine? Item, why does he not say: he will harness his horses in wheat? Who ever heard of wanting to tie donkeys to the vine? What is the point of tying donkeys to vines and clothes to wine? It's all a nonsensical thing to say. Wine spoils clothes; the donkey is better with thistles than with grapevines; a horse would be just as well with a grapevine to eat the leaves. Therefore, such clumsy speech violently penetrates the spiritual mind.

So why does he praise him for his red eyes and white teeth? Is there no other beauty in his body but red eyes and white teeth? What kind of praise is this against such a magnificent great king? It is customary to praise great kings with a strong, beautiful body, but mostly with a great mind, prudence, mercy, strife, power and magnificent deeds and virtues. But here only his eyes and teeth are praised, which is more the praise of a woman.

than of a man, let alone of such a king.

There is no doubt, therefore, that the Spirit through Moses, in such words, portrays to us this man in a spiritual kingdom, how it is to be run and governed. But now is not the time to go into this at length, because we have had enough of it for this time, that herewith the Jews are mightily denied that the right Shiloh or Christ must have come long ago, because they have been so long deprived of the kingdom and principality, and also of the prophets, although here the clear text stands strong and testifies that with the tribe of Judah the scepter shall remain until the righteous king comes, when it shall first begin to be right.

67 Thus the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ agrees very well with this saying. For a principality remained with the Jews until he came, but after his coming it was destroyed, and at the same time he began the eternal kingdom, in which he still reigns forever, and is also irresistible from the tribe of Judah. But because he was to be an eternal king for his person alone, it could not be that he ruled temporally and worldly; for what is temporal passes away. Again, because he had to be David's natural seed, it could not be otherwise than that he would be a natural, mortal, temporal, transitory man.

68 Now the two are opposed to each other, to be temporal and to reign forever. Therefore it must be separated, that he should die in time and pass away from this life, and rise again from the dead and live, that he might become an everlasting king. For he must ever live, if he is to reign, because a dead man cannot reign; so must he ever die, if he is to change this temporal life, in which he must come from necessity, that the scripture might stand, which had promised him a natural blood, to David and Abraham.

(69) So now he sits and reigns, and has the noble office in himself, that he binds his fillings to the vine and washes his garment in the red wine, that is, he governs the consciences with the holy gospel. This is a gracious sermon of God's mercy.

1) Walch and the Erlanger: "erzwinge"; the old editions: "erzwänge".

2) Jenaer: "kingdoms" with the reading _König" in the margin, which the other editions have in the text. Jonas: ad florem regni.

of forgiveness of sins, of redemption from death and hell, of which all who believe it with all their hearts will be confident, joyful and drunk with the abundant consolation of God's grace. But this interpretation will not be respected by the Jews until they first come and realize that Christ must have come according to this saying; therefore we leave it until his time.

70 From this saying there is also a reasonable cause to prove that this Shiloh must have come at the time when our Jesus Christ came, and can be no other than the same Jesus, namely: The saying says that to this Shiloh nations shall fall or cling. Now I ask the Jews, when was there ever such a man from the Jewish tribe, to whom so many people clung, as to this Jesus Christ? David was a great king, Solomon also; but their kingdom never extended further than Syria, the smallest part.

This Jesus is accepted by the whole world as a Lord and King, so that the saying of the other Psalm may be fulfilled in him, when God says to Messiah: "I will give you the Gentiles for a possession, and your inheritance as far as the world is. Such a thing has ever come true in our JEsu, since the scepter was taken from the Jews, as before, and has never happened in any other Jew. Since Shiloh was to come at the end of the scepter of Judah, and since no other time fulfilled such sayings, this Jesus must certainly be the right Shiloh, whom Jacob means.

The Jews must confess that the Gentiles have never so willingly surrendered to a Jewish man as to a lord and king as this Jesus. For though Joseph was a great man in Egypt, yet he was not lord nor king in Egypt; and though he had been, yet Egypt was but a small thing compared with this kingdom, which all the world giveth to this JEsu.

73] Item, neither Daniel nor Mordecaius was king in Babylon or in Persia, though they were great men in the army.

74. and is wonder that the Jews have the not moved to believe in this Jesus, their own blood and flesh, on whom the sayings of Scripture rhyme so powerfully and evenly, because they see that we Gentiles hold so much, so hard, so firmly to him, that many thousands have shed their blood for his sake.

75 They know well that the Gentiles have always been naturally more hostile to no people than to the Jews, and do not want to suffer their dominion, nor their laws, nor their rule; how then should it be that they should so willingly and continually go among these Jews, and confess him King over all kings, Lord over all lords, body and soul, if there were not here the true Messiah, to whom God, according to this saying and other sayings, has made the Gentiles favorable and submissive with great wonder?

76) The other saying is Dan. 9, 24, where the angel Gabriel speaks to Daniel about Christ in the most clear way, saying: "Seventy weeks are appointed for your people and for your holy city, that the transgression may be controlled, forgiveness sealed, iniquity atoned for, and eternal righteousness come, and the prophecy and vision be fulfilled, and the Holy of Holies be anointed.

77. v. 25 ff: "Mark therefore, and take heed: From the time that the saying goeth forth, that Jerusalem shall be rebuilt, seven weeks and threescore and ten weeks, even unto the prince Messiah, shall the gaff and the wall be rebuilt in time of trouble. And sixty and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, and they shall not be. But the city and the holy place shall destroy the people of the prince that shall come, and they shall make an end of it with fierceness. And when the strife is ended, there shall remain a certain desolation. But he will confirm the covenant among many in One Week. And in the half of the week shall cease sacrifice and meat offering" 2c.

Help God, how this saying has been used so many times among Jews and Christians that one would despair of taking anything certain from it! Well then, we will ever conclude so much from it that the

The right Messiah must have come a thousand and five hundred years ago, as we think of our Jesus Christ, and we want to save the reckoning and interpretation to the last, and say first of all: Neither a Jew nor anyone can deny that the angel Gabriel speaks here of the rebuilding of Jerusalem after the Babylonian prison, which was done by Nehemiah.

79) On the other hand, he cannot speak of any destruction of Jerusalem, except that which happened afterward by the Roman emperor Titum, after the ascension of our Lord about the fortieth¹) year; for after Jerusalem was rebuilt,²) it was never destroyed, though it was won in the days of Maccabeorum. From this we conclude powerfully and irrefutably that the Messiah, of whom Gabriel says here, must have come before this disturbance; that is ever, I think, certain and clear enough.

It is true that the Jews have long felt this powerful conclusion, have protected themselves even fearfully with many a wild gloss, and make something else out of this Messiah than the right Messiah, namely the king Cyrum in Persia, whom Isaiah calls a Messiah in the 45th v. 1, whom the queen Tomyris³) slew in Scythia 2c. But this and the like are vain words of defense and wilful evasions, without any reason, therefore it is soon misplaced, namely thus:

These seventy weeks (saith Gabriel) shall run upon such a Messiah, that in his time, when the weeks are expired, sin and iniquity shall be put away, and forgiveness and everlasting righteousness shall come, and the prophecy and vision shall be fulfilled. Now I ask both Jews and every man, whether in the days of Cyrus such things were done? For in the days of Cyrus, and after his days, there was no righteousness in the earth, save that which was before and after in the days of other kings; neither was there righteousness in the days of David and Solomon much greater than in the days of Cyrus.

Nor does the Scripture call it eternal righteousness. Therefore this righteousness must be much higher than it was in the days of David, the most holy king, let it be said that Cyrus the Gentile had such righteousness in his day.

82] Further, since Gabriel says here that the city of Jerusalem will be rebuilt in seven weeks, and after that the Messiah will be cut off sixty-two weeks, how can it be King Cyrus who was slain before the seven weeks began, or at least, if their account is true, before Jerusalem was rebuilt? How can it be the same Messiah, who was slain before Jerusalem was rebuilt, and who was cut off after sixty-two weeks, after Jerusalem was rebuilt?

So we have that their word of defense is wrong, and this saying of Cyro cannot be understood. Since, according to Cyro, the Scriptures call no Messiah but the one, the right Messiah, and since such great things cannot be the same for a temporal king, we conclude, and forcibly overcome the error of the Jews, that the right Messiah has come after the rebuilt one, and before the destroyed Jerusalem. For no Messiah has ever been killed before the destroyed Jerusalem without our Lord Jesus Christ, whom we call Messiah, that is, Christ or the Anointed One. Therefore let us now see the text, how powerfully it refers to our Lord Jesus Christ.

Invoice of the weeks Danielis. ⁴⁾

84 But I must speak before them that know the histories of the kingdoms: for they that know them not shall not understand me well. The most certain thing in this interpretation is to reckon back to the time when Jesus was baptized and began to preach. To the same time Gabriel speaks, when he says: "Until the prince Messiah", as if he should say: I do not speak until the birth of Christ, but to the principality of Christ, when he began to rule, to teach, to master, and to set himself up as a duke, who should be followed, as

4) This caption is missing in the Jena edition and in the Latin.

1) Wittenberger: dreissigst, also so in Latin.

2) Wittenberger and Erlanger: ward. Jonas: instaurata est

3) In the editions: "Thamyris". But Justin, Histor, ex Trogo Pompejo, lib. I, cap. 8, calls it:

also the evangelists, and especially Marcus [Cap. 1, 14.] and Peter [in the] Acts of the Apostles [1, 22.], mentioned Christ's being after the baptism of John, and Lucas also [Cap. 3, 23.], where it is to be assumed; but there Christ was thirty years old.

85 Now it is undoubted by all who know the Scriptures that Gabriel does not speak here of day weeks, where seven days make a week, but of year weeks, where seven years make a week, as the Scriptures are wont to say, that therefore seventy weeks all make four hundred and ninety years.

86) Now if you count back from the thirtieth year of Christ through the Greek and Persian kingdoms to four hundred and ninety years, you come to the twentieth and last year of Cambyses, the third king, or the other king after Cyro in Persia, who allowed Cyrus to build the temple in Jerusalem, 2 Chron. 36:22 and Ezra 1:1, 2, 3. 36, 22. and Ezra 1, 1. 2. 3. But about six and forty years later Cambyses, and after him Darius Longimanus (who had taken an oath beforehand), allowed the city of Jerusalem to be built, which was done by Nehemiah; as all this is proved in the book of Nehemiah and Ezra; so that the seventy weeks of Nehemiah's journey from Persia, that is, beginning about the seventh year of Darii Longimani, are the same as our Christ.

(87) Gabriel says, "Seventy weeks (that is, four hundred and ninety years) are decreed for your people and your holy city," as if to say, "Your people the Jews and the holy city Jerusalem have four hundred and ninety years left, after which they will both be finished. How this is to be done, he says, "That the transgression may be stopped, and forgiveness be sealed, and iniquity be atoned for, and everlasting righteousness come, and prophecy and vision be fulfilled," that is, that enough may be done for all sin, and forgiveness of sin be proclaimed, and the righteousness of faith be preached, which is everlasting in the sight of God, of which all the prophets and all the Scriptures say, as Paul Rom. 1:17 and Peter Acts 2:17 and following. 2, 17. ff. testify; for until then there was only sin and works righteousness, which is temporal and not valid before God. I

But I know well that the Hebrew word Hatuth [xxxxx] is interpreted here by some for sin, which I have interpreted forgiveness, as Moses uses it, and Ps. 51, 4, not without cause.

88. Then he shows when the seventy weeks began, saying: "From the time that the word went out to rebuild Jerusalem (that is, in Nehemiah's time, in the twentieth year of Cambyses) until Messiah the Prince (that is, until Christ's baptism in the Jordan), there are seven weeks (that is, nine and forty years, during which Jerusalem was rebuilt in fearful times, as Nehemiah's book teaches) and "two and threescore weeks" (that is, after Jerusalem was built, 434¹⁾ years), which together make nine and threescore weeks, that is, 483 years, there is still one week missing, that is, seven more years, so that the full seventy weeks, that is, 490 years; what shall now happen in the same week, he shows and says:

89. "And after two and threescore weeks (hear, about the first seven weeks of anxious rebuilding) shall Messiah be cut off" (this did not happen in the beginning of the last week, but immediately in the middle, for Christ preached four and a half years), and he speaks "cut off," that is, taken from this life into the immortal life, by death and his resurrection. "And they shall not be his" (that is, those who crucify him and drive him out of this world shall no longer belong to him and be his people, but [he] shall adopt another people), he declares, saying how they shall not remain unpunished drum, saying:

90. "And the city and that which is holy shall be destroyed by a people of a prince that shall come (that is, Titus, the Roman emperor), and it shall come to an end with tempest" (that is, be disturbed with storm and violence, as with a flood). "And when the strife shall have an end, there shall remain a certain desolation." So all this came to pass. For Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed with terrible severity, and never again in the hands of the Jews nor to their former power, however high it was tried that they had been before, and is now

1) In the editions erroneously: "441".

The people of the world are not going to be able to deny that this saying and the work before their eyes are one thing.

91. but in the one week he will confirm the covenant among many." These are the four and a half years that Christ Himself preached, and four and a half years after that the apostles, during which seven years the gospel (which is the covenant of God with us, that He will be gracious to us through Christ) went forth with the greatest vigor, and has never been so loud and powerful since that time. For soon after the time heresy and error [began to] mingle with it. "And in the midst of the week the sacrifice and meat offering shall cease," that is, the law of Moses shall cease to be in force, because Christ shall fulfill all things by his suffering four and a half years of preaching, and shall cause new sacrifices to be preached thereafter 2c.

92 Now tell me, where shall we find a prince, or Messiah, or king, to whom all these things rhyme, but to our Lord Jesus Christ? Because the Scriptures and history so powerfully coincide with each other, the Jews have nothing to say against it. For they are well aware of their distress, which is immeasurably greater than they have ever suffered; so that they cannot show any sin so great that they would have deserved it, because they do not consider it a sin that they crucified Jesus; otherwise they would have committed greater sins before, and suffered less punishment, and it would be impossible that God should have left them so long without prophets, when it should not be over with them, and all the Scriptures would have been fulfilled.

93 There are also more sayings: as, the Haggai 2, 10. where God speaks of the rebuilt temple: "The secrecy of this last house will be greater than the first", which also mightily smuggles. Item, the Zach. 8, 23.: "At that time ten people from all Gentile languages will take hold of a Jewish man's hem, and say: We want to go with you, because we have heard, that the Lord may be with you"; 1) and many more; but it is too long to go into all of them in detail, and for the time being these two previous sayings are enough to begin with.

But whether it would offend the Jews that we confess our Jesus to be a man, and yet a true God, we also want to correct it strongly from the Scriptures in time. But it is too hard at the beginning. Let them first suck milk, and at first recognize this man Jesus as the true Messiah; then let them drink wine, and also learn how he is true God; for they are too deeply and too long deceived that they must be dealt with cleanly, as it is all too imaginary to them that God may not be man.

95 Therefore my request and advice is that they be dealt with carefully and taught from the Scriptures, so that some may come to you. But now we only drive them by force and deal with them with lies, blame them, they must have Christian blood so that they do not stink, and I do not know what is more foolish, that they are taken for dogs: what good should we do to them? Item, that one bequeaths them to work among us, to handle, and to have other human fellowship, so that one drives them to proliferate: how should 2) they improve?

If we want to help them, we must practice the laws not of the pope but of Christian love on them, and accept them kindly, recruit and work with them, so that they gain cause and space to be with and around us, to hear and see our Christian teaching and life. Whether some are stiff-necked, what of it? After all, we are not all good Christians either. Here I will leave it this time until I see what I have done. God give us all his grace, amen.

1) Wittenberger: "etc".

2) Wittenberger and Erlanger: should.

48b. Letter of Jonas to Andreas Rem. *)

1523.

Translated from Latin.

Justus Jonas wishes Andreas Rem, citizen of Augsburg, God's grace and peace!

Behold, dear Rem, the little book of Luther, which we have translated into Latin. So far we have noticed that many writings are scattered here and there, which are intended to convince the Jews of the coming of the Messiah; but none has yet come to light that is equal to it, one may look at the spirit or content of it. This booklet is full of such reasons that the Jews will not be able to answer anything thorough against it. Your suggestion, according to which you demand that this Scripture be presented in such a language, the use of which spreads widely among all peoples, Lutherus has not disliked. For there is hope that it will be much more useful in the Latin language than in German. The Jews, as we can see, have suffered the same fate as we have, in that they have been drawn away from the Word of God and from the simplicity of Scripture by the washing of their Talmud, just as we have been drawn away by the Scotist and Thomistic dreams. I have no doubt, however, that those to whom it is given to stick to the pure writings of Moses and the prophets will be not a little convinced and moved by these reasons. The rabbis (for that is their only endeavor, how they may fob off the rabble with an empty hope) invent that the scepter and the republic of the Jews in Babylon are still there, as if they could not be convicted of the lies there. Why do they not rather invent that the Jewish rule has been brought to the cities situated in the moon? But let us pray for this people, especially since there are not all Christians among us who bear the name of a Christian. If only God wanted the work with the Jews to go so happily from place to place, as wonderful the change and as glorious the works of God have been, which we have seen in such a short time with such a fast course of His word. Be at ease in the Lord. Wittenberg, 1523. 1)

1) In the old edition of Walch "1524". Compare the note to the superscription of this letter.

48c. D. Martin Luther's letter to Bernhard, a converted Jew. **)

1523.

Translated from Latin.

1. grace and peace from the Lord. The conversion of the Jews is almost everywhere in the whole world very infamous (infamus), not only among the Christians, but also among the Jews, in that they say it occurs

No one with an honest heart had converted from Judaism to Christianity, but whoever had done so had not been able to remain with the Jews because of a bad reputation due to a disgraceful deed, but those who had done so testified with experience,

*With this letter, Jonas sent to Andreas Rem, a citizen of Augsburg, the Latin translation he had made of the previous writing. The same is found in the Latin Wittenberg edition, Tom. The year 1524, which is found in the Latin Wittenberg and the old edition of Walch at the end of this letter, will not be correct, because De Wette, Vol. II, 450, mentions a single edition of the Latin translation published in octavo in Wittenberg in 1523. We have taken this letter from the old edition of Walch.

) This letter was added to Luther's De Jesu Christo, vero Judaeo et semine Abrahae, libellus, Viteb. 1523. 8. published in Latin by J. Jonas and is found in the Latin Wittenberg edition, Dow. VII, toi. 165 k. Otherwise still in Vermoorten, Analecta sacra superioris aevi, p. 221; in Strobel-Ranner, p. 95 and in De Wette, vol. II, p. 450. We here translated according to De Wette.

They were in the habit either of eating again what they had eaten, or of leaving the Jewish religion for some fictitious reason. Strange is the story that is said to have happened under the emperor Sigismund, when a court Jew petitioned the emperor with many requests that he be allowed to become a Christian. Finally he was accepted and baptized, but then he was led into temptation, although before the time and beyond his ability. For as soon as he had received baptism, the emperor ordered a double fire to be built, calling one the Jewish fire and the other the Christian fire, and commanded the baptized Jew to choose in which one he would rather be burned? For now (he said) you are baptized and holy, you will hardly become better in the future. Then this wretched man, as a testimony to his faith, which was either falsely pretended or even weak, chose the Jewish fire, jumped into it as a Jew, and let himself be burned as a Jew. The story of the will of a baptized Jew in Cologne, along with many others, is well-known enough.

2. But I believe that the cause of this evil rumor is not the stubbornness and malice of the Jews, but rather their gross ineptitude and ass-like ignorance; But then also the exceedingly vicious and impudent life of the popes, priests, monks and schools, since they have not inspired a spark of light or fire in the Jews, neither by doctrine nor by Christian conduct, but by everything that can only be repugnant to them, by darkness and error of their human statutes and by the example of their exceedingly evil life, they have turned away their hearts and consciences and made the Christian name alone known to them, so that one can rightly point to them the saying of Christ, Matth. 23:15: "Woe to you, scholars of Christ and Pharisees, who wander over land and water to make a fellow Jew; and when he is made a Jew, you make him a child of hell, more double than you are." Namely, they accuse the Jews, that they convert in a fictitious way, but they do not punish themselves, that they convert the same in a fictitious and godless way, yes, seduce from one error into another, which is once again so harmful. What honor, I pray you, would that be, indeed what madness would that be of a teacher, who would lecture only the most pernicious doctrines to a boy of good hope and docile head, and then teach him only the most disgraceful conduct in life, and yet afterwards wash his hands of him and say that the boy had not accepted the good from him? In this way, a whore mistress would teach a girl fornication and then accuse her of not behaving like a virgin. That the conversion and teaching of the Jews by our Sophists and Pharisees is completely the same, your own experience also bears witness to this.

But because the golden light of the gospel now rises and shines brightly, there is hope that many of the Jews will be converted sincerely and honestly and be drawn out of the world 1) to Christ, as you and some others, who are the remnant of the seed of Abraham, who will be helped by grace. For he who began it will also accomplish it, and will not let his word come back to him empty. Therefore I have deemed it good to send this booklet to you, for the substantiation and fortification of your faith in Christ, whom [Christ] you have recently learned from the Gospel, and upon whom you have now also been baptized in the Spirit and born of God. And I desire that by thy example and work he [Christ] may be known among other Jews also, that they who are ordained beforehand may be called and come to their King David, who feeds and saves them, but whom our priests and Pharisees, who are ordained that this judgment should come upon them, reject with indescribable fury. Fare well in the Lord, and pray for me.

1) In the Wittenberg: ex animo - from the heart.

49. D. Martin Luther's letter to Jesel, Jew at Roßheim, why he denied him written intercession. *)

December 10, 1537.

To the careful Jesel, Jew of Roßheim, my good friend.

My dear Jesel! I would gladly act for you against my most gracious Lord, both with words and writings, just as my writing has served all of Jewry so much. But because your people so shamefully misuse my service and do things that we Christians do not have to suffer from them, they themselves have taken away from me all the support that I could otherwise have received from princes and lords.

2 For my heart has been, and still is, that mail should keep the Jews friendly, thinking whether God would graciously look upon them and bring them to their Messiah; and not thinking that they should be strengthened and made worse in their error by my favor and encouragement.

3. if God gives me time and space, I will write a booklet, if I can win some of your paternal tribe¹) of holy patriarchs and prophets, and bring them to your promised Messiah. Although it is altogether strange that we should provoke and entice you to your natural Lord and King, as your forefathers before, when Jerusalem still stood, provoked and enticed the Gentiles to the right God.

(4) Shall ye not think that we Gentiles are so hopeful and disgusting; for without which Gentiles and Jews are always deadly?

We would not worship even your best king, let alone such a condemned, crucified Jew, if it were not for the power and authority of the right God, who would bring such things to the hearts of us trusting Gentiles, your enemies. For you Jews would never accept a hanged or righteous Gentile after his death for a Lord, you know that.

(5) Therefore, do not take us Christians for fools or geese, and consider for once that God would help you out of the misery that has now lasted for more than fifteen hundred years, which will not happen, because you accept your cousin and Lord, the dear crucified Jesus, with us Gentiles.

(6) For I have also read your Rabbins, and if it had been² in them, I would not have been so horned and stoned, it would also have moved me. But they can do no more than cry out that he is a crucified, condemned Jew, when all your ancestors have left no saint or prophet uncondemned, unstoned and unmarred, which [saints and prophets] must also be condemned, if your opinion should therefore be right, that Jesus of Nazareth is crucified and condemned by you Jews; for you have done it before and have done it all the way.

(7) Read how you have dealt with your king David, and with all godly kings, yea, with all holy prophets and men, and do not take us heathen so much as to be

1) In the editions "Stammen". Köstlin, Martin Luther, Vol. II, p. 442, in the table of contents of this letter has: "seeds", which may be the correct reading. The sense, by the way, remains the same.

2) "it" i.e. that Jesus is the Messiah.

*) This letter is found in the Wittenberg edition, vol. XII, p. 203; in the Jena edition (1568), vol. VI, p. 508; in the Altenburg edition, vol. VI, p. 1114; in the Leipzig edition, vol. XXII, p. 566; in the Erlangen edition, vol. 55, p. 186, and in De Wette, vol. V, p. 79 (in the latter two with the wrong date: "den 5. November"). Further, in the "Trostschriften", Jena, Rödingers Erben, sheet Ziijj, with the probably wrong date: "Mondags nach Barnabä", that is, the 18th of June. "Barnabä" fell in 1537 on Monday, June 11, so June 18 would probably have been called "Monday after Viti". It must be read: Monday after Barbara. In the "Trostschriften" there are several variants (De Wette VI, p. 513, note 1), some of which we have included. Otherwise, we give the text according to the Jena edition.

Dogs. For you see that your imprisonment will last too long, and yet you find us Gentiles, whom you consider your greatest enemies, favorable and willing to counsel and help, without our being able to suffer that you curse and blaspheme your blood and flesh, who has done you no harm, Jesus of Nazareth, and (if you could) rob all his people of all they are and all they have.

8 I also will be a prophet, though a pagan, as Balaam was; it shall not be that ye hope, for the time appointed of Daniel is long past; and though ye turn it so strangely, and from the Text do what you want, so the work is available.

(9) These things shall ye kindly receive of me for your admonition. For the sake of the crucified Jew, whom no one shall take from me, I would gladly do the best for all you Jews, except that you should not use my favor to harden yourselves. You know this very well. Therefore, you may present your letters to my most gracious Lord through others. Hereby commanded by God. Date from Wittenberg, Monday after Barbarä in 1537. year.

Mart. Luther.

50. D. Martin Luther's letter against the Sabbathers to a good friend. *)

March 1538.

Grace and peace in Christ. I have received your writing and the verbal advertisement of your skill, but I have not been able to answer as hastily as I would have liked, because of many unavoidable obstacles. Give me credit for that.

(2) Now that you have shown me how in the countries the Jews are now and then tearing down with their flesh and doctrine, and have already deceived some Christians into being circumcised, believing that the Messiah or Christ has not yet come, and that the law of the Jews must remain forever, and be accepted by all the Gentiles, (2c) I desire to know how this is to be done with the holy Scriptures; this time, until I have more time, I will give my advice and opinion by this letter.

¹⁾ The first part.

Whether Messiah had come.

(3) First of all, since the Jewish people are so hardened by their rabbis that it is difficult to win them over; for when they are referred to the Scriptures, they fall from the Scriptures to their rabbis, and say that they must believe their rabbis, just as you Christians (they say) believe your pope and decrees. This they answered me themselves, when I also once disputed with them, and led the Scriptures against them. Therefore, in order to strengthen the Christians, you should bring out the old argument, which Lyra and many others have used, and which the Jews still use today.

1) This superscription is from the Wittenberg edition.

*This writing appeared in March 1538 (on March 27 Luther sent it to Hausmann) at Wittenberg with Nickel Schirlentz. Then it is found in the editions: in the Wittenberg (1556), vol. V, p. 443b; in the Jena (1568), vol. VII, p. 31; in the Altenburg, vol. VII, p. 32; in the Leipzig, vol. XXI, p. 531, and in the Erlanger, vol. 31, p. 416. The good friend to whom this letter is attributed is, according to the testimony of Mathesius (Luthers Leben, St. Louiser Ausgabe, p. 62), Count Wolf Schlick zu Falrenau. We give the text according to the Erlangen edition, which brings the original print, comparing the Wittenberg and Jena editions. This writing was translated into Latin by Justus Jonas (1539). It is included in the Latin Wittenberg edition, Tom. VII, fol. 215b; we have also used this translation to correct readings.

The people of the world are not able to answer anything honestly from this, although they have disgracefully perverted much scripture about it, even contrary to their own oldest teachers, of which there is neither time nor space to speak now.

4 And this is the argument: The Jews are now 1500 years outside Jerusalem in misery, that they have neither temple, worship, priesthood nor principality; and therefore their law lies with Jerusalem and all the Jewish kingdom in ashes, so long ago. They cannot deny this, because their miserable status and experience, and the place that is still called Jerusalem, which lies desolate and without Judaism before the eyes of all the world, relegates them too well and too grossly. So they cannot keep Mosi's law, because only in Jerusalem, as they themselves must know and confess; because their priesthood, principality, temple, sacrifices, and what Moses has established for them and on them by divine command, they cannot have or hope for outside Jerusalem. That is one thing, and almost certain.

5. Now you shall ask: What is sin, and what is its name, because God has punished them so horribly that they have to live in misery for so long without priestly, princely, that is, without Moses' 1) foundation and rule, without sacrifice, and other ordinances of the law, especially without Jerusalem: For God's promise is there (as they also boast) that their law shall remain forever, and Jerusalem shall be God's own dwelling place, and both princes of the tribe of David and priests of the Levites shall always remain before God; as the prophets and Scriptures are full of such promise, as they know, and (as said) they boast; and has such a glorious, mighty, manifold promise been lacking now for fifteen hundred years, as they unfortunately well feel?

(6) Therefore, since it does not rhyme to blame God for not keeping His promise and lying fifteen hundred years, you should ask what is wrong, for God cannot lie or deceive. To this they will and must answer: it is the fault of their sins; if the same are atoned for God will keep his promise and send Messiah. Now stand firm (as I said) and ask: How are such sins called? For such terrible, long, horrible punishment indicates that they must have horrible, horrible sin upon them, the like of which has never been heard from the world. For so long a time God has never tormented any of the Gentiles, but has recently executed them; how then should he torment his own people for so long, and so torment them that they still know no end of it, nor can they know 2)?

(7) Now it is nothing for them to say that it is because of their sins, and yet they cannot name those sins; they would just as soon say that they have not committed any sin, because they are not guilty of any sin that they can name, and thus are unjustly punished by God. Therefore, you should press hard for them to name such sin. If they do not do so, you will have gained so much that they will deal with lies and nothing will be left to believe them.

(8) If they call it sin, mark them well, for this argument grieves them. And even if I were a Jew, and Abraham born of his womb, and also most diligently taught by Moses, I would truly know nothing to answer it, and would have to leave Mosaic Judaism and become what I would.

9 Some of their rabbis, to comfort and blind their poor people, answer thus: this sin is that their fathers worshipped the calf in the wilderness, such sin they shall now atone for, until 2c. Is this not terrible blindness? And what is this before those who read the Scriptures? For if this sin should be so great, why did God afterwards do so much good to the people of Israel, for and for such miracles through prophets, kings, also peasants and women, as the books of Moses, Joshua, Judges, Kings 2c. testify? Which he would not have done if he had not graciously forgiven all sin, not to mention this one, which was punished at that time. Why did he not at that time, for the sake of such sin, just as much

1) Wittenberger and Erlanger: "Mosisch".

2) "nor know" sehlt in the Wittenberger.

would have left his people, but, regardless of such sin, brought them into the Promised Land and done all good, exalted and honored above all the Gentiles? If he now keeps his Messiah back because of this sin, atoned for at that time, he might also have said at that time: I will not bring you into the land, nor honor you as highly as I have promised; for you have done such sin, which I will never forget, nor forgive.

(10) If at that time he did not let any sin hinder him from keeping his promise, as he had spoken to Abraham, as he 1) has never left his promise for the sake of men's sin: how should he now so long forgive his Messiah for the sake of such sin, whom he has so gloriously promised that David's throne and the priests' sacrifices shall not cease before him? Ah, many other sins happened at that time under Moses, than with BaalPeor, with many temptations of God 2c., on which they are severely punished, as Mosi's books show; why do they not bring them here either? Do you say, dear friend, to such Jews: it is a foolishness, which they themselves know, or should know.

11) For this reason the Messiah was not yet promised to David at that time, so that such a sin of the calf cannot apply here 2). Therefore let them name other sins, because of which they suffer such miserable misery. If they name one or several, then I ask very kindly, you will ascribe them to me quickly, then I will let an old fool and merciful Christian quickly make a stone knife, and become a Jew, and I shall not only have the limb, but also the nose and ears circumcised. But I know that they cannot name any.

12) For the Scripture says that before the Babylonian prison the Jews committed many more and greater sins than they can indicate in the Roman prison, and yet the Babylonian prison lasted no longer than seventy years, with prophets, princes, rulers, and rulers.

I will say later that I am firmly and almost comforted by the heat. But in this Roman prison he is none, and yet the terrible punishment is there before his eyes. Tell me, who can, what is the sin? Dear Jew, tell me, what is the name of the sin for which God is so long angry with you and does not send His Messiah?

13) On the other hand, if the Jews could call the sin that God calls it A or B, which they cannot do, their cause is not helped by it, they must still be understood in the lie. For Jeremiah 31:31-34 is written: "Behold, the days come, saith God, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah. Not like the covenant I made with their fathers when I took them by the hand and brought them out of Egypt, which covenant they did not keep, and I had to force them. But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the children of Israel after that time, saith the LORD; I will put my law in their hearts, and write it in their minds; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: and no man shall teach another, nor brother another, saying, Behold, know the LORD: but they shall all know me, both great and small, saith the LORD; for I will forgive their iniquity, and will remember their sin no more."

(14) There are many things in this beautiful saying, but because the Jews like to slip and flutter from one to the other when they feel that they are being hit, you should save all the other things for this time, and stand firm on the thing for which it is now introduced, namely, that the Jews say, "The future of the promised Messiah will be spoiled because of their sins. Against this God says here: "He wants to make a new, different covenant or law", not like Moses' covenant or law, and that nothing should hinder Him that they have sinned; yes, precisely because they have not kept the same covenant, He wants to make a different, new covenant that they can keep, and will not let their sin, or that they have not kept His previous covenant, move them, but will be gracious to them.

1) "he" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) Wittenberger and Erlanger: "nothing here". Jenaer: not here. Jonas: Uue uou sto.

Finally, forgive the sin and remember it no more.

15 You must now rest on this piece and reproach the Jews. For how does it read, how does it rhyme? The Jews say that Messiah's future is hindered because they have not kept God's covenant, but have sinned against it; God says, No, I will not look upon such sin, and that they have not kept my covenant shall not hinder me, but my new covenant shall come all the more because they have not kept that covenant, that such sin may be forgiven and forgotten forever through the new covenant.

(16) Now is the time to ask, Who is the one who is the Jew or the one who is the Lord? For they are against each other. Jew says yes; God says no. But there is to be no question at all, but it is proved that the Jews lie, and their excuse is nothing, that Messiah should be deceived because of their sin; and God remains true that he will not let any sin hinder him, but has kept his promise and Messiah's future, and still keeps it, regardless of their sin, and that they have not kept his covenant.

(17) Here you may also hold up to the Jews the ninth chapter of Deuteronomy, or the fifth book of Moses, in which Moses, with a mighty sermon and many words, tells them how they do not take the promised land of Canaan because of their righteousness, because they are a stiff-necked, wicked, disobedient people, always angry with God, and until this very day, "as long as I have known you (v. 24), you have been disobedient to the Lord. 24.) you have been disobedient to the Lord", but because of this they take it that God wanted to punish the Gentiles who dwelt within, and for the sake of His promise, which He had sworn to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob. As you will find further in the same chapter, whoever wants to read and remember it.

18 Therefore, Moses himself testified that the Jews were not brought into the land of Canaan because of their righteousness or repentance, but because of God's promise, which he had sworn to the patriarchs, and he did not let himself be hindered from keeping such an oath, although the Jews deserved by their sins that he should destroy them to the ground where he was.

Moses also indicates in his prayer in the same chapter, v. 27, that he has appeased God's anger with the single word that God should remember Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, who are now long dead, but their memory for the sake of the promise made to them, lived before God, and were able to do everything 2c.

19. If at that time God did not allow Himself to be hindered from keeping His promise and bringing it to the land because of the people's horrible sin, since the people's sin was obviously and clearly named and known, and everyone can read the Scriptures: How then, because of the sin of the people (which they themselves do not know, cannot name, nor know, nor does any scripture show, and no man can conceive), should he now so long delay, or not keep, such glorious mighty promises of Messiah, and become a liar because of the unconscious sin of the Jews?

(20) And how could the good king David come to believe that God's promise, sworn to him by God, should not be kept for the sake of the Jews' sins? because even his own sins, which he had committed and which are clearly mentioned and read in Scripture (as adultery, the murder of his pious servant Uriah, and blasphemy, 2c.), nothing prevented God's promises, which David repeated and praised at his deathbed, among his last words or testament: a firm and certain covenant was made by God to his house, as one reads in the 23rd chapter [v. 5] of the other part of Samuel, and thereby prophesies that the godless, unbelieving Jews shall be cut off and destroyed.

21. much more, how would the chief patriarch Abraham come to think that God's promise, which had been made to him so abundantly, long before no Jew had been born to Israel, let alone sinned, should not be kept to him for the sake of his descendants' sins, when he, holier than David, had not sinned after being called from Chaldea? The same may be said of Isaac and Jacob, to whom he also made and confirmed such a promise, and for this reason calls himself one God, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, throughout all the generations.

Scripture, and certainly for the sake of their disobedient children and descendants (as Moses calls them) could not have ceased to be their GOD, or become a liar; but the Jews, with such lazy excuse, make themselves liars and blasphemers.

22 Lastly, it is written in the first commandment that God will be angry with the disobedient children of Israel, to whom such a commandment is given, to the third and fourth generation. Zero are the Jews fifteen hundred years under the wrath of God, and there is still no end; in which years the account must give far more than three or four members, yet no Gentiles have ever been so long afflicted, who have never had any promise of God: how then should he forget promises made to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David and all the prophets so shamefully, and pardon them so long; nor yet indicate when the misery shall be ended? For the Scripture fully states that God would be and remain God to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their seed, and would not let David's throne fall or be missing, which has now fallen and been missing for fifteen hundred years, as they themselves must feel and grasp, if they could not see or hear it.

23. Since this is clear and evident that the Jews do not know how to name any sin, therefore God should forgive his promise for so long and thus be a liar in this; and whether they could name one or more, still become liars by God's word, since God convinces them that he will not abandon his promise to send from Messiah and to keep the Chair of David forever for the sake of their sin: it is evident from this that one of the two must be true: either Messiah must have come fifteen hundred years ago; or God must have lied (God forgive me for speaking so shamefully) and not kept His promise. And say it again, Messiah must have come fifteen hundred years ago, when the throne of David, the principality of Judah, the priesthood of Israel, the temple and Jerusalem were still standing, when the law of Moses and his established service of God still lasted, and the people still dwelt in regiment with one another at Jerusalem, before everything had so horribly disintegrated and perished.

is desolate; or, if not, God has lied. This cannot be denied by the Jews, who are otherwise still in their right mind; the stubborn may twist and turn, wrestle and wring, 1) with whatever plots they want or like, so their makeshift and escape speech is nothing against such public truth.

(24) Now that Messiah has come and God's promise has been kept and fulfilled, but they have not accepted or believed it, but have continued to lie to God with their unbelief, What wonder is it then that God's wrath destroyed them, together with Jerusalem, the temple, the law, the principality, the priesthood, laid them in ashes, scattered them among all the nations, and did not cease to afflict them as long as they punished and blasphemed the divine promise and fulfillment in their unbelief and disobedience? For they were to have accepted from Messiah the new covenant promised by Jeremiah, and to have received the Messiah; who was commanded to teach them aright of the throne of David, priesthood, law of Moses, temple, and all things; as Moses writes in the fifth book at the 18th chapter [v. 15.], "A prophet shall the LORD raise up unto you from among your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear." For God speaks [v. 18.]: "he will put his word in his mouth and speak to them".

(25) Here they might make such a plea, that God has several times withheld His help because of sin; as when He let them be afflicted in Egypt for so long, and afterwards in the wilderness made forty days into forty years because of their sin, and at last left them in the misery or prison of Babylon for seventy years. Yes, when they come with it, they come justly, and ye shall accept this, that ye may seize them again in manifest falsehood and deceitfulness, and so shall ye say:

(26) God punishes sinners and tries His beloved saints with calamity, but He does not make His promise a lie or a lack of it, for He is the Truth Himself, and it is essential that He cannot lie. And therefore, when he had afflicted the children of Israel in Egypt and try them, he did not fail to keep his promise. Yes, that is probably more, before the children of Israel were created or born, also before Abraham had a child, God cared for them so diligently that he announced to Abraham, Gen. 15 Cap. [v. 13. ff.] 1) and promised that his seed, which he did not yet have, would be in misery for four hundred years, and after that he would go out with great possessions. He truly kept this promise, and after four hundred years he led them out of the Egyptian misery, even though there were enough sins, because they were strong enough against Mosi, as they themselves boast in 2 Mos. 14, 12: "Is it not that we said in Egypt, Arise, let us serve the Egyptians?"

1) "wingen" in all editions; probably as much as: winching.

27. The Jews have never had such a promise from their present misery; In addition, God gave the children of Israel patriarchs at that time who were great prophets, and sent Joseph before, who had to order the inn for them, so that they would be received honestly before the misery, and so God was always with them, and kept his prophecy and promise, so that they were sure how they would be led out of Egypt; as Joseph also said at his deathbed, and therefore ordered his bones to be taken out of Egypt.

But now, in their last Roman misery, there is none; there is no prophet, nor do they have any prophecy from the Scriptures as to how long such misery should last, and must, without a definite time, be so miserably afflicted, and go astray without prophets and God's word, which God has never done before, nor would do yet, if his Messiah had not come and his promises had not been fulfilled. For He promised that David's throne would not be missing, and that the sacrifice of the priesthood would not cease, and yet now, fifteen hundred years later, both David's throne and Mosiah's altar, along with Jerusalem, lie destroyed and desolate, and God is always silent, which He did neither in Egypt nor in the land of Israel.

He has done this to another wretch, and neither will he nor can he do this, that he should leave his promise.

029 So also in the wilderness, when they had been afflicted forty years, he forgot not his promise which he had made unto Abraham, that his seed should come into the land of Canaan, and possess it by inheritance; but brought them in even as he had spoken. But he had not appointed a time in how many days he would bring them in; and if they had not sinned, they would have come in shortly; But when they sinned, he promised them, even in anger, that they should come in at the first in forty years, according to the number of the forty days which the spies had spent in visiting the land, and because of their murmuring they became forty years of the forty days, as the text saith: nevertheless he kept his promise, and after forty years they came in, as he was angry with them.

30. He did not abandon them, but performed many miracles, made clouds and pillars of fire serve them day and night, fed them with bread from heaven daily, gave them water from rocks, meat and birds; He did not let their clothes and shoes be torn, built a tabernacle, ordered the tribes of Israel, was with Moses, Aaron and other prophets, punished Korah, Dathan, Abiram, and such like many good deeds that they might take hold of, that God would be with them, and not forsake them for their sin, but would keep His promise faithfully above and against all their manifold wickednesses, and such their sin and wickednesses are called there, and are not unknown.

But now, in this last misery, there is none. There is no sin named which they can denounce; there is no prophet, there is no appointed time, there is no sign, no miracle, no public benefit by which they might feel God's grace, nor a certain place nor place of their misery (as Egypt and the wilderness were), but always sit on the shovel and shovel; today they nest here, tomorrow they are driven out and their nests are destroyed; and there is no prophet here who speaks: Flee thither, or hither, but must also be uncertain of the place of their misery, and hover in the wind, where it is they blow away. Such things have never happened before, but Egypt, the desert and Babylon were certain places where they suffered misery, and always had God's word and prophets with them, also God's manifestation; but here it is too desolate, and has lasted too long, that David's throne lies desolate, and the law of Moses is omitted in the temple at Jerusalem, where it was established.

1) Here the old editions have erroneously: "Genesis 16. Cap.", which the Erlangen edition has reprinted. Although Walch improved this error and added the verse number, the Erlangen edition still kept the wrong chapter and added Walch's verse number.

32 Thus, when they were driven into misery to Babylon, God did not forget His promise, nor did He forsake His people, but appointed for them a certain time, namely seventy years, and a certain place, namely Babylon, and made them certain that for seventy years they would return to Jerusalem, and that their principality and priesthood would remain. For this purpose he gave them excellent prophets, such as Jeremiah and Ezekiel, Daniel and his companions, by whom they were comforted and preserved in the meantime; also by great miracles and benefits, which he did through Daniel, he showed that he was with them and had not left them. For also the royal person of Jehonia was highly exalted with the king of Babylon, above all kings, so that the throne of David and the priesthood did not perish, 1) but also the persons remained until the end of the misery, had also long before through Isaiah called the king Cyrum, who should make them free, Isa. 45, 1. who also prophesied much of the same prison before, and did not conceal the sin, but (as also Jeremiah did) called it clear, that one knows well for what sin they were punished.

Therefore these three punishments or miseries, as in Egypt, in the desert, in Babylon, cannot rhyme with this last Roman miseries, because there sin is manifest, prophecy and promise are there, prophets and persons are there, both of the throne of David and the altar of Moses are certain time there. And summa, this cannot be called abandoning nor forgetting divine promise, where God thus holds and stands against his people, thus diligently seizes and assures them; just as this cannot be called "abandoning", since he took care of the children of Israel in Egypt before they were born.

1) Wittenberger: raid.

Abraham determined the time before he had a child. Read Jeremiah chapter 30 and 31 and you will find God lamenting as if he were a weeping mother that his people of Babylon are in misery, even before they came into misery, regardless of their sin, because of which they were to be driven into misery.

How could he in this misery so miserably forget or omit his promise, or make himself so strange, since they have no sin to speak of, and yet this promise of Messiah is the most glorious and powerful, to which all other prophecy, promise and the whole law is directed, that the other promises (as in Egypt, in the desert, at Babylon) are to be esteemed quite insignificant compared to this main promise of Messiah? Has God so firmly held on to the lesser promises there and then, and so warmly comforted the people in small miseries, determined time, shown Himself to be their faithful God with personalities and benefits and with all kinds of ways, and cared for them without ceasing: how is it possible? how is it believable? How does it make sense that in this terrible, long, great misery he should so completely fail to keep his glorious promise, which he made to David, "that his throne should remain eternal and firm", as David boasts in his last words in the 7th chapter of the 2nd book of Samuel, v. 13, and many more writings of the prophets, as Isaiah's, Jeremiah's, also do?

35 The Jews may say of sins, therefore they suffer what they will, for they lie; so God promised and swore not to their sin nor righteousness, but to David an everlasting throne. And even if he would not keep it for the Jews because of their sin, which they do not call sin, he would not lie to David or fail to keep it, to whom he had promised it, as he also sings in Psalm 89:3, v. 4, 5. Since David's throne now lies destroyed for fifteen hundred years, which, says God, shall not be destroyed nor fall, it is irrefutable that Messiah must have come fifteen hundred years ago,

2) Wittenberger: the minor. Jonas: minoribus.

3) In the editions, according to the Vulgate: in the "88th Psalm", and the throne of his father David and possess it forever; or God would have to have become a liar in his most glorious promise for the sake of wicked people and disobedient Jews. God did not want this, nor will He ever want this; but the Jews lie to God, and deceive themselves, that they blame God: He did not keep David faithful, nor faith, because He did not send the Messiah, in whatever way they would like, and as they pretend 1) and portray it to Him.

(36) Such an argument I know indeed, that, where there are still sensible Jews, must move them, even the hardened, nevertheless, push them a little; for they can muster nothing lasting against it. If they are not moved or pushed, we have nevertheless confirmed our faith that their idle lies and false talk can do us no harm. And if they do not speak to you properly on this argument, but flutter off to the side on other theidings, as they are wont to do, let them go and depart; for you can tell by this that they deal in theidings and lies.

The other, 2)

37) If you write that the Jews boast that their law shall remain forever, and we Gentiles must become Jews, you should answer: First, if it is true that the Messiah has come, then they themselves know that their law is over; for Moses alone shall last until Messiah, as he says Deut. 18:15, that they should hear the prophet whom God will raise up after him. And such a saying also goes among their own teachers: Cum venerit Sanctus Sanctorum, cessabit unctio vestra, that is, when the Holy One of all saints comes, your anointing will cease. Anointing means the priesthood and kingdom, instituted by Moses upon them and among them. For Messiah shall establish a new and better thing for the people of Israel and the See of David.

38 Secondly. How does it rhyme that their law should last forever, when it is now five-

1) Wittenberger: paint.

2) Here the Wittenberg edition has the heading: "Das ander Theil. Whether Moses' law should remain forever."

ten hundred years, both with priesthood, temple, principality and worship, lies in ashes? I mean yes, that is, the law ceases, for they cannot keep Mosiah's anointing or laws apart from the land and Jerusalem, as they cannot deny and well know. And surely God would not have let such a law fall nor lie so long, where he would have kept it forever for and for. Therefore you shall say to them, that they themselves first begin to keep Mosiah's laws and become Jews. (For they are no longer Jews, because they do not keep their law.) When they have done this, we will quickly follow, and become Jews also. But they must have begun fifteen hundred years ago, when they were still in the land and in Jerusalem, when they still had temple, priesthood, and government, and must have remained there, or must have done so, so that it would not have fallen or ceased for fifteen hundred years, and thus would not have lost its eternity, and even now would not have become so miserably un-Jews and without Moses.

39 Or if they have neglected to do this and have not done so, let them still go into the land and go to Jerusalem and build a temple, a priesthood and a principality, and establish Moses with his law, so that they themselves may become Jews and possess the land. When this is done, they shall soon follow us, and shall become Jews also. If they do not do this, it is utterly ridiculous that they should try to persuade us Gentiles to keep their law, which has now been rotten for fifteen hundred years and is no longer a law; and we should keep what they themselves cannot keep or keep as long as they do not have Jerusalem and the land. But if they let them dream that they will keep it by and by, when Messiah comes, we will remain free in the meantime, and will not believe in their dream until it comes true.

40 From this, my dear friend, you should understand how the Jews deal with lame, lazy jokes, that their Mosiah's law should remain forever, when it has now lapsed for fifteen hundred years and has not remained, and they do not yet know how long it should remain. But we, Christians, know that it shall remain forever.

and is completely abolished by Messiah, even among the true Jews and David's descendants; but not among us Gentiles, to whom such a law of Moses was never given, commanded or imposed. For since God Himself has let it fall for fifteen hundred years, it is good to reckon that He has left it out of consideration, and no longer inquires about the obedience or service of this law; otherwise He would not have let it fall, or at least have determined the time, and assured and written with new promises, and with prophets and people, how long He would have let it fall (as said above about other things), which He has not done. Therefore the law of Moses is finished, and not an everlasting law has been established, but an everlasting law has been left.

41. But that the Jews fight with the word Leolam, when Moses says: Such and such laws, which he gives them, they shall keep Leolam, that is, forever, they themselves, the peelers, know very well that it is a pure alfenzen to ape the unlearned in the Hebrew language. Because before me or one, which understands also a little Hebrew, they would not be allowed to pretend such Alfenzen, they wanted to joke then, or cause a laughter. Moses himself writes in Ex 21, 5. f., that if a servant, after he has served, does not want to leave his master, but remains forever, the master of the house shall pierce his ear to the post of the door with an awl (as a sign that he wants to remain in the house forever), and shall remain the master's servant forever. Here the Jews know well that neither lord, servant nor house remain forever, but must die, pass away, and everything be changed: nor is it called here Moses Leolam, that is, forever; which they themselves interpret: for and for, and without certain end with the children of men. Such examples are probably more in the Scriptures of the Leolam.

42 But if I were Moses, I would give a good shilling to my disciples the Jews. For I would say, "I have often used not only Leolam, but also these words: Ledorotham, Bevothechem, Ledorothchem, Moschvothechem, that is, as long as you last or remain.

in your dwellings, which cannot be understood otherwise than: it shall be kept by you forever, as long as you tarry or remain in your dwellings. Now they have been driven out of their dwellings, that is, out of the land of their dwellings, for fifteen hundred years, and have not remained the people whom Moses made them, and have had no dwelling place of their own for fifteen hundred years, nor any promise, nor any appointed time, how long they should be in misery and uncertainty without their dwelling place. Therefore Moses took good care of himself, because he did not want his foundation and law to be eternal any longer than his people would remain and keep their dwelling place; therefore, for this reason, Leolam cannot be called eternal, as it is otherwise called, where it is freely called eternal, without qualification, as God's promises are, and he himself is also.

43 Thus we Germans also use the word "eternal" when we say, "Shall I suffer or do these things forever? that is, as long as I live. And under the papacy, many perpetual endowments are established for the dead, that is, as long as it can last. And feudal estates are conferred hereditarily and forever, that is, as long as the estates and heirs remain or last. But where God, who is truly eternal, speaks of eternal things without qualification, there it is also the truly eternal thing; for he is able to make it eternal, like David's throne, Messiah and the eternal blessing that it brought to us lost people. For it changeth not, as the dwellings of the Jews, or the fiefs of the Gentiles, which change as a garment is changed, Ps. 102:27.

44 For this reason the Scripture separates the human leolam or eternal from the divine leolam in such a way that it adds a non, that is, it should not become different. As when Daniel, in the 6th, v. 26, says of Messiah, "His power is eternal, which passeth not away, and his kingdom hath no end." Here the word "eternal" is written; but in order that it be understood not as a human but as a divine "eternal," it is accompanied by the non, not passing away, no end. As also David Ps. 110, 4. prophesies of the eternal priest, Messiah: "God has sworn," that would have been enough of such a Lord's oath; but so that it would not be a temporal oath, it would not be a human oath.

And if this priest is to be eternal, that he is not eternal in a Mosaic or human way, but that there is no end, and that he is truly eternal.

And Isaiah in the 9th chapter, v. 7, where he also speaks of Messiah (as the Jews like to confess): "His reign will be great, and there will be no end of peace on the throne of David and his kingdom" 2c. Here the prophet does not let it be enough that Messiah, the Prince of Peace (as he calls him). Kingdom become great, but "there shall be no end of peace"; as if he wanted to say: He shall not only be eternal, but also unhindered eternal. And who knows (for I am not highly learned in Hebrew) whether the closed meme [x], which in this place shows the Hebrews a great deal of knot, as they think, means just this, that this Messiah's kingdom should be so eternally great; that it is not an open meme, which would like to be temporally eternal, but a closed meme, since nothing else should now come to pass, but which must be truly eternal.

46 But if the Jews here pretend to keep the law of Moses, even until now, as with circumcision; item, that they do not eat some fish and flesh 2c. is not yet fallen because of this; nothing is said. For we speak of the whole law of Moses, which they are bound to keep; especially the right great parts and bodies, as of the priesthood, principality, temple, worship, Jerusalem, and all the land, upon which the law of Moses proceedeth, and which it hath instituted. For whoever wants to keep Mosi's law must keep it completely, or his keeping is nothing, especially in the main parts, and is just as if I asked about the pot, and they wanted to show me the broken pieces or small pieces of the shattered pot. As also Isaiah in the 30th chapter, v. 14, needs such a likeness against them, that they should become like a shattered pot 1) to such small pieces that one may not find a shard of it to make fire or to draw water.

47 So here too we ask: where is the whole law of the priesthood, the temple, the city?

If the people of the country, and how a people should sit in the regiment, remained? then they show us their shattered pieces and small pieces from eating fish and meat 2c. Where 2) has a city or country ever been destroyed, from which slag, lumps 3) and pieces have not been found? Where does a house burn so completely that one would not find pieces, lime, stones, fires, nails, iron, glass, which remains in the ashes? Now if I asked about the house, and someone showed me a fire or two, or nails in the ashes, to persuade me that it was the house, then I asked: Dear, with what eyes should I look at him? Either I would have to take him for a mischievous boy, who mocked me on such a question; or, if I considered him to be without understanding, I would say: Oh, dear friend, such pieces may well indicate that there was a house here, but it is gone and no longer here.

(48) So the Jews, with the rest of their broken pieces and the dross from eating fish and meat, 2c. show us that they had the law of Moses, but it is no longer there, because the house, the government, the land, the city, the temple, and the whole right head and body of the law has been taken away and destroyed fifteen hundred years ago. If then they will not believe that their law is temporal and not eternal, let them take hold of it, as their land, Jerusalem, temple, Moshi's pen and laws are rent asunder, and they also are destroyed and scattered; let them call it an eternal thing. But we see that it has fallen fifteen hundred years, has ceased and come to an end, and will never rise again. For there is no prophet, no promise, that prophesies that it shall come again, as it was at Babylon and in Egypt; therefore the hope of the Jews is lost, because it has no foundation in the word of God.

49.⁴⁾ Thus circumcision is not the law of Moses, but was given to Abraham long before; as our Lord also testifies in John 7, v. 22: "Circumcision is not from Moses, but from the fathers," as the Jews cannot deny. Nor is it

1) In the issues: Pots. Jonas: lagna.

2) Wittenberger: How.

3) Grumpen----crumbs, lumps.

4) Here the Wittenberg edition has the superscription: "Of circumcision."

eternal, but had not existed before Abraham, and all was directed to the future Messiah, Abraham's seed; the same they should have heard. And circumcision is no further than to Abraham and his seed. For there are many examples in Scripture that God has accepted great kings and nations among the Gentiles, who are not compelled to be circumcised, much less to follow some of the laws of Moses. First of all, King Pharaoh and his princes and priests, no doubt also many of his people, who learned from Joseph to know the right God, as the 105th Psalm, v. 22, testifies of him, "so that he instructed his (the king's) princes in his own way, and taught his elders wisdom," and thus the Egyptians came to know God through Joseph, and yet were not burdened with circumcision, because they were not Abraham's seed; much less with Mosiah's law, which was not yet given.

50 After this Jonah was sent to Nineveh to preach repentance to them, and the text says: "The king with his princes and people have accepted faith in God and have become 1) devout, so that God will be gracious to them and turn away their punishment. These Ninevites came to grace even without circumcision and Mosiah's law, and received it through their faith and works. This is clearly shown by the prophet Jonah.

51 Thus also the wicked king of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar, was so strongly converted by Daniel's preaching and God's punishment that he had a public sermon preached in his name and commanded that the God of Israel should be considered the right God, he would also be the right God [Dan. 4, 31. f.]. Behold, this king will also be a believer in God and devout, no doubt many others with him in his kingdom: yet he will not be circumcised and will not be bound by any law of Moses, which Daniel would not have failed to point out and interpret to him, if he had not known that Mosiah's law was placed on the Jews alone, and circumcision on Abraham and his seed alone, until the right Master, Messiah, came from his tribe.

52. after that the king Darms and Cores in Persia became believers just by the same Daniel and other Jews, who have indicated to him the prophecy of Isaiah at the 45th Cap. V. 1. ff. that God would call the same king Cores by name, and also his own king or anointed one, and that he would gloriously proclaim that he should build his city Jerusalem for him and that he should release his people full of Babylon 2c. As he did, and publicly proclaimed his confession through his country, as God of heaven had commanded him 2c., 2 Chron. 36, 23. and Ezra 1, 2. and yet he is not circumcised, nor forced under the law of Moses, nor anyone in his kingdom of Persia; which Daniel and his assistants would not have allowed to happen, where they considered the law of Moses and the circumcision of the tabernacles necessary to interpret to the Gentiles, who were not Abraham's seed nor Moses' people. For if they had been necessary to keep them, such kings would not have learned enough from Daniel, nor would they have become true believers in God, nor would they have been saved; that would have been Daniel's fault.

(53) So Job, his household and friends were abundantly gifted with the knowledge of God and the faith, and were not circumcised nor forced under the Law of Moses. And there will have been many more of these people in the countries around, as Hiram, the king of Tyre in the time of Solomon, and others, who are not mentioned in the Scriptures, but nevertheless believed in the true God of Abraham, and thus were saved. And it is a wonder to see how Moses, through so many laws, is completely silent about circumcision, after the exodus from Egypt, when his law is concerned, and drives much less law upon the Jews, his people, so vehemently and to excess; as if he should say: Circumcision is not my law. For even in Exodus 12:43 ff, when he speaks of the strangers who want to eat the paschal lamb with the Jews, he says nothing more, except that no one should eat the paschal lamb uncircumcised, but does not force the strangers, either to eat the paschal lamb or to be circumcised, unless they want to keep the paschal lamb. Therefore it is a new thing that the Jews have proselytes, fellow Jews, from the Gentiles.

1) "are" is missing in the Wittenberger.

and called circumcision. Moses does not force the Gentiles to any of his laws without their will, because he alone is given to the people, led out of Egypt, as a prophet until Messiah, who should become prophet, master and lord of all the world.

54. Because the circumcision and Moses' law was not necessary to put on the kings and Gentiles in Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia and others 1) much more, who believed in the God of Abraham and were saved, uncircumcised and without the law of Moses, just at the time when it was highest and the people sat in regiment in Jerusalem and in the land: how then should we Gentiles owe zero to keep their circumcision and law, which is now forfeited, and they themselves cannot keep, because they have lost land, city, regiment, and all that Moses instituted, and have no promise that they shall ever get it again? From all this you can see how the Jews are afflicted with blindness, that they pretend to us Gentiles such unspoken lies and folly of their law, how it should be eternal and to be interpreted to all Gentiles, if it is fallen, and yet abandoned by God without all prophecy, finally and eternally; even before it was written, it never went further than it was given by God, except to Moses' people when he brought them out of Egypt, and to Abraham's seed until Messiah.

55: Now here you shall bring again for a conclusion the saying of Jeremiah Cap. 31:31, 32: "The days are coming, says God, when I will make a vain new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah, not like the covenant I made with their fathers when I took them by the hand and brought them out of Egypt, which they did not keep, and I had to force them, says the LORD. 2c. This saying causes the Jews great distress, because they wonder and struggle how to make their first covenant eternal; yet the text here clearly and brightly says that it should not be eternal, but that it should become another, new covenant. Let them now here 2) gau-

1) In the old edition of Walch and in the Erlangen edition: "ändern". In the Wittenberg and Jena editions: "ander".
2) Jenaer: hin. Jonas: hic.

They may do as they please, but that their law may be renewed in Messiah's day, and be kept by all. Jeremiah does not say that the old covenant should be renewed, but that it should not be the same covenant that they received through Moses in the exodus from Egypt; it should not be that, but a different and new covenant. Now it is well known what covenant Moses made with them at that time; so it is also well known what it means that it shall not be the old covenant; for "not to be" does not mean to renew the old, but to put away the old and establish another new. You must stand firm on this saying, and give no heed to their talk, which they invent out of their heads. For it is said that it shall not be the old, former covenant, nor shall it be renewed; it shall be another, new covenant, and God will have the first covenant no more.

56. Now let us consider whom we should believe more cheaply: the faithful, true God, or the false, lying Jews? God says: Moses' covenant shall not be eternal, but shall end at Messiah's time; the Jews say: it shall be eternal and never end. So God must always be a liar with the Jews, and they still want to be surprised, 4) that they suffer such horrible misery, want to be right, and God shall be wrong.

57 But if they shall flutter here, and so blaspheme: If your JEsus himself said, "He is not come to abolish the law, neither one tittle, nor one letter," 2c., ye shall say, that they abide in the saying of Jeremiah, and give a right thorough answer. For since they believe not our JEsu, they can have no help with him; they shall answer Jeremiah, or resist him, with good appearance and thorough understanding. So it is also a lie, that they bring in our Jesus, that he spoke of the law of Moses, when he says: "The law shall not pass away" [Luc. 16, 17.], because our Lord Christ there speaks nothing, neither of the circumcision nor of the law of Moses or of the pen, as everybody can read, but

3) Wittenberger: by. Jonas: per.

4) So the Wittenbergers. Jenaer, Walch and Erlanger: "still astonish".

the ten commandments. And how should they leave our books unaltered and unpolluted, if all their study is nothing else than to pollute their own prophets and holy scriptures with lies and false poetry? But as for what our Lord Christ says about fulfilling the law, there is neither time nor space to act on it here; so the Jews cannot understand it either, and we would get away from the matter. The Christians should act on such words of Christ, because they understand it and know it well, praise God, what it is.

58.¹⁾ Lastly, we will also speak of the Ten Commandments, for the Jews may also call the Ten Commandments the Law of Moses, because it was given on Mount Sinai, when they were all Jews, or Abraham's children 2c. Here you shall answer: If the Ten Commandments are to be called the Law of Moses 2), then Moses was much too slow in coming, and also took far too few people before him, because the Ten Commandments went not only before Moses, but also before Abraham and all the patriarchs, and also over the whole world. For though Moses never came, nor Abraham born, yet the ten commandments should have reigned in all men from the beginning; as they did, and still do.

(59) For all creatures rightly take God for God and honor His name, just as the angels in heaven do. So we also, all who are men, owe to hear his word, to obey father and mother, not to kill, not to commit adultery, not to steal, not to bear false witness, not to covet our neighbor's house or his own; which all the Gentiles bear witness to in their scriptures, laws and rulings (as you can see before your eyes), yet nothing of the circumcision nor of Moses' laws, which he gave to the Jews in the land of Canaan, is found in them.

(60) But this Moses did before all other writers, in that he revealed by his histories the beginning of all creatures, and how death came into the whole world by Adam's fall or sin; and after that, being a peculiar man in the sight of all other nations, he was the first to write.

1) Here the Wittenberg edition has the superscription: "Of the Ten Commandments."

2) "Law" is missing in the Wittenberg.

When God wants to make law and people (as he was commanded to do), he first introduces God himself, who as a common God of all nations gives the ten common commandments himself, also orally to this special people, which were previously planted in the hearts of all men with the creation, and decorates them finely in his time to his laws, also more orderly and finer than anyone else could order. The circumcision and Mose's law, however, were not planted in the hearts of men, but were first put on their people by Abraham and Moses.

For we and all Gentiles must also keep the first commandment, that we have no other gods apart from the one God, as well as the Jews. But the part, so that he decorates this commandment and shows it only to the Jews, namely: "He who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of Dieus", we Gentiles do not have to and cannot use. For if I were to come before God and say: O Lord God, who brought me out of Egypt, out of your misery, 2c., I would come like a pig to the Jewish school, for God has not done such a work on me; therefore God would punish me as a liar, or I would have to make a fictitious God out of Him. Nor must I say and keep all the other things in the first commandment; I may also say: You are my God, the God of us all, and at the same time Creator, who indeed led the children of Israel out of Egypt, but not me, but led me out of my Egypt and my misery. So the first commandment remains common to both Jews and Gentiles. But the Jews are especially adorned and attracted with the exodus from Egypt, as each one according to his misery can and should call and praise the common God his God and helper.

62 I must make an analogy: If a prince or head of a household wanted to establish order in his country or house, and did so because God had helped him out of a great need, and wanted to show gratitude for it, as perhaps Naaman the Syrian did or could do; he would also begin to teach first of all about God, how one should worship him alone, 4) and how one should be grateful to him.

3) Wittenberger: ins. Jonas: hominum.

4) Jenaer: should.

as the right God, who can and will help all who trust and believe in him, regardless of the people; as the first commandment teaches, and also makes no distinction, but says: God punishes or helps all who hate or love him 2c. After that, the same prince or head of household continues with his national or household order.

(63) Therefore, the prince would not have imposed his national order on all other countries to which such help had not been given, nor would he have had the power to interpret it, even though he had first commanded to worship and honor the right God of all countries. In the same way, Moses, when he is to order his people, redeemed from Egypt, 1) first has God himself give his Ten Commandments, which are due to all the world; then he gives his people (but by God's command) his special national order, which is none of the business of other peoples. And just as Moses' people are obligated to obey his order, because God commanded them to do so, so also every country and house is obligated to keep the order of its ruler and master. For these are also the commands of God, who established all the regiments of the world.

64 Thus the third commandment of the Sabbath, which the Jews insist upon, is in itself a commandment common to all the world; but the ornamentation, that Moses may adorn it and appropriate it to his people, is laid upon no one but the Jews in particular; even as in the first commandment no one but the Jews in particular shall believe and confess that the common God of all the world brought them out of Egypt. For the actual meaning of the third commandment is that we should teach and hear the word of God during the day, so that we may sanctify both the day and ourselves. Just as Moses and the prophets were read and preached among the Jews on the Sabbath day from that time until this day. But where God's word is preached, it is necessary to celebrate and be quiet at the same hour or time, and to speak and listen to what God says and teaches us or speaks to us without any other business.

1) Wittenberger: his redeemed people from Egypt 2c.

65) Therefore, it is also entirely 2) due to the fact that one should sanctify the day, more than to the celebration. For God does not say, "You shall keep the holy day, or make it a Sabbath"; that is found in itself; but rather, "You shall keep the holiday or Sabbath holy, so that it is much more important to Him to keep it holy than to keep it holy. And if one thing should or could remain, it would be better that the celebration than the holy should remain, because the commandment is mostly concerned with the holy, and does not give the Sabbath for its own sake, but for the sake of the holy. The Jews, however, value the celebration, which God and Moses do not do, more highly for their own sake than for the sake of the sacred.

66) The fact that Moses calls the seventh day, and how God created the world in six days, so that they should work nothing, is a temporal decoration, so that Moses may show this commandment to his people especially at that time. For this was not written before, neither from Abraham nor from the times of the fathers of old, but is a temporal addition and decoration, placed only on this people brought out of Egypt, which was not to remain forever, any more than the whole Law of Moses. But the sanctification, that is, teaching and preaching God's word, which is the right, true and pure opinion of this commandment, has existed from the beginning and remains forever with all the world. Therefore the seventh day is of no concern to us Gentiles, nor is it of any concern to the Jews themselves any longer than until Messiah; although nature and necessity compel that whichever day or hour God's word is preached, that there, as I have said, one must be silent, celebrate, or keep the Sabbath. For God's word cannot be heard or taught if one is thinking of something else or is not silent.

67 Therefore also Isaiah Cap. 66, 23. speaks, that such a seventh day, or ornament of Moses, as I call it, shall cease in Messiah's time, when the right Holy One and God's word shall come abundantly: "It shall be," he speaks, "one Sabbath on another, a new moon on another," that is, it shall be a Sabbath only and no special seventh day, or six days between them; for the Holy One, or God's Word, will go daily and abundantly, and all days will become Sabbaths.

2) Wittenbergers...completely.

68 But what the Jews say about this, and how they treat this text of Isaiah, I know very well; but I cannot now put it all into this letter, which I intend to do against the Jews, who so shamefully tear and pervert the prophets. But no Jew (that I may be brief) will tell me how it is possible that all flesh worships before the Lord at Jerusalem, all the moons and all the Sabbaths; as yet the text, most sharply and exactly translated according to their opinion, gives, because some men or flesh dwell so far from Jerusalem; that they may not come thither in twenty, thirty, a hundred Sabbaths, and they themselves, the Jews, have not worshipped at Jerusalem now fifteen hundred years, that is, twelve times fifteen hundred months (I will be silent of the Sabbaths). But now I cannot do it all in letter way.

69) So also of the first commandment's piece and ornament: "He who brought you out of the land of Egypt," Jeremiah also says in chapter 23, v. 5: "Behold, the time is coming, says the Lord, that I will establish for David a plant of righteousness, and he shall be a king who shall rule well, and establish justice and righteousness in the earth. 2c. And immediately afterwards v. 7. 8: "Behold, the time cometh, that it shall no more be said: As the LORD liveth, which brought up the children of Israel 1) out of the land of Egypt; but as the LORD liveth, which brought forth the seed of the house of Israel (note that it is not the whole house of Israel, but a seed thereof that is mentioned here), and brought them out of the land of the north, and out of all the countries whither I had driven them, that they should dwell in their own land."

Now in this saying there are many beautiful things to be dealt with; but, lest we come to the full of the matter, the Jews are at one with us (where they hold their old doctrine), that Jeremiah here speaks of the Messiah's time. Then he speaks out boldly that at the same time this piece, given in the first commandment of Moses, should be written on when he says, "He who brought you out of Egypt." For there is the text that one should no longer swear by the GOD who brought them out of Egypt; but by the GOD who gathered them from all countries to the plant of David. If this part of the first commandment does not go further than Messiah, then Moses' law is not eternal, but ceases in Messiah and remains only the law of the ten commandments, which existed before Moses from the beginning of the world and among all the Gentiles, that one should have no more than one God, 2c., and thus, because of the ten commandments, there is no difference at all between Jews and Gentiles. For "God is not only the God of the Jews, but also the God of the Gentiles", as St. Paul says [Rom. 3, 29], and the 2) examples of the kings of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia 2c. prove above.

1) "Israel" is missing in the German editions, except Walch. It is in the Latin.

Item 71: In the fourth commandment, we Gentiles cannot say the part, "That thou mayest live long in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee," and yet all must keep the first part, namely, "Thou shalt honor thy father and thy mother. For Moses, or rather God Himself, is speaking here to the people of Israel, whom He leads out of Egypt into the land of Canaan, and also means in this commandment the same land' Canaan, which He gave them at that time, that they should live long in it and have good days, where they kept the fourth commandment, of the obedience of parents, and again here the common commandment, implanted in all Gentiles, is especially adorned and attracted to the Jews with the land of Canaan. But we Gentiles cannot say, nor believe, that God can suffer us to be brought out of Egypt or into the land of Canaan, where we shall prosper if we honor our father and mother, but must let it remain in the common mind that God wants to give each one happiness and salvation in his own land, who honors father and mother, as we also see that the lands and dominions, even the houses and hereditary estates, change or remain so strangely, according to which one has been obedient or disobedient, and has never been found to be otherwise, except that this is not the case.

2) Jenaer: "in the example ... proved." Jonas: exempla ostendunt.

well goes, nor good death dies, which dishonors father and mother.

(72) Therefore this fourth commandment cannot be eternal, that is, according to the blindness of the Jews, be put upon us Gentiles, that we should have the land of Canaan and live well in it, when they themselves must live outside the same land for fifteen hundred years in all unhappiness, as they despised, profaned and persecuted their fathers and prophets, and have not yet ceased to persecute them; therefore the punishment also does not cease. For they will not have the Messiah whom their fathers and prophets proclaimed and prophesied and commanded and commanded to receive, and remain disobedient children to their fathers.

(73) This is what I want to say about the ninth and tenth commandments, which forbid coveting another's wife and house. For with the Jews the letter of divorce had to be a right, which cannot be with us Gentiles; much less the treachery and intrigue to steal away one's wife and house, which with the Jews has been a great will of courage; as the prophet Malachias laments 2c. [Mal. 2, 14. ff.]

74 And so that I may find an end to this letter, I hope, my dear friend, that you have at least so much that you can protect yourselves against the Sabbath keepers and remain pure in your Christian faith. If you cannot convert the Jews, think that you are no better than all the prophets, who are always strangled and persecuted by this wicked people, for the sole glory of being called Abraham's seed. Although they know how many desperate, lost boys are still among themselves, that they would like to realize that something more is needed than to be Abraham's seed, where one wants to be God's child. Thus the law of Moses does not help them, because they have never kept it, as shown above in the 31st chapter of Jeremiah, where God Himself says and complains, but such disobedience helps them much more. 2) To this end, they still keep it today.

1) Wittenberger: that. Jonas: hoc.

2) So the Wittenbergers; "enthelfen" - to deprive of help. In the Jena edition (probably a misprint): "enthilft". In the old edition of Walch and in the Erlangen: "enthülft". Jonas did not translate this sentence.

They themselves do not, nor can they, as long as Jerusalem does not become the Jews' royal seat and priesthood.

75 Thus it is known, and they also confess it in part, that they no longer understand the law of Moses itself, especially in the third book and more places; how then can they keep it if they were at Jerusalem right now? And summa, because these fifteen hundred years in misery (since no end is yet certain nor can be) do not humble the Jews nor bring them to knowledge, you may despair of them with a good conscience. For it is impossible that God should let His people, if they were, remain so long without consolation and prophecy; He has never done it before, and also promised that He would do nothing without prior prophecy; as Amos [Cap. 3, v. 7] says: "God does nothing, He reveals it first to His prophets." For all states, all regiments, all works of men must go, stand and come to pass in the word of God, - that His people may know how they are to be with Him, how they are to do, what they are to suffer, what they are to wait for. He has done so from the beginning and continues to do so forever.

Because God did not do this to the Jews fifteen hundred years ago, and still lets them remain in misery forever, and neither speaks nor prophesies anything to them, it is obvious that He has abandoned them, and they may no longer be God's people, and the right Lord, Messiah, must have come fifteen hundred years ago. What more sin can there be for such an abominable plague and silence of God, than that they have not accepted and still do not accept the right seed of Abraham and David, the dear Lord Messiah? Did they, after all, before the misery of Babylon, commit much more horrible sins with the murder of prophets 2c. than they can report afterwards, and yet it is nothing that they have to suffer such misery for fifteen hundred years because of unconscious sin, which they cannot name, when they have not had to suffer for more than seventy years because of much more public, horrible, murderous, idolatrous sin?

3) So all the issues. Maybe: from?

Consolation unslept: if here in this misery not a fly with a wing hisses to them for consolation. If this does not mean abandoned by God, then the devil may also boast that he is not yet abandoned by God.

(77) For according to the reckoning, their present misery under the Roman Empire has lasted longer than their previous existence and rule in the land of Canaan. Calculate, whoever wants, from the exodus from Egypt to the last destruction of Jerusalem, since they are now inside, there are fifteen hundred and ten years. Not much less years have they now been in misery, and will last much longer, because neither until then nor henceforth have they had prophets nor wisdom.

have a statement as to when it should come to an end. But how can it be credible that God should leave his people longer out of regiment than in regiment; longer out of law, temple, worship, Jerusalem, priesthood, principality, lands, than they have been in?

This letter has grown under my hand, that I truly do not provide it myself, because the pen had to run so; because I have more thoughts of this matter, neither I could have brought so running into the pen. Please, take it well this time, because the matter is much too big that it should be put into a letter. Hiemit GOtt befiehlt, Amen.

51 D. Mart. Luther's writing about the Jews and their lies. *)

Written in 1542; issued in early 1543.

I had resolved to write nothing more either about the Jews or against them; but because I have learned that the wretched, hopeless people do not cease to lure us, that is, the Christians, to themselves, I have let this booklet go out, so that I may be found among those who have resisted such poisonous activity of the Jews and have warned the Christians to beware of the Jews. I would not have thought that a Christian should allow himself to be fooled by the Jews, to step into their misery and sorrow. But the devil is the god of the world; and where God's word is not, he has made good, not only with the weak, but also with the strong. God help us, amen.

Preface. 1)

1. grace and peace in the Lord. Dear Lord and good friend! I have received a writing in which a Jew is conversing with a Christian, who takes it upon himself to pervert the sayings of the Scriptures (which we have for our faith, concerning our Lord Christ and Mary his mother), and to interpret them far differently, that he may think to overthrow the foundation of our faith.

002 To this I give you and to him this answer; It is not my purpose to quarrel with the Jews, or to be displeased with them.

1) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and the Jena.

*This writing, which Luther still wrote in 1542, was published at the beginning of 1543 by Hans Luft in Wittenberg under the title: "Von den Juden und ihren Lügen. D. M. Luth." and soon after under the same title with the addition: "Printed for the other time and done more with it." In 1544 and 1613 this writing was printed again in Frankfurt. In the collections: Wittenberger (1556), vol. V, p. 454; Jenaer (1562), vol. VIII, p. 49; Altenburger, vol. VIII, p. 208; Leipziger, vol. XI, p. 544 and Erlanger, vol. 32, p. 99. All collective editions provide the text of the enlarged edition. What is "more to it" in the same is limited to a few, about a dozen sentences. Justus Jonas translated this writing into Latin. This translation is found in the Latin Wittenberg edition, Tom. VII, col. 166. We give the text according to the Erlangen edition, which brings the second above original print, comparing the Wittenberg and the Jena, also the Latin, learn how they interpret or understand the Scriptures; I know all this well beforehand. Much less do I deal with it, that I want to convert the Jews; because that is impossible. And the two excellent men, Lyra and Burgensis, described to us a hundred and two hundred years ago, among others, the Jews' impolite interpretations faithfully, and they have truly published them. It still does not help with the Jews everywhere, and they have become worse and worse.

(3) Also, because they have become so hard and sluggish 1) that they do not want to get out of the terrible plague, that they are now over fourteen hundred years in misery, and still cannot attain an end or a definite time by such vehement eternal calling and crying out to God (as they think); if (I say) the blows do not help, then it is good to reckon that our talking and interpreting will help much less. Therefore be content as a Christian, and do not quarrel with the Jews, but if you must or want to speak to them, speak no more than this:

4 Do you hear, Jew, do you also know that Jerusalem and your dominion, together with the temple and the priesthood, have now been destroyed over 1460 years? For this year, when we Christians write of the birth of Christ in 1542,2) it is just 1468 years, and so we are entering the 1500th year that Vespasianus and Titus destroyed Jerusalem and drove the Jews out of it. With this nut let the Jews bite and argue as long as they want.

For such cruel wrath of God shows all too well that they must surely err and go wrong; such a child may well grasp. For it is not necessary to think so cruelly of God, that he should have his own people so long, so cruelly, so unmercifully punish and be silent about it, comfort neither with words nor with works, tune neither time nor end. Who would believe in such a God, hope in him or love him? Therefore this wrathful work, that the Jews, certainly rejected by God, are no longer his people, he is also no longer their God; and goes according to the saying of Hosea in the 1st, v. 9: "LoAmmi; you are not my people; so I am not your God." Yes, it goes to them, alas, thus, and all too much and terribly. They may interpret as they like, so we see the work before our eyes; that does not suit us.

1) i.e. indifferent to blows.

2) Jenaer: "1542" and immediately following: "1468"; likewise § 153 and § 154, only that there by a printing error (in § 153) "1568" and (in § 155) "1586" stands. In the Wittenberg "1543" and "1469"; in § 153 by the same misprint "1569". In the Erlangen edition, the numbers of the Wittenberg edition are found here, but in § 153 and § 154, those of the Jena edition; but instead of "1586", "1568" is set. - Luther assumes that Jerusalem was destroyed in the 74th year after the birth of Christ. Cf. Chronicon Lutheri, Wittenberg edition, vol. 12, p. 437b.

And if there were a spark of reason or understanding in them, they would truly have to think to themselves: Oh Lord God, it does not stand and go right with us, the misery is too great, too long, too hard, God has forgotten us 2c. I am not a Jew, but I seriously do not like to think of such cruel wrath of God against this people; for I am afraid that it will go through my life and limb. What will become of the eternal wrath in hell against false Christians and all unbelievers? Well, the Jews may hold our Lord JEsu for what they will, we see that [it] goes so, as he says Luc. 21, 20. 22. 23.: "When you see Jerusalem besieged with an army, then notice that her desolation has come. For these are the days of vengeance, and there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people."

7. summa, as I said, do not dispute much with Jews about the articles of our faith; they have been brought up from youth with poison and resentment against our Lord, so that there is no hope until they come to the point where their misery finally wears them down and forces them to confess that Messiah has come and is our Jesus; otherwise it is much too early, even in vain, to dispute with them how God is threefold, God is man, Mary is God's mother. For no reason nor human heart allows such a thing, how much less such a bitter, poisonous, blind heart of the Jews! What God Himself does not improve with such cruel blows, we will leave unimproved with words and works (as said). Moses could not make Pharaoh better neither with plagues, nor with miracles, nor with supplications,

He had to let him drown in the sea [Ex 14:28].

(8) So now, to strengthen our faith, let us deal with the Jews in some gross folly in their faith and interpretation of the Scriptures, because they so poisonously blaspheme our faith; if it comes to the correction of any Jew, that he may be ashamed, it is all the better. We do not speak now to the Jews, but of the Jews and of their doings, that our Germans may also know.

The first reason and glory of the Jews against the Christians, that they are Abraham's seed. 1)

(9) They have a reason, they insist on it and defy it out of measure, that is, they are born from the highest people on earth, from Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Rebecca, Jacob, and from the twelve patriarchs, and so on from the holy people of Israel, as St. Paul also confesses Romans 9:5. Paul Rom. 9, 5. also confesses, and says: Quorum patres, that is: They are from the fathers, from whom Christ 2c.; and he himself, Christ, Joh. 4, 22.: "To the Jews comes salvation." Hence they boast themselves the noblest, yea, noblest alone on earth. We "goyim", Gentiles, are not men in their eyes, but hardly worthy to be esteemed by them. For we are not of high and noble blood, tribe, birth and origin. This is an argument, and one of their defiance and glory, truly in my opinion the noblest and strongest.

Therefore God must suffer in their schools, prayers, songs, teachings and whole life, then they come and stand before him and plague him (that I speak thus humanly of God) quite well, then he must hear how they boast, and praise God that he has set them apart from the Gentiles, and let them be born of the holy fathers, and chosen them to be his own holy people 2c. And there is no measure nor end to the boasting of blood and bodily birth from the fathers.

(11) To the end that their frenzied, mad and foolish nonsense is perfect, they praise and thank God first of all for the fact that they have made men...

The first is that they are created men and not animals; the second is that they are Israel and not Gentiles; the third is that they are created men and not women. Such folly they have not from Israel, but from the goyim. For so the histories write that the Greek Plato did such praise and thanksgiving daily to God; otherwise such hope and blasphemy shall be called praise to God. For he also praised his gods for these three things, that he was a man and not a beast, a man and not a woman, a Greek and not an un-Greek or Barbarian; this is a fool's glory and a blasphemer's thanks. 2) Just as the whales let themselves think that they alone are men, all the world is vain unmen, ducks or mice against them.

Now no one can take away the glory of the blood and tribe of Israel. In the Old Testament they lost many a battle in war over it (no Jew understands this); all the prophets chastised them for it (for it is a hopeful, carnal presumption, without spirit and faith), but were also murdered and persecuted over it. St. John Baptist punished them severely for it, saying, "Only do not boast that you are Abraham's seed: 'I tell you, God is able to make children out of these stones of Abraham' [Matth. 3, 9.], and did not call them children of Israel, but serpent spawn. O, that was too close to the noble blood and tribe of Israel, and said he had the devil. So our Lord also calls them serpent-breeders; item John 8:39, 44: "If you are Abraham's children, do Abraham's works; you are the devil's children, he is your father." This they could not suffer, that they should not be Abraham's children, but the devil's; even as they cannot yet suffer it. For if they should deliver up this glory and ground, all their things that are written upon it should fall, and be changed.

013 And I hold that if their Messiah (whom they hope) should come, and take up this their cause and their glory, they should

2) The meaning of this will probably be: This is the thanks of a man, who is a Barbarus in relation to God, that is, a blasphemer. - For the matter compare the "Interpretation of the First Book of Moses", Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. I, 312, § 64.

1) This superscription is in the Wittenberg edition, and the first sentence of it also in the Jena edition.

They would crucify and blaspheme seven times worse than they have done to ours, and would also say that he is not the true Messiah, but a false devil. For they have pictured their Messiah with themselves, so that he should strengthen and exalt such carnal, hopeful conceit from the nobility of blood and tribe, that is, so much so that he should help them blaspheme God and scornfully despise his creatures, even the women, who are also men and images of God, as well as we, and our flesh and blood, mother, sister, daughter, housewives 2c., because they (according to the above-mentioned triple praise) do not consider Sarah (as a woman) as noble as Abraham (as a man). Perhaps they want to honor themselves by the fact that they are half noble, as born of a noble father, and half ignoble, as born of an ignoble mother. But let the foolishness and the smokiness go.

Laying such ground and fame from because of their nobility and blood. 1)

We want to speak of such a reason and glory, and prove conclusively (not to the Jews, for they did not suffer it from Moses, nor from their Messiah himself, as has been said) before God and the world that such a reason is completely void and condemned, and take Moses, Genesis 17:14, which they should believe if they were true Israelites. Since God instituted circumcision, He speaks among other words thus: "Whose child is not circumcised, his soul shall be cut off from his people. With these words, God condemns everything born of flesh, no matter how noble, high or low-born it may be, for He does not exclude Abraham's own seed, which was not only noble and high-born from Noah, but was also pronounced holy, Genesis 15:6. 15. 6. and now Abram became Abraham, Gen. 17, 5. Nor shall any of his children be counted among God's people, but shall be called cut off, that God will not be his God, unless it is also circumcised by birth and taken into the covenant of God.

1) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

. (15) In the sight of the world it is true that one man is nobler than another by reason of his birth, just as one is wiser than another by reason of his reason, one is stronger and more beautiful than another by reason of his body, one is richer and more powerful than another by reason of his goods, and one is better than another by reason of his virtue. For this miserable, sinful, deadly life must have such differences and inequalities, and cannot do without them for the body's need and to maintain the regiments. But to come before God and boast that it is so noble, high and rich in the sight of other men is a devilish hope; yet before Him all birth according to the flesh is condemned at the same time in the aforementioned saying, where His covenant and word does not come to the rescue again, and makes a new, different birth, and thus separates it from the old, first birth. If then the Jews in their prayer before God boast and boast that they are the noble blood, tribe and children of the holy fathers, for which reason he should look upon them and be gracious to them, but condemn the Gentiles as the ignoble and not of their blood: Dear, what will such a prayer obtain? If the Jews were as holy as their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob themselves, yes, if they were angels in heaven, they would be plunged into the abyss of hell for the sake of such prayer, let alone be brought back to Jerusalem from their misery.

(16) For what does such a devilishly hopeful prayer do other than to prove God false in His word, when He says, "What is born and not circumcised shall not only be base and worthless, but also condemned and not of my people, and I will not be sem-God. Against this the Jews rage with their blasphemous prayer, as if they wanted to say: No, no, O Lord God, this is not true, but you must hear us, because we are born of noble blood of the holy fathers and because of such noble birth set us over all the world as lords and in heaven, or you do not keep your word and do us wrong, because you swore to our fathers to have their seed as your people forever. Just as with us Christians a king, prince, lord, rich, beautiful, wise, pious, virtuous man wanted to pray before God thus: Lord God, behold how great a king and lord I am; behold how rich, wise and pious I am; behold how beautiful a man or woman I am in the sight of others, and be gracious to me, help me and make me blessed for these things. For other people are not worthy, because they are not so beautiful, rich, wise, pious, noble and highborn as I am. What should such a prayer deserve? It would deserve thunder and lightning to strike from heaven above, and brimstone and hellish fire to strike from below; that would also be right; for flesh and blood shall not boast before God, or, as Moses says, what is born, even of holy fathers and of Abraham himself, shall be condemned before God, and shall not boast of God, as St. Paul, Romans 3:27, John 3:6 also say.

17 The Pharisee in our Gospel also prayed such a prayer, boasting of his good deeds. "I am not like other people" [Luc. 18, 11.], and his prayer was decorated in such a way that he did it with thanksgiving, and made himself believe that he was God's son in his bosom; nor did the thunder and lightning strike him from heaven into the abyss of hell, as Christ there judges in v. 14 and says: "Let that tax collector be just, and this one condemned. Oh, what will we poor filthy sacks, maggots, stink and filth before Him who is God and Creator of heaven and earth, who made us from filth and from nothing, and because of our nature, birth and being, we are still filth and nothing before His eyes, without which His grace and abundant mercy will let us be and have us.

18. Abraham, who was nobler than the Jews, namely, as said, born of the noblest patriarch Noah, who was then the supreme and oldest lord, priest and father of the whole world, together with the other nine following patriarchs, all of whom Abraham saw, heard and lived with, some of whom also survived Abraham long after (as Shem, Salah, Eber), that Abraham certainly lacked nothing in the nobility of blood or birth: nor did it help him that he should be numbered among God's people, but

He has become idolatrous and would have remained damned if God's word had not called him; as Joshua says Cap. 24, 2. from the mouth of God: "Your fathers once lived beyond the water, Thara, Abraham's 1) and Nahor's father, and served other gods; but I brought your father Abraham over" 2c.

19. after that, having been called and sanctified by the word of God and his faith, Gen 15:6, nor does he boast of his birth or virtue when he speaks to God, Gen 18:27. He does not say, "Behold, how noble I am born of Noah and of the holy fathers, and of thy holy people; nor how holy and righteous I am toward other people; but thus saith he, "O Lord, I speak unto thee, though I be ashes and ashes." Yes, this is how a creature should talk to its Creator, and not forget what it is and is esteemed before Him. For so he said of Adam, and of all his children, Genesis 3:19: "Thou art ashes or ashes, and shalt return to the ground," as death convinces us of all these things with a mighty experience before our eyes, if it should otherwise help against the loose, vain, sorrowful hope.

20. Now behold how fine the children of Abrahah the Jews are, how well they have taken after their father, yes, how fine a people of God they are, before whom they boast of their fleshly birth and [of] noble blood of the fathers, and despise all other people, when in all this he holds them as much as dung and ashes and damned birth as all other Gentiles; nor shall God be their liar, they must 2) be right, and with such blasphemous, damned prayer want to rob God of His grace and have Jerusalem again.

21) Furthermore, if the Jews were seven times more blind (if it is possible), they will have to see that Esau or Edom is as noble by birth as Jacob, because he is not only the son of the same father Isaac and Rebekah mother 3), but also the firstborn son, which firstborn is the highest nobility at that time among the

1) Thus the Wittenbergers and the Jenaers; Erlanger: "Abrahams Vater".

2) Wittenberger: mügen.

3) i.e. of the same mother, Rebekah, son.

other children was. What did the same birth, even the first birth, do for him, so that he was far more noble than Jacob? Nevertheless he is not counted among God's people, since he was called Abraham his grandfather, Sarah his grandmother, as well as Jacob, and, as I said, much more than Jacob; again, Abraham himself and Sarah had to consider him for their nephew, Isaac, his son, and Rebekah's son, in addition for the first and noblest son, but Jacob for the least. Here tell me, what did the bodily birth or nobility of blood from Abraham help?

22 And if one would pretend here that Esau had become evil, therefore he would have lost the honor 2c. To this is answered first of all: We are now talking about whether the birth of the blood itself is valid before God, so that one can be or become God's people through it? If it is not valid, why do the Jews praise it so highly before other children of men? but if it is valid, why does God not hold over it, so that it does not fail? For if God considers bodily birth sufficient for those to be His people who are born of holy fathers, He should not let them become wicked, lest He lose His people and become ungodly. But if he lets them become evil, then it is certain that he does not respect the birth, that it should make or bring him a people.

(23) Secondly, Esau was not rejected from among God's people because he became evil afterwards, nor did Jacob come to be counted among God's people because of his good life afterwards; but since they were both still in their mother's womb, they were separated by God's word, Jacob being called and Esau not, according to the saying, "The greater shall be under the lesser" (Rom. 9:12). And it did or did not help that they were both under one mother's heart, nourished with the same milk and blood by the same one mother Rebekah, and were born of her at the same time; so that it must be said that flesh, blood, milk, womb, mother, be they all the same, could not benefit Esau, nor hinder Jacob from the grace of becoming God's children or people,

But the word and the calling, if birth respects nothing, separates all things here.

(24) So Ishmael can also say that he is still the true natural son of Abraham, but what does the physical birth help him here? He must still leave the house and inheritance of Abraham to Isaac, his brother. Say: Ishmael is of Agar, Isaac of Sarah; this does no more than strengthen our cause. For that Isaac was born of Sarah was of God's word, and not of flesh and blood, because Sarah, now obsolete, could not of course bear children; yet, speaking of birth, Ishmael is Abraham's flesh and blood and natural son: nor does such holy father's blood and flesh help him anything, but harms him, because he has nothing more than flesh and blood of Abraham, and not in addition also God's word, and prevents Isaac nothing, that he comes from the blood of Abraham, which in Ishmael is nothing, because he has God's word, which separates him from his brother Ishmael, who is nevertheless of the same Abraham's flesh and blood.

(25) And what shall we say much? I want to be as noble (in the eyes of God) as no Jew, yes, even as noble as Abraham himself, as David, as all the holy prophets and apostles; I do not want to thank them for considering me as noble (in the eyes of God) as themselves. And if God does not consider my nobility and birth as good as Isaac's, Abraham's, David's and all the saints', then I will say that he does me wrong and is not a right judge. For I will not be deprived of this, nor will Abraham, David, the prophets, the apostles, nor any angel in heaven, deprive me of boasting that Noah was my right natural grandfather (by bodily birth or flesh and blood), and that his wife (who she was) was my right natural grandmother; for we are all descended from the one Noah, after the flood; from Cain we did not come, which lineage in the flood, and very much from fathers, brothers-in-law, friends of Noah, all finally destroyed.

26°. Item, I boast that Japheth, the firstborn son of Noah, is also my rightful son.

He is my natural grandfather and his wife (whoever she was) is my natural grandmother. For we Gentiles are all descended from him, as Moses says, Gen 10:5. And so Shem, the other son of Noah, with all his descendants, has nothing to claim against his older brother Japheth by birth. Yes, where birth is to apply, then Japheth with his descendants, as the firstborn son and right heir, has to plead against Shem, his younger brother, together with his descendants, who are called Jews or Ishmaelites, or Edomites. Now what does the bodily firstborn help good Japheth and our grandfather? Nothing everywhere. Shem keeps the precedence; not because of the birth (otherwise it would have to be Japheth), but that about the birth God's word and calling is here divorced.

(27) So I will count from the beginning of the world how we are all descended from Adam and Eve, then from Seth, Enos, Kenan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech; for they are our grandfathers as well as the Jews, and all come from them with the same honor, nobility and glory as the Jews, and are their flesh and blood as well as Abraham with all his seed. For we have been in the same holy fathers' loins as they, just as well as they, and there is no difference of birth or flesh and blood here, as all reason must say. Because of this, the blind Jews are gross fools, and neither are the Gentiles more senseless, that they praise their bodily birth so highly before God, when they are nothing better than all the Gentiles, because we are all of the same birth, flesh and blood, according to the very first, best, holiest grandfathers, and neither can reproach the other with something special, nor move it up, which does not also affect him.

28 But that we come from here. David, who throws us all finely and mightily into one heap, Psalm 51:7, where he speaks:

"Behold, I was conceived in sins, and my mother bore me in sins" 2c. Go now, whether you are a Jew or a Gentile, born of Adam or Abraham, of Enoch or David, and boast before God of your beautiful nobility, your high tribe, your ancient lineage; here you will find that we are all carried and born in sins, of father and of mother, excluding no one who is called a man. But what does "born in sins" mean other than born in God's wrath and condemnation, that by nature or birth we cannot be God's people or children, and our birth, fame and nobility, honor and prize is not, nor can be, other than that we (where there will be no more than bodily birth) are badly condemned sinners, God's enemies and in all disgraces? There you, Jew, have your glory, and we Gentiles as well with you as you with us. Now pray more that God will look upon your nobility, tribe, flesh and blood.

29 But I have said this to strengthen our faith, because the Jews will not let them take away this hope and glory of their nobility and blood, as it was said above, they are obdurate; but ours must beware of them, lest they be deceived by the obdurate, condemned people (who punish God with lies, proudly despising all the world). For the Jews would very much like to draw us Christians to their faith, and do so wherever they can. And if God is to have mercy on them, the Jews, they must first remove such blasphemous prayers and songs of their glory and hope from their schools and from their hearts and mouths; for such prayers continually increase and heap up God's wrath upon them. But they will not do this, no matter how deeply they humble themselves, without what individual persons may do, whom God will especially show and deliver from their horrible ruin.

The other reason and glory of the Jews against the Christians is circumcision. 3)

(30) The other glory and nobility, that the Jews rise up and make all men proud and noble.

3) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

1) Wittenberger: blind. Also Jonas is missing here: "blind".

2) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer, Walch and Erlanger: "bessers". Jonas: meliores.

(34) Why do the Jews lie so shamefully in their prayers and sermons before God, as if circumcision were theirs alone, by which they must be set apart from all other peoples and be the holy people of God? They should be a little ashamed (where they could be ashamed) before the Ishmaelites, Edomites, and other more peoples, if they remembered that they are always a small group and were scarcely a handful of people compared with other nations, who, being Abraham's seed and circumcised, undoubtedly inherited their father Abraham's commandment to their descendants; but the circumcision inherited by the one son Isaac is very small compared with the circumcision inherited by the other sons. For it is written that Ishmael son of Abraham became a great nation, begotten of twelve princes. Item, the six sons of Kethurah, Gen. 25, 16, possessed much greater lands than Israel, who undoubtedly kept the circumcision of their fathers afterward.

2) In the Wittenberg missing: are.

35 Since circumcision is common to so many peoples from Abraham (whose seed they all are, as well as Isaac and Jacob) according to the commandment of God, Gen 17:10, and in which there is no difference between them and the children of Israel, what do the Jews do when they praise and thank God in their prayers that He has separated them from all peoples through circumcision, sanctified them, and made them His own people? This is what they do, they blaspheme and punish God in His commandment and words, who says Genesis 17, circumcision shall not be commanded to Isaac and his descendants alone, but to all the seed of Abraham, and admits to the Jews (because of circumcision) no separation against Ishmael, Edom, Midian, Ephah, Ephraim 2c. which are told Genesis 25, 4. They are all circumcised and heirs of circumcision, as well as Israel.

036 Now what profit is it to Ishmael that he is circumcised? How does it help Edom that he is circumcised, who was also born of Isaac, who was separated, and not of Ishmael? How does it help Midian and his brothers, born of Kethurah, that they are circumcised? Yet they are not God's people because neither birth from Abraham's blood nor circumcision helps them. If circumcision does not help these to be God's people, how can it help the Jews? Because one kind of circumcision, commanded by one kind of God, from one kind of father, blood and flesh or origin, is common to all.

Ulld

There is sincere equality here, and no distinction or inequality between them all, as far as circumcision and birth

37. Therefore, it is not a clever nor masterful, but a crude, foolish, foolish lie, when the Jews boast of their circumcision before God, as if God should look upon them for it and be gracious to them, when they should reasonably know from the Scriptures, that they alone are not circumcised according to God's command, and therefore cannot be a special people of God, but something more, different and greater must belong to them, since the Ishmaelites, Edomites, Midianites: and other Abrahamic seeds may take no less comfort in this glory, even before God Himself. For they are like them in all respects, that is, in birth and circumcision, as has been said.

38 But whether the Jews would pretend that the Ishmaelites and Edomites 2c. did not keep the circumcision as perfect as the Jews, who, in addition to cutting off the foreskin of the child, tear off the skin of its tail with sharp fingernails, 2) as one reads in their books, and thereby hurt the child beyond measure, without and above God's command, so that the father, who should rejoice in the circumcision, stands there and hears the child crying, his eyes go over, and passes through the heart. To this it is well to reply that such an addition was invented by themselves, yes, inspired by the wicked devil, against God's commandment, since Moses says, Deut. 4, 2. and 12, 32: "Thou shalt neither add nor subtract from the words of the Lord." And with such devilish additions they corrupt their circumcision, so that before God no people keeps the circumcision less than they themselves, because they hang and practice their damned addition against God's word with such free disobedience.

Now let us see what Moses himself thinks of circumcision. Deut. 10, 16. He thus says: "Circumcise the foreskin of your heart, and do not be stiff-necked" 2c. What is this, dear Moses? Shall it not be enough that they are circumcised bodily? Are they

1) Wittenberger: sanctify. Jonas: in populum elegerit.

2) In the old editions: "Fingernegelin".

But they are set apart by holy circumcision and are a holy people of God before all nations? and you rebuke them stiff-necked against God, nullifying their holy circumcision and desecrating the holy circumcised people of God. Thou shouldst speak these things in their synagogues: if they had not stones, they would cast thee out into the land with mire and earth, if thou wert worth ten Moses.

40. he also scolds them, Deut. 26, 41: "Until their uncircumcised heart is ashamed" 2c. Go on, Moses, do you know to whom you are speaking? You are talking to a noble, chosen, holy, circumcised people of God; and you may say that they have uncircumcised hearts? that is much worse than if they had sevenfold uncircumcised flesh. For an uncircumcised heart cannot have God, and the circumcision of the flesh is of no avail. But a circumcised heart alone can make a people of God, if bodily circumcision is not there, or cannot be there, as the children of Israel were in the wilderness forty years.

41 Jeremiah also rebukes them in Cap. 4:4: "Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and remove the foreskin of your heart, O men of Judah and citizens of Jerusalem, lest my wrath go out like a fire that no one can quench." O Jeremiah, you shameful heretic, you deceiver and false prophet, may you say to the holy circumcised people of God that they should circumcise themselves to the LORD? Do you think that they are circumcised in the flesh before the devil? just as if God did not think anything of their holy bodily circumcision. Thou darest the wrath of God upon them as an everlasting fire, if they do not circumcise their hearts, when they do not remember such circumcision of the heart in their prayers, nor praise or thank God for it with any letter. And you make their holy circumcision of the body so utterly unfit that it is also guilty of the eternal wrath of God and eternal fire? I advise you not to come to her school, all the devils should tear you apart and devour you.

Item Jer. 6, 10: "Their ears are uncircumcised and cannot hear. So, dear Jeremiah, do it roughly and uncleanly enough with the noble, chosen, holy, circumcised people of God. Shall you say, that such holy people have uncircumcised ears? and, what is even worse, that they cannot hear? What is this said, for so much: they are not God's people? For whoever cannot hear God or His word, nor suffer, is not God's people. If he is not God's people, he is the devil's people, and helps neither circumcision, nor shingling, nor scraping. Stop, for God's sake, Jeremiah! Shall you despise and condemn the holy circumcision so horribly that you set apart the chosen, circumcised, holy people full of God and hand them over to the devil as the exiled and damned? Praise God that He has set them apart by circumcision, both from the devil and from all nations, and made them His own holy people. O that is blasphemavit, crucify, crucify him!

43 Jeremiah Cap. 9:25, 26: "Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will visit all, whether circumcised or foreskin, even Egypt, Judah, Edom, the children of Ammon, Moab, and all that dwell in the east of the wilderness. For all the Gentiles have uncircumcised foreskin, but all the house of Israel have uncircumcised heart" 2c.

44. Where is the hopeful glory of circumcision, by which the Jews want to be a separate people and holy before other Gentiles? Here God's word pushes them into one heap with the Gentiles and uncircumcised, and wants to punish them at the same time. Name the best part, the noble royal tribe of Judah, and then the whole house of Israel. And the most serious of all, he says, "The Gentiles are uncircumcised according to the flesh, but Judah, Edom and Israel, who are circumcised according to the flesh, are much worse than the Gentiles, because they have an uncircumcised heart, which is much worse than having uncircumcised flesh, as was said above.

(45) These and similar sayings make it clear that the Jews' pride and glory in circumcision against the uncircumcised Gentiles is nothing, and deserves nothing but wrath in the sight of God, since it alone exists. They have (he says) an uncircumcised heart. The Jews, however, do not respect such a foreskin of the heart, but nevertheless think that God should reject their arrogant circumcision.

in the flesh, and to hear and behold the glory of it against all the Gentiles who cannot boast of circumcision. Do not the blind wretched people see that in these sayings God so clearly and brightly judges their uncircumcised heart, and thus condemns their fleshly circumcision, with their glory and prayer. They continue to do so, like the nonsensical, and make the foreskin of their heart thicker the longer with such arrogant glory before God and contempt of all other peoples, and want to be badly God's people alone through such vain hopeful circumcision of the flesh, until their heart's foreskin has become thicker than an iron mountain, which can no longer hear, see, or feel their own revealed scripture, which they read daily with blind eyes, on which such thick skin has grown, as no oak bark is.

(46) If God is to hear and accept their prayer and praise, they must indeed first remove such blasphemous, shameful, false, lying praise and arrogance from their schools, mouths and hearts; otherwise they do nothing but make their thing worse and worse and arouse God's wrath against them. For he who wants to pray before God must not come forward with arrogance and lies, praising himself alone and despising all others, wanting only to be called God's people, cursing all the others, 1) as they do. David says Psalm 5:6, 7: "Thou art not a god to whom wickedness pleases; he that is wicked abideth not before thee. The glorious do not stand before your eyes. Thou art hostile to all evildoers; thou destroyest liars. The Lord hath abhorred of the bloodthirsty and the false," but so it is said (as there follows v. 8.), "I will enter into thy house upon thy great goodness, and worship against thy holy temple in thy 2) fear."

(47) This psalm applies to all people, whether circumcised or not, especially to the Jews, to whom it was primarily given and made (as well as to all other Scriptures), and is also masterfully depicted in it above all other Gentiles. For it is they who

They have always been godless, have practiced idolatry, false doctrine and have had uncircumcised hearts, as Moses himself and all the prophets cry out and complain about them; nevertheless, they have always wanted to please God and have slain all the prophets over it. They are the wicked, stiff-necked people, who have not let themselves be converted from evil to good works by any preaching, reproaching, or teaching of the prophets; as the Scriptures testify everywhere; yet they want to be God's servants and stand before Him. They are the glory preachers, the hopeful pranksters, who to this day can do nothing more than boast of their tribe and blood, praise themselves alone, and despise and curse all the world in their schools, prayers and teachings; nor do they think they can stand before God's eyes as the dearest children.

(48) They are the true liars and bloodhounds, who have not only perverted and falsified the whole of Scripture with their lying glosses, from the beginning until now, without ceasing. And all the anxious sighing and longing and hoping of their hearts is that one day they would deal with us Gentiles as they dealt with the Gentiles in Persia at the time of Esther. [Oh how they love the book of Esther, which is so finely tuned to their bloodthirsty, vengeful, murderous desire and hope: no more bloodthirsty and vengeful people has the sun ever shone upon than those who let themselves think that they are therefore God's people, that they should and must murder and strangle the heathen. And the most noble thing they expect from their Messiah is that he should murder and kill the whole world by their sword, as they proved in the beginning to us Christians all over the world, and would still like to do, where they could, have tried it often, and have been beaten on the snouts.

49. but (of which perhaps hereafter) we return to their false lying boast of circumcision: they know well, the shameful liars, that they are not God's people alone, even if they had circumcision alone before all peoples, even that the foreskin does not prevent them from being God's people; nor do they wilfully come before God, lying and boasting of being God's people alone through bodily circumcision, notwithstanding

1) Wittenberger: despise. Jonas: excretur.

2) Wittenberger: der. Jonas: tu.

of the heart circumcision; for against it stand mighty examples of the Scriptures. First of all Job, whom they bring from Nahor, to whom and to his heirs God did not impose circumcision, nor does his book indicate that very few of the great saints in Israel were like him and his people. And [2 Kings 5:17] Naaman of Syria, even through the prophet Elishaeum, was not made to be circumcised, yet he became holy and God's child, no doubt many with him.

50. item, there stands the whole prophet Jonah, who converts Nineveh to God and preserves it, with kings, princes, lords, lands and people, and yet not circumcised. Thus Daniel converted the great kings and countries of Babylon and Persia, as Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrum, Darium 2c., and yet they remained Gentiles, uncircumcised, and did not become Jews. As also before Joseph teaches the king Pharaon, his princes and people, as the Psalm 105, 22. 1) testifies, and let them nevertheless uncircumcised. This, I say, is what the desperate, hardened liars know, nor do they exalt circumcision as if no one could be God's people who is not circumcised. And they cause heartache when they deceive a Christian into being circumcised, and then come before God and boast in their prayers (as if it were deliciously well done) that they have brought us to be God's people through circumcision; they disgrace, despise and curse the foreskin as an ugly abomination that will not let us be God's people, but their circumcision alone will do it.

(51) What then shall God do to such prayer and praise of theirs, which they bring forth with such gross blasphemous lies, contrary to all Scripture (as heard)? Yes, he will hear them and bring them back to the land. So I mean, if they were in heaven, only such glory, prayer, praise and lies of the circumcision should plunge them into the abyss of the hell of the moment. But I have also written about this against the Sabbath keepers 3).

Therefore, dear Christian, beware of such damned people, whom God has let sink into such deep abominations and lies that it must all be vain lies, blasphemy and wickedness with them, whatever they do and speak, however good it may be.

52.⁴⁾ And sayest thou, What is the use of circumcision? or, Why hath God commanded it so severely? Answer: Let the Jews take care of it, what do we Gentiles ask for it? It is not imposed on us, as you have heard, nor are we allowed to follow it anywhere, but we can still be God's people, like those in Nineveh, in Babylon, in Persia, in Egypt. So no one can prove that God ever commanded a prophet or a Jew to circumcise the Gentiles. Therefore, let them leave us satisfied with their lies and idolatry, and since they want to be so clever and wise as to master and circumcise us Gentiles, let them first say why circumcision, or why God commanded it so harshly? They are obliged to do so, but they will do so when they return to Jerusalem, that is, when the devil goes to heaven. For they say that God commanded it, that by it one should become holy, blessed and God's people: you have heard that this is a shameful lie, because Moses and all the prophets say that their circumcision (because they were uncircumcised) did not help them, to whom it was commanded; how then should it help us, to whom it is not commanded?

But we Christians, speaking for ourselves, know well for what it was given, or for what it was used. But no Jew knows about it, and if you talk to him right away, it is like talking to a block or a stone. They do not let go of their glory and arrogance, that is, of their lies; they must be right, God must be their liar and be wrong; therefore let them always go and lie, as their fathers did from the beginning. But St. Paul teaches us Rom. 3, 1. 2. thus: that circumcision is not useful nor given, that it alone, as such a work done, makes holy or blessed, or that it is not given for the purpose of making a man holy.

1) Here the Erlangen edition again reprinted Walch's false Bible quotation "Ps. 105, 23.", in addition to twenty-seven others which are found in this writing.

2) "her" is missing in the Wittenberger.

3) No. 50 in this volume.

4) Wittenberger: Thus speak.

He says: "Circumcision has been made almost useful, so that God's word is entrusted to it. This is it, this is it, this is it, that circumcision was given and established for this purpose, that God's word and his promise should be kept and preserved in it, so that not the circumcision as a work in itself should be useful or enough, but that those who have it should be connected with such a sign, covenant or sacrament to obey and believe God in his words, and 1) to inherit all this to their descendants.

But if this causa finalis, or cause of circumcision, would no longer exist, then circumcision (as a mere work) would no longer be valid or useful, especially if the Jews would attach another causam finalem, or cause, to it. This is also stated in the text of Moses, Gen. 17, 8: "I will be their God," and they shall have such a sign on their flesh. This is just as much as St. Paul says: Circumcision is for the purpose of hearing or keeping God's word. For where His word is not heard nor kept, He is certainly no longer our God, since in this life we must take hold of and have God through the word alone. In His bright majesty, He cannot suffer nor endure this miserable life, as He says in Exodus 33:20: "No man can see Me and live."

(55) How the Jews have held such causes or final opinion of circumcision, all Scripture shows with innumerable examples. For as often as God wanted to speak to them through the prophets, whether it was about the Ten Commandments in which He punished them, or about the promise of future help, they were always hardened, or, as the sayings of Moses and Jeremiah above testify, they were uncircumcised in heart and ear. They wanted to do right and well, the prophets (that is, God Himself, whose word they preached) must have done wrong and evil, they beat them.

They have never let any go unpursued or undamned, except for a few in the time of David, Ezekiel and Josiah; otherwise nothing else has happened throughout the whole reign of the people of Israel and Judah, except to blaspheme God's word, to persecute, to mock, and to strangle prophets, so that, according to the histories, such a people must be called vain murderers of prophets and enemies of God's word; no one who reads the Bible can judge otherwise.

56. now God had (as said) not given the circumcision, nor accepted them thereby to the people, that they should persecute his word and his prophets, mock, murder, and thereby do right and God a service, but, as Moses says in the text of the circumcision 1 Mos. 17, 11. That they should hear God and his word; that is, they should let him be their God, if not, then the circumcision itself should not help them, as the now not God's circumcision, because it argued without God and against his word, would have become a mere man's work, because he had bound himself or his word to the circumcision. Where the two are separated from each other, the circumcision remains a hollow shell or numb husk, since there is no kernel or nut in it.

57. will give you a likeness of us Christians: God has given us baptism and the sacrament of his body and blood, and the keys of this final opinion or causa finali, that we should hear his word in it and practice faith in it (that is, he wants to be our God through it, and we should be his people through it). Now behold, what have we to accomplish? We have gone and separated the Word and faith from the Sacrament (that is, God and His final opinion) and made it a mere opus legis (or, as they, the papists, call it, opus operatum), badly a mere human work, which the priests offered to God and the laity performed as a work of obedience, as often as they received it. What remains of the Sacrament? Only the empty shell and lifeless ceremony, opus vanum, since there is nothing divine left inside, yes, a horrible abomination, by which we turn God's truth into lies and worship the right calf Aaron.

That is why God has delivered us into all kinds of terrible blindness and countless false teachings, as well as Mahomet and Pabst, along with all the devils, have come upon us.

(58) It was the same with the people of Israel. They have always separated circumcision as an opus operatum, their own work, from the word of God, and persecuted all the prophets through whom God wanted to speak to them (according to the appointed circumcision), and yet they always proudly boasted that they were God's people because of the circumcision. So they clash with each other: God wants them to hear him and to keep the circumcision right and whole; they do not want to do that, but they want God to look at their work of circumcision, that is, the half-circumcision (yes, the shell of the circumcision). He will not do that either; so the longer they go on, the further they get away from each other, and it is impossible to unite or reconcile them.

Now, who will prove God wrong here? Tell me, whoever you are that has reason, whether it is fitting for God to consider the works of those who will not hear His word, or whether He should consider those for His people who will not have Him for their God? According to all justice and equity, God may say that the Psalm sings [Ps. 81, 12. 13.]: "They do not want me, so I let them go"; and Deut. 32, 21.: "They anger me in that which is not God; so I will anger them again in that which is not a people."

60. Just as with us Christians, the papists must no longer be the church, for they do not want to let God be their God, because they do not want to hear his word, but persecute it in the most shameful way; they come here with their empty shells, sheep and chaff, hold mass and their ceremonies; God shall then look upon them, and hold them for his right church, and not consider that they do not hold him for the right God, that is, he shall not speak to them through his preachers, his word shall be heresy, devil and all calamity. Yes, he will do that, as they will learn, much worse than the Jews have learned.

61 From this it is well understood that circumcision has been almost useful and good, as St. Paul says; yes, not for their own sake, but for the sake of the word of God; for we consider it certain, and it is the truth, that the little children, on the eighth day of circumcision, have become children of God, as the words are written, "I will be their God," for they have attained complete circumcision, the word with its sign, and have not separated them from one another. For God is there, speaking to them, "I will be their God," which completed the circumcision in them. Just as with us the children received the whole, right, complete baptism, the word with the sign, and do not separate it from each other; they receive the kernel in the shell. God is there, who baptizes them and speaks to them, and thereby makes them blessed.

But when we have grown old, the pope comes, and the devil with him, and teaches us to make opus legis, or opus operatum, separating word and sign from one another, so that we may be saved by our own repentance, work, and satisfaction, and, as St. Peter says in the other epistle in the next chapter, v. 22, "that the sow after the flood rolls again in the dung, and the dog eats again what he has eaten. Thus our sacrament has become a work for us, and is eaten up again by it, which we had spit out. So also the Jews, when they were old, corrupted their good circumcision of the eighth day, and separated the word from the sign, and even made a human or acid work of it, so that they lost God and His word, and now have no more understanding in the Scriptures.

(63) Indeed, God had highly honored them by circumcising them, speaking to them before all the nations of the earth and trusting in His word. And to keep his word with them, he gave them a special land, performed great miracles through them, established kings and reigns, showered them with prophets who not only told them the best of the present time, but also promised the future Messiah, the Savior of the world, for whose sake he proved all these things to them, and told them to wait for him and to be sure of him without delay. For the sake of the same, God was pleased to do everything; for the sake of the same, Abraham was called to be the

He was given circumcision, and the people of Israel so highly exalted, that all the world might know from what nation, country, time, even tribe, family, city, person he should come, that he might not be reproached by devils and men as coming from a dark corner or unknown ancestors, but his ancestors must be great arch-fathers, glorious kings, excellent prophets who testify of him.

(64) But as the Jews (except a few) have kept such promises and prophets, it is said above that they have never been able to suffer a prophet, and have always persecuted God's word for and for, and will not hear God; as all the prophets complain and cry out against them. And as their fathers did, so they still do today, and 1) will never do otherwise. For if even now Isaiah, Jeremiah and other prophets should come among them and preach what they preached at that time, or say that the Jews' present circumcision and hope in the Messiah is nothing, they would just as soon die at their hands as they died at that time. Look at whoever has reason (Christian reason will remain silent), how they so wantonly turn and torture the books of the prophets with their desperate glosses against their own conscience (of which we might want to touch something hereafter). For although they can no longer stone and kill the prophets bodily or personally, they still torture them spiritually, tearing, choking, and slaying their beautiful sayings, which must grieve and hurt a human heart, because one must see how they are so completely handed over to the devil to possess through God's wrath. Summa: They are a prophet-murdering people; if they can no longer murder the living, they must still murder and torture the dead.

After that, when they have scourged God in His word, 2) crucified, spit upon, blasphemed and cursed, as Isaiah 8:21 prophesies, they come trolling along with their

1) "and" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) In the old editions: zergeischelt. Jonas: flagellarunt.

They want to be God's people alone and their own, condemning all the world, and their arrogance and glory should please God, giving a Messiah for it, whom they choose and prefigure for Him. Therefore beware, dear Christian, of such a damned, desperate people, from whom you can learn nothing, but to punish God and His Word with lies, blasphemy, perversion, murdering prophets, and to proudly and arrogantly despise all people on earth, so that even if God would let everything else go to them (which is impossible), he could not suffer such unspeakable (though poor and miserable) arrogance. For he is called a God of the humble, as Isaiah 66:2 says: "On whom will my spirit rest? Only on the humble who fears my word."

(66) Enough has been said about the other false glory of the Jews, namely, about the false, null circumcision, which did not help them at the time when they were punished by Moses and Jeremiah because of their uncircumcised heart; how much less is it of any use now, because it is nothing more than the devil's jugglery, so that he mimics and fools them, just like the Turks! For where God's word is no longer there, there is no more circumcision.

The third reason and glory of the Jews is the Law, given to them by God. 3)

Third, they have great pride that God spoke to them and gave the Law of Moses on Mount Sinai [Ex 19:20]. Here we come to the right place, here 'God must let Himself be rightly tortured, and hear how they praise Him and sing Him to pieces, that He sanctified them with His holy law and set them apart and brought them out of Egypt before all nations. Here we poor goyim stink; oh how nothing we are compared to this holy, chosen, noble and highly praised people, who have God's word! Yes, they say (as I heard myself). Dear, what do you want to say, God Himself spoke to us on the mountain.

3) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

Sinai, and with no other people. Here we have nothing to rebel against; for we cannot deny this glory, because Mosi's books are there, and David, Psalm 147:19, 20, also testifies and says: "He shows Jacob his word, Israel his manners and his statutes. So he does not do to the Gentiles, nor let them know his judgments," and Psalm 103:7: "He has let Mosi know his ways, the children of Israel his doings."

68 And here they say, as at the same time at Mount Sinai, the rulers of the people wore wreaths as a sign that they had contracted a marriage with God through the Law and had become His bride, and had held weddings with one another. It is also seen afterwards in all the prophets that God stands and speaks with the children of Israel as a man with his wife; from this also comes the special service of Baal; for Baal means a householder or householder, Bula a housewife; which word Bula has now also become German, as one says: Mein holder Buhle, and: I must have a paramour, which in former times was honestly called a mead, therefore a companion buhlete to marriage; now it has come into a different sense.

(69) Come now, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and all the prophets, and whoever will, be bold and say that such a noble people, to whom God Himself speaks, even whom He Himself takes in marriage by the Law and unites as to a bride, that they should not be God's people. I mean, he should run and see cream; 1) with teeth (where they had no other weapons) they would tear and bite him in pieces, that he would take such glory, praise and honor from them. It is not to be said nor to be understood, what a stubborn, untamed, desperate arrogance is in the people, by this glory in them grown up, that God Himself has spoken with them; no prophet has been able to arise nor stand against them, Moses himself.

1) The expression: "Ram saw" - to run badly, we meet also in Luther's "small answer to Duke Georgen of Saxony next book", Walch, St. Louis edition, vol. XIX, 1875; likewise vol. XIII, 937, § 38. Here it is written in the old editions "Rham". It means the word Ram: waste, dirt, use. Jonas translates: pulcre excepturi essent eos Judaei.

But not. For 4 Mos. 16, 3. began Korah, and pretended that they were all holy people of God, why Moses alone wanted to rule and teach? At that time they were only Korahites, not true Israelites. For just as Korah persecuted Moses, so they have never left a prophet alive or unpursued, let alone obeyed him.

(70) And she was found to be a bride in disgrace, even a desperate harlot and a wicked brat, with whom God was always struggling, fighting and beating. If he punished or struck them with his word through the prophets, they struck him on the mouth, and killed his prophets, or bit like a bad dog in the stick, so that they were struck, as Ps. 95, 10. says: "I had forty years trouble with this people, and said, They are people whose heart always wants the wrong way, and will not learn my ways." And Moses himself, Deut. 31, 27. says: "I know your disobedience and stubbornness. Behold, because I am yet alive with you, ye have been disobedient against the LORD; how much more after my death?" And Isaiah 48:4, "I know that thou art hard, and thy neck is a vein of iron, and thy forehead is brass": so henceforth, whosoever will, may read for himself; and the Jews well know how in all the prophets through and through the children of Israel are reproached as a disobedient, wicked people, and the most wicked whore, when they praised very highly the law of Moses, and circumcision, and the blood of the fathers.

(71) Here one would say: Yes, let this be said of the wicked Jews, not of the pious ones, as they are now. Well, I am content this time that they must confess and acknowledge that the wicked Jews cannot be God's people, and that the blood, circumcision and law of Moses do not help them. Why then do they praise circumcision, blood and law, even the most wicked ones as well as the pious ones? And the worse a Jew is, the more trustworthy he is, simply because he is a Jew, that is, of Abraham's seed, circumcised and under the law of Moses. For David and other pious Jews have not been so proud as the present desperate Jews; which, how wicked they are.

Nevertheless, they want to be the noblest lords against us heathens, because of their blood or law, which chides them like the worst harlots and knaves, as the sun shines on them.

(72) Further, if they are the pious Jews, and not the Hurian people, as the prophets say, how is it that their piety is so secret that God Himself cannot know about it, nor they themselves? For they have now prayed, cried out, atoned for almost 1500 years (as I said); yet God will not hear them, when we know from the Scriptures that God will hear the prayer or sighing of the righteous, as the Psalter says [Psalm 145:19.]: "He does what those who fear Him want, and hears their prayer," and Psalm 34:18: "The righteous cry out, and the Lord hears them," as He promised, Psalm 50:15: "Call upon Me in the time of trouble, and I will hear you and save you." And many more of these sayings in the Scriptures. For if they were not, who would or could pray? Summa, he says he will be their God in the first commandment, Deut. 5, 6, 9. How is it that he will not hear these Jews? They must truly be the wicked Huric people, that is, not God's people, and their glory of blood, circumcision and law must be a dung. If there were a few pious Jews among them, who would stand with them, he would have to be heard, for God cannot let His saints pray in vain, as the Scriptures give many examples of. From this it is evident that they must not be the pious Jews, but rather the lost bunch of the Horean and murderous people.

73. Also, such piety (as said) is so secret among themselves that they themselves cannot know about it (what should God know about it?). For they are full of all wickedness, of avarice, envy, hatred among themselves, arrogance, usury, pride, swearing against us Gentiles, so that a Jew would have to have very sharp eyes, if he were to recognize a pious Jew, keep silent, that they should all be God's people, as they boast. For they truly conceal their piety very much under their public vices, and yet want to be God's people all the same, none excluded, Abraham's blood, the circumcision and Moses' people, that is, God's people, against which the Gentiles should be vile, knowing full well that God cannot suffer such things, neither did He suffer them of the angels: neither shall He hear, nor must He hear, their lies and blasphemies, that they will be His people, because of the law which He gave them, which He spake unto their fathers at Sinai.

74. What shall one say much? If the glory were enough that God should esteem them His people, that He spoke to them and they have His word or commandment, then the devils in hell are much more worthy to be God's people, neither the Jews, nor better neither all men. For the devils have God's word and know much better than the Jews that there is a God who created them, to whom they owe all their might to love, honor, fear, serve, not to take His name in vain, to hear His word on the Sabbath and all hours, not to murder nor to do any evil against His creatures. Now what does it help them that they know and have God's commandment? Rather, let them boast that they are God's special, own, dear angels, while other angels must be nothing. How much better it would be for them if they did not have God's commandment, or did not know it! For if they did not have it, they would not be damned; for this very reason they are damned, because they have His commandment, and yet do not keep it, but go against it without ceasing.

75. Likewise, the murderers and harlots, thieves and husks, and all wicked men, may boast that they are God's holy, special people, because they have His word, and know that they should fear Him and be obedient, love Him and serve Him, honor His name, not murder, not commit adultery, not steal, and not do evil; for if they had not his holy right word, they could not sin; but if they sin and are condemned, it is certain that they have the holy right word of God against which they sin. Let them now boast, as the Jews did, that God sanctified them by His law and chose them to be a peculiar people before all men.

(76) It is the same glory that the Jews boast about in their schools, praising and praising.

thank God that He has sanctified them by His law and made them a nation, knowing full well that they are not full of pride, envy, usury, covetousness and all wickedness, and most of all those who want to be very devout and holy in their prayers. For they are so blind that they not only practice usury, but teach it as a right that God commanded them through Moses, in which, as in all other things, they shamefully lie to God, not having time to speak of it now.

77. But whether they pretend that they are not sanctified by the Ten Commandments, because all nations and devils are obliged to keep them, or must be sanctified and condemned by them, they still have the other laws of Moses besides the Ten Commandments, which are given to them alone, and not to the nations, by which they must be sanctified and set apart above all peoples. Oh Lord God, what a lazy, loose, futile makeshift and subterfuge this is! If the Ten Commandments are not kept, then what is the keeping of the other laws but a mere jiggery-pokery and carnival larvae, yes, quite a mockery, so that God is taken for a fool? Just as if a wicked devil's head were to walk about in our country dressed as a pope, cardinal, bishop, or preacher, keeping all the laws and ways of such persons, and under such spiritual adornment would be a real devil, a wolf, an enemy of the church, a blasphemer, who would trample underfoot, curse, and condemn both the gospel and the ten commandments. O how beautiful a saint this should be before God!

78 Or if a beautiful woman in the world were to come in a little cross, and keep all the ways, rights, and customs of virginity, and were among them a nasty, shameful whore, against the ten commandments, what good would her beautiful obedience do her, that she outwardly led all the rights and ways of virginity? It would help her that one would be seven times more hostile to her than to a free public whore. Thus God has always reproached the children of Israel for being such a wicked whore through the prophets, that under the appearance and adornment of the

The outward laws and holiness have practiced all kinds of idolatry and wickedness, as Hosea especially laments, Cap. 2, 4. 5. ff.

(79) Where a virgin or a woman is pious, it is good that she be honestly and cleanly dressed and adorned, and outwardly modestly dressed; but where she is a harlot, the dresses, ornaments, garments and jewels would be much more honest on a sow lying in the dung, as Solomon says: "A golden braid on the sow's nose is a beautiful foolish woman" (that is, a harlot) [Proverbs 11:22]. Therefore, the glory of the outward laws of Moses, apart from the obedience of the Ten Commandments, is worthy of silence; indeed, it makes them sevenfold more unworthy to be God's people than the Gentiles are. For the outward laws were not given to make a people of God, but to adorn and decorate God's people outwardly, just as the Ten Commandments were not given to be boasted of and proudly despised by all the world, as if they were therefore holy and God's people, but were given to be kept and obeyed, as Moses and all the prophets do most vehemently. Let not him boast who has them (as is said of devils and wicked men), but let him boast who keeps them. But he that hath them, and keepeth them not, let him be ashamed and afraid, as he shall surely be damned thereby.

(80) But this is far too much for the blind, obstinate Jews, and if you were to talk to them about it, it would be like preaching the gospel to a sow. They cannot know what God's commandment is, let alone that they should know how to keep it; for they could not hear Moses, nor look him in the face, he had to put a covering over it [Ex. 34:33]; which covering is still there today, and still do not see Moses' face, that is, his teaching; it is covered for them until this day. So they could not hear God's word on Mount Sinai when He spoke to them, but turned back and said to Moses, "Speak to us, and we will hear and do it; the Lord shall not speak to us, lest we die" [Ex 20:19]. It is even a high prophetic mind, know what is God's commandment and how to keep it.

Moses understood it well when he said, Ex 34:7: "You are the God who forgives sin, and no one is innocent before you," which means: No one keeps your commandments unless you forgive sin. As David Ps. 32, 1. 2. also testifies: "Blessed is he whose sins are forgiven, and God does not impute sin to him"; and in the same Psalm, v. 6.: "All the saints must pray for their sin" 2c., that is, no saint keeps God's commandment. If the saints do not keep it, how will the wicked, unbelievers, evil ones keep it? Again Ps. 143, 2.: "O Lord God, do not enter into judgment with your servant, for before you no living man is righteous." This is spoken clearly enough, that even the holy servants of God are not righteous before God, if he does not remove his judgment and acts with mercy against them, that is, they do not keep his commandment and are not allowed forgiveness of sins.

82. Now to this belongs a man whom we enjoy in this, who bears our sin for us, as Isaiah 53:6 says: "The Lord has laid on him all our sin. Yes, this means to understand correctly what God's commandments are and how they must be kept, namely, when we know, recognize, and even feel that we have them, and cannot keep them nor keep them, because of which we must be poor sinners and guilty before God, and only by sheer grace and mercy obtain forgiveness of such guilt and disobedience through the man on whom God has laid such sin. 1) We Christians speak and teach about this; the prophets and apostles speak and teach about this. And these are they who were and still are the bride of our Lord God and a pure virgin; and yet they boast of no law nor holiness, as the Jews do in their synagogues, but complain of the law and cry for mercy and forgiveness of sins. But the Jews are as holy as the barefoot monks, who have so much of the rest of holiness that they also help other people to heaven with it, and still keep a supply, of the same much, much to sell. With all of these, this matter is not to be spoken of, for there blindness and hopefulness is as firm as an iron mountain. They are right; God is wrong. Let them go, and let us stay with those who pray the Misei, the 51st Psalm, that is, those who know and understand what is law and what is to keep or not to keep the law.

(83) Now from this, Christian, know what you do when you let the blind Jews deceive you. This is certainly true according to the saying: Where one blind man leads another, they both fall into the pit [Luc. 6, 39]. You can learn nothing more from them than ignorance of divine commandments, and yet boast and be arrogant against all the Gentiles, who are much better than they are before God, because they do not have such arrogance of holiness, and yet do much more of the law than they do, the trustworthy, holy and damned blasphemers and liars.

Therefore beware of the Jews and know where they have their schools, that there is nothing else but a devil's nest, in which vain self-glory, arrogance, lying and blasphemy, desecration of God and men are practiced in the most poisonous and bitter way, as the devils themselves do. And where you see or hear a Jew teaching, think no other than that you hear a poisonous basilisk, which also poisons and kills people with its face. They are given to this by the wrath of God, that they think that their glory, their hope, their lying to God, their cursing all men, is a right and great service of God, which befits and is due to such noble blood of the fathers and the circumcised saints (however evil they feel themselves to be in tangible vices), and they want to do well with it. Beware of them!

The fourth reason and glory of the Jews of the land of Canaan. 2)

85] Fourth, they have the great high glory and hope that they have had the land of Canaan, the city of Jerusalem and the temple of God. Now, although God has brought down such glory and arrogance many times, they have not.

1) Wittenberger: learn and talk. Jonas: docemus et loquimur.

2) This heading is found in the Jena and partly also in the Wittenberg edition.

especially by the king of Babylon, who led them away and destroyed everything, as the king of Assyria led away the whole of Israel before and destroyed everything, and finally they have been wiped out and devastated by the Romans, now for more than 1400 years, that they might take hold of how God has not looked at nor will look at land, city, temple, priesthood, nor principality, that He would therefore consider them His own special people; still their iron neck (as Isaiah calls them [48, 4.]) has not been bent, nor has their brazen forehead been shamed, they remain blind as a bat and hardened, immobile, still hoping that God will bring them back home and restore everything.

Now Moses had told them many times, first, that they would not take the land before other nations because of their righteousness, because they were a stiff-necked, wicked, disobedient people; and second, that where they did not keep his commandments, they would soon be driven out 2) and perish. And when he chose the city of Jerusalem, he made it very clear in all the prophets that if they did not keep God's commandment, he would destroy and destroy the city of Jerusalem, his seat and throne. Item, when Solomon had built the temple, sacrificed to God and prayed, he said to him 1 Kings 9:3, 6, 7: "I have heard you, and have sanctified this house" 2c. Soon after: "But if ye will transgress, and not keep my commandments, then will I cast Israel out of the land, and will forsake this my holy house, and it shall be a reproach unto all the heathen" 2c. All this unseen and unheeded, they stood, as they still stand, as a rock and as a senseless 3) stone image, on the fact that God had given them the land, city and temple. Land, city and temple had been given to them, and therefore they had to be God's people or church.

(87) They do not hear and see that God has given everything for the purpose of keeping His commandment, that is, to keep Him as their God, so they should be His people and church. Just as they praise their tribe and their God, so they are his people.

But that they should keep his commandment, because of which and for which he chose their blood, they do not see it and do not respect it. Their circumcision they praise; but that for which they are circumcised, that they should keep God's commandment, that is nothing. They praise their laws, their temple, their worship, their city, their land and their dominion, but why they have them they do not respect.

The devil has possessed this people with all his angels, so that they always praise the outward things, their gifts, their deeds and works before God, that is, they sacrifice the empty shells without a core, so that he will look at them and have them as a people, exalting and blessing them above all the nations. But that he will keep his commandment from them and be honored for a god, that they will not consider. So it goes according to the saying of Moses [Deut. 32, 21]: "They do not consider me as God, so I do not consider them as my people", as Hosea, 2, 2. also says.

(89) And if God had not torn up the city of Jerusalem and driven it out of the land, but had kept it inside as before, no one could have persuaded them that they were not God's people, because they still had the temple, the city and the land, no matter how wicked, disobedient and stiff-necked they were, even though the prophets had been snowing daily and a thousand Moses had been standing there shouting: You are not God's people, because you are disobedient and stubborn to God. They cannot yet abandon their nonsensical, frenzied boast that they are God's people, now that they have been driven out, disturbed and rejected for fifteen hundred years. Nor do they hope to get there again for the sake of their own merits. For they have no promise to comfort themselves without what they smear into the Scriptures out of their erroneous conceit.

90 Our apostle, St. Paul, rightly said of them that they "strive for God, but with ignorance" 2c. [They want to be God's people with their deeds, works and outward nature, and not out of pure grace and mercy, as all the prophets and the true children of Israel had to do, as said; therefore there is no counsel nor help. Just like all things

1) "all" is missing in the Jenaer, in Walch and in the Erlanger.

2) "his" is missing in the Jena and the Erlangen.

3) - "senseless" is missing in the Wittenberg. Jonas: mente carens.

Our papists, bishops, monks and priests, together with their followers, want to be God's people and church by force, and God should look at them because they are baptized, have the name and sit in the regiment. There they stand like a rock; if a hundred thousand apostles came and said: You are not the church because you have such a nature, or much of your own works and worship, when you do it at the best; but must despair of all this, and cling only to grace and mercy in Christ; 2c. If not, you are the devil's whore, or school of boys, and not the church. They might murder, burn, and drive out such apostles; but that they should believe them, and leave their own doings, there is no hope, nothing will come of it.

The Turks do the same with their worship, and so do all the sectarians, and all are full of Jews, Turks, papists and sectarians, who all want to be the church and God's people according to their conceit and glory, regardless of the right united faith and obedience of divine commandments, by which alone they become and remain God's children. And even though they do not all lead in the same way, but one takes this way, the other that way, and want to go out in various ways, they are all of the same opinion and final intention, that through their actions they want to come to be God's people, and thus boast and claim that they are the ones whom God will look upon. These are the foxes of Samson, which are joined together with their tails at the end, but with their heads full of each other they run in various ways [Judges 15:4].

92. but this, as said above, is much too high for the Jews, the Turks, Papists also; as St. Paul [says] 1 Cor. 2, 14.: "The cattle man does not hear divine things, there must be spiritual understanding"; otherwise it remains, as Isaiah 6, 10. says: "With seeing eyes they do not see, with hearing ears they do not hear." For they know not what they hear, see, speak, or set, and yet they would not that they should be blind and deaf. Let this be enough of the false glory and arrogance of the Jews, since with vain lies they want to persuade God to consider them His people.

The other part: Whether Messiah has come or not. 1)

Now let us talk about the main part, when they ask God for the Messiah. Here they are the true holy and pious children; here they truly do not want to be liars or blasphemers, but certain prophets that Messiah has not come, but is yet to come. Who will punish them here for being mistaken or lacking? If all the angels and God Himself spoke publicly on Mount Sinai or in Jerusalem in the Temple that Messiah had long since come and that there was no need to wait for Him, God Himself would have to be the devil and all the angels would have to be devils. So certain are these holiest, truest prophets that Messiah has not come, but is yet to come. Much less will they hear us, as they have done until now and still do, since they have been so magnificently overcome by many fine scholars, even from their own lineage, that even stone and wood, if they had half a brain, would have to confess this, and yet they knowingly rage against known truth 2); but their damned rabbis, who know otherwise, so wantonly poison their poor youth and common men and turn them away from the truth. For I hold that where such Scripture should be read by the common man and youth, they should all stone their rabbis and punish them worse than they do us Christians. But the evil-doers prevent it from coming before them, as they faithfully mean to do.

And if I had not experienced my papists, it would have been unbelievable to me that there should be such wicked people on earth, who should knowingly resist public, known truth, that is, God Himself to the face, because I would not have allowed such hardened courage in any man's heart, but only in the devil's heart. But now I am not surprised, neither of the Turks nor of the Jews blindness, hardness, malice, because I must see such in the most holy fathers of the church, pope, cardinals, bishops. O you terrible wrath and incomprehensible judgment of the high divine majesty, how can you be so despised by the children of men that we do not tremble badly to death before you in a moment? How even an unbearable sight art thou, even in the most holy hearts and eyes, as is seen in Moses and the prophets, but these 1) hearts of stone and souls of iron mock thee so defiantly!

1) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

2) Thus the Wittenberg and the Jena. The old edition of Walch and the Erlangen: "Wahrheiten". Jonas: veritati.

(95) However, although we may work on the Jews in vain (for I said above that I do not want to argue with them), we want to strengthen our faith and warn the weak Christians against the Jews, first of all to honor God by acting out their nonsensical foolishness among ourselves, to prove that we believe rightly, and to make them go completely astray in this article of the Messiah. We Christians have our New Testament, which certainly testifies to us and enough to the Messiah. But that the Jews do not believe it, we do not inquire, much less believe their damned glosses, and let them always go and wait for their Messiah; their unbelief does us no harm, but what it helps them and has helped them so far, they may ask their protracted misery about it, which will answer well for us. Whoever does not want to follow, let him stay behind. For they act as if we care a great deal for them, and only pervert us to the annoyance of the Scriptures, when we neither desire nor need anything from their conversion for our advantage, benefit or help, but do everything we do for their good; if they do not want that, let them leave it, we are excused and can well do without them with all that they are, have and are able to do for salvation. We have the Scriptures better than they do, we know that for sure (praise God!), and all devils shall not take them from us, let alone the wretched Jews.

The first saying from which it is proven that Messiah has come. 2) 96 First of all, we take before us the saying Gen 49:10: "The scepter shall not come out of Judah until the Shiloh be removed.

1) Wittenberger: the. Jonas: his.

2) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

Come, and the nations will follow" 2c. This saying of the holy patriarch Jacob, which he spoke at the end of his life, the new foreign Jews have been tortured and crucified many times against their own conscience. For they know well that their interpreting and turning is nothing but wantonness and superstition. And I am reminded of their words like an evil, stiff-necked woman who resists her husband and wants to have the last word, even though she knows that she is wrong. So the blinded people also think it is enough if they can bark and babble against the text and right mind, do not ask anything about it, that they are deliberately lying. And beware, they would rather suffer that the sentence were never written than that they should leave their mind; it does them the burnt harm, and they cannot get over it.

97 For the ancient Jews of right had the mind that we Christians have, namely, that in the tribe of Judah the regiment or scepter should remain until Messiah comes: "to him then shall the nations cleave" and fall, that is, the scepter should not then be in the tribe of Judah alone, but (as the prophets afterwards express it) it should come among all the nations of the earth at the time of Messiah. However, until the time of Messiah, the scepter would remain in the small corner of Judah. Such is (I say) the mind of the prophets and the ancient Jews, they cannot deny it. For also their Chaldean Bible, which they must not resist, as little as the Hebrew itself, clearly shows this. It reads in German thus: "From the house of Judah the Shulman shall not be taken away, nor the Sapphra from his children's children forever, until the Messiah come, whose is the kingdom, and the nations shall make themselves obedient to him." This is the Chaldean text faithfully and certainly Germanized, which no Jew nor devil can deny me.

Since now Moses Schebet, 3) [xxx] in Hebrew, we say Scepter in German, the Chaldean interpreter says "Schulttan"; these words we want to explain. Schebet, Hebrew, means Virga, actually here not an

3) In the old editions: "Scheuet". In the old edition of Walch and in the Erlanger: "Schebät".

The German word "Ruthe" means a birch tree, which is used to stump children, and not a staff, which is used to stump the sick and the elderly, 1) but a stick that a judge holds in his hand when he sits in judgment. Which stick, in time, as the splendor of the world increased, became silver and gold, and is now called a scepter, that is, a royal stick. Skeptron is a Greek word, but has now become German; for Homerus, lib. 1, also describes his king Achilles as having had a wooden scepter adorned with silver pins 2); from this one can see what scepters have been, and from where they have finally become completely silver and golden. Summa, it is the staff, be it silver, wooden or golden, which the king, or whoever is in his place, carries. And means nothing else than a dominion or kingdom; there is no doubt in anyone's mind about this.

The Chaldean interpreter does not need the word shebeth, staff or scepter to make this clear; but instead he puts the person who carries the same staff and says, Shultan, that is, a prince, lord or king shall not come from the house of Judah, that is, there shall be a sultan in the house of Judah until Messiah comes. For Sultan is also Hebrew, and is now well known to us Christians, who have had your Sultan Egypti for longer than six hundred years, and have gained little in the way of landmarks. For the Saracens call their king or prince Sultan, that is, lord or ruler, or overlord. Hence the Hebrew word "Schilt," which has become quite pure German from the Hebrew, as if to say that a prince or lord should be the shield, protection and umbrella of his subjects, so he is a true sultan or lord 2c. Some also want to make the Schultes 3) from it, I let that happen and go.

100. is Saphra, which is otherwise called Sopher in Hebrew (because Chaldee and Hebrew is not far from each other, and almost the same; just as Saxons and Swabians speak the same German, and yet there is a great difference). But we have commonly Germanized sopher: chancellor. Saphra interpret them now allammt, also Burgensis: serious, scribes; such the gospel calls "Schristgelehrte". These are not bad scribes who write for pay or without 4) force. They are the wise, great rulers, doctores, magistri, who teach, instruct and maintain the law in the reign. This also includes the chancellery, parliament, courts, councils and everything that helps to govern through wisdom and law. For this is what Moses means by the word Mechokek, 5) which means the one who teaches, issues and judges commandments and orders; as among the Saracens, the sultan's scribes or scholars are his doctores, masters and scholars who teach, interpret and preserve the Alkoran, as the rights of his country. In the papacy, the pope's scribes or saphra are the canonists or assists who teach and preserve his decrees and rights. In the Empire, the Emperor's saphra or scholars of Christ are the Doctores LL. [Legum], secular lawyers, the teach imperial law, give and receive advice. 6)

So Judah also had scribes, that is, Christian scholars, who taught and preserved the Law of Moses, which was their law of the land. Therefore we have translated it: Mechokek, "master", that is, doctor, teacher 2c. And this is also the intention of the little word, Mechokek, that is, the master shall not be taken from his feet, that is, teachers and listeners, who fitzen zun Füßen, shall remain in the proper regiment. For every country, if it is to exist, it must have the two pieces, namely, a power and a right. The country must have a lord, a head, a regent. So it must also have a right, according to which the ruler is held; this is the rod and mechokek or sultan and saphra, as Solomon also shows; when he had received the rod, that is, the kingdom, he asked for wisdom, so that he might rule the people rightly.

1) The old edition of Walch and the Erlanger: "angehen".

2) Pfinchen---Pinnchen, small nails. (Grimm.) Jonas: clavis.

3) "Schuttes" (in the Jenaer and Erlanger) or, as the Wittenberger writes: "Schuttheiß" -- Schultheiß, Schulze.

4) "Without" is missing in the Wittenberg. Justus Jonas translates "without violence" by: privatim.

5) The old editions offer: Mechokek.

6) "Rath geben und erhalten" is missing in the Wittenberger.

For where there is power without justice, where the sultan does and lets what he wants and not what he should, there is no rule but tyranny, as Nero, Caligula, Dionysius, Heinz and the like are. Again, since law is without power, the wild rabble also does what it wants, and remains no regiment. Therefore there must be both law and power, Sultan and Saphra, that one may help the other.

(102) Therefore they call Saphra the councilors who were to be in Jerusalem from the tribe of Judah, whom they call Sanhedrim. Herod, a foreigner, an Edomite, wiped out all of them and became both sultan and saphra, cane and mechokek, lord and scribe in the house of Judah. Then began this saying of the patriarch to be fulfilled, that Judah had no more dominion nor saphra. Then it was time for Messiah to come and take his kingdom on the throne of David forever, as prophesied in Isaiah 9:7. Therefore let us now consider the saying of the patriarch.

103. "Judah, you are (he says) [Gen. 49, 8.], you will be praised by your brothers" 2c. This, I respect, should not be a gloss, be said clearly enough, that the tribe of Judah should be honored [be] above all its other brothers and have the preference. Further: "Your hand will be on the neck of your enemies" 2c. This is clear enough that the famous and distinguished tribe of Judah must have enemies and opposition, but it must have happiness and victory. Further: "Thy brethren shall bow and bend before thee" 2c. It is clear that this does not refer to the prison, but to the rule over his brothers, all of which is fulfilled in King David. But not only did the same tribe of Judah become lord over its brothers in David, but it also took hold like a lion and forced other nations under it, such as the Philistines, Syrians, Moabites, Ammonites and Edomites.

104 He praises this with these glorious words: "Judah is a young lion; you have come up from the grave. He has lain down like a lion and like a lioness, who will rise up against him?" That is, he has sat and wrought a kingdom that no one has been able to resist, as such nations around have often and mightily attempted to do.

(105) Now the patriarch has set up, established and confirmed the kingdom, the sultan, the rod, the saphra, in the tribe of Judah, and Judah the sultan sits in the reign; what will become now? This is what will happen," he says, "until Messiah comes; that is, many will rise up against him and want to overthrow the kingdom and bring it to nothing, so that it will be destroyed from the earth; as the histories of the kings and prophets abundantly testify, that all the nations have dealt fiercely with it for and for, and he himself says above that Judah must have enemies. For in the world it is so: Where a kingdom or principality comes up, there is no rest of envy, until it is destroyed to the ground. This is what all histories and examples say.

But here saith the Holy Ghost: This kingdom in the tribe of Judah is mine; let no man take it from me, though he be mighty and wicked, though the gates of hell be; let it be called, Non auferetur. You devils and pagans say: Auferetur, we want to clean it up, we want to devour it, we want to make it quiet, as the 74th Psalm v. 8. complains very much: but it shall remain devoured, undesolate for me, the Sheba or Sultan shall not come away from the house of Judah, nor the Saphra from his children's children, even if you all become mad and foolish, until Shiloh or Messiah comes.

107. And when he comes, it will be much more different and glorious. For since you did not want the tribe of Judah to suffer in a small corner, I will first make a great lion out of it, who will become sultan and sapphire in all the world. And I will make it so that he shall not draw a sword, nor shed a drop of blood, but the nations shall freely and gladly make themselves subject and obedient to him. This shall be his kingdom. For it is the kingdom and all his.

Grasp this mind and thought, and go with it to the text, Hebrew and Chaldee, what does Saying: "The scepter shall not depart from Judah" 2c., is it matter, whether your heart will not say to you together as bright and clear as that: "God created heaven and with the letters: By the dear God, this is the truth, this is earth. And the work, namely, that now at fifteen hundred the patriarch's opinion. Then go to the histories, and see years the scepter has departed from Judah, is as tangible if it has not happened and is not happening, and is still and obvious as heaven and earth are; that one happening, then you will have to say again: It is truly so. understands sufficiently how the Jews neither err nor are For it is undeniable that in the tribe of Judah the Sultan deceived, but maliciously and wantonly deny and and Sapphira remained until Herodem, even though it was blaspheme the recognized truth against their conscience. sometimes weak and not without great resistance; it is still Let no one esteem such a man worthy to speak a word to preserved. But under Herod and after Herod it was ruined him, even if it were from Marcolfo, keep silent about such and destroyed, but it was taken away, so that even high divine words and works.

Jerusalem, where the throne of the tribe of Judah was, (111) But whoever feels like being unfunny with me, I and the land of Canaan no longer remained, and so the will serve him with this, and show the Jews the gloss on saying was fulfilled that the Sultan had gone and Messiah this saying. First of all, those who do not fall away from the had come. text, but remain with the text, especially with the Chaldean

Now I do not have the time to show how rich a source text, which no sensible Jew may deny, thus turn out: God's this saying is, and how the prophets have taken so much promise is certain, but misery's sins prevent what is from it about the fall of the Jews and the profession of the promised from coming to pass; therefore we still wait for Gentiles, of which these new Jews and Bastards know His promise until we have atoned 2c. Is this excuse not nothing at all. This time we have it brightly and powerfully lazy, even blasphemous enough? Just as if God's promise from this saying that Messiah must have come about the stood on our righteousness, or coexisted with our sin, that time of Herod; or must say that God did not keep his, God would have to become a liar for the sake of our promise and thus lied. No one should do this except the sin, and again, become truthful for the sake of our wicked devil and his servants, the false bastards and righteousness. How could one speak more shamefully of foreign Jews. They do it without ceasing, God must be God than that He would be a reed that wavers, that can their liar, they want to be right, that Messiah has not yet be moved, according to which we fall or stand?

come, since God says that Messiah should come before If God did not promise us before and make us a the scepter of Judah is even gone; who has now been promise, because we were without sin, He would not have gone almost fifteen hundred years, as there are the clear been able to promise or make anything from the words of God, plus the obvious work and fulfillment of beginning. For thus says David, Ps. 130, 3: "Lord, wilt thou these same words. consider what sin is, who can abide before thee?" And Ps.

Now what is it that you would argue about this with a 143:2: "O Lord, enter not into judgment with thy servant, stubborn Jew? It is just as if you wanted to talk to a foolish for before thee no living man is righteous"; and of man and prove that God created heaven and earth, Proverbs much more. Hence the example of the children Genesis 1:1, and you showed him heaven and earth with of Israel in the wilderness, whom God leads into the land your fingers, but he still chatted that this was not heaven of Canaan without their righteousness, even with their or earth, which Genesis 1 speaks of, or not heaven and great sins and disgraces, only for the sake of His promise, as Moses says, Deut. 9:5, 6: "Know then that you are not earth, but something else, 2c. For this a righteous man.

Now that you are not brought into the land because of your righteousness, because you are a stiff-necked, disobedient (I mean, that means sinning) people, but that the Lord promised your fathers" 2c. As a sign he often wanted to destroy them, where Moses would not have prayed for them; so firmly did God's promise stand on their holiness.

It is true that when God promises something with a condition or proviso, saying, "If you will do this, I will do this," the promise is on our actions. As when he says to Solomon, 1 Kings 9:6, 7: "If you keep my commandments, this house shall be my sanctuary; if not, I will destroy it." But this promise of Messiah is not of this kind. For he saith not thus, If ye do this and that, Messiah shall come; if not, he shall not come: but freely he giveth it away, saying, Messiah shall come at the time when the scepter shall be removed from Judah. Such a promise is only based on divine truth and grace, which neither respects nor considers our actions. Therefore, this evasion of the Jews is rotten and quite blasphemous.

The others, who fall from the text, take before them and torture every word especially. And though they are not worthy to have their slobber and filth heard, yet, that their shame may be made manifest, we must have a little patience until we hear their courage also. For because they fall from the light text, they are already condemned by their own conscience, which compels them to obey the text, without wanting to charm the Hebrew words before our eyes, to our annoyance, as if we did not know the Chaldean text.

(115) Some are saying that Shiloh is the name of the city of Shiloh, where the ark of the covenant was, Judges 21:19. 21:19 [1 Sam. 4:3], that the opinion is, The scepter shall not depart from Judah until Shiloh come, that is, until Saul be king and anointed at Shiloh. This is too much of a rotten joke. Before Saul the king, not only Judah had no scepter, but all Israel had none. How could it have ceased when Saul became king? But the text says that Judah was master of his brethren before, and that he was the king of Israel.

He became a lion after Saul and thus received the scepter. So also before Saul no judge was lord or prince over the people of Israel, as Gideon said to the people, Judges. 8:23, when they wanted to make him and his heirs lord over them: "I will not be lord over you, neither will my son; God shall be lord over you." Neither was there any judge from the tribe of Judah, except Athniel, the first after Joshua; the rest all, except Saul, were from the other tribes. And though Athniel is called Caleb's youngest brother, it is not certain that he is of Judah; he may be of another father's descent. And it is not to be feared that Shiloh should be a city here, or that Saul should be crowned in Shiloh. For Saul was anointed by Samuel at Ramath, 1 Sam. 10:1, and confirmed at Gilgal.

116) Also where does it rhyme that the Chaldean says: of 1) Shiloh is the kingdom, and nations will be obedient to him? When did the city of Shiloh or Saul come to such honors? Israel is one people, not many nations, as they have one right, one worship, one name. But many nations are those who have other and different 2) rights, names and God. Now Jacob says that not the one nation Israel (which is before or under Judah's scepter), but other nations are to fall to Shiloh. Therefore this idle talk is nothing but an indication of the great courage of the Jews, who do not want to give victory to Jacob's saying, as they nevertheless feel that they must do in their conscience.

117) Others say that Shiloh is the king Jeroboam, crowned in Shiloh, to whom ten tribes of Israel fell, from the king Judah Roboam, 1 Kings 12:15. 3) Therefore this is the opinion of Jacob: The scepter will not come out of Judah until Shiloh comes, that is, until Jeroboam comes. This is indeed as rotten as that; for Jeroboam is not crowned at Shiloh, but at Shechem, 1 Kings 12:20. 1. Thus the scepter of

1) Jenaer: "the".

2) Jenaer: all sorts. Jonas: aliud.

3) The Jews try to bring out the opinion that Jeroboam was crowned in Shiloh by misinterpreting 1 Kings 12:15, although nothing like that is written there.

Judah was not taken, but the kingdom of Judah remained, and the tribe of Benjamin, along with all the children of Israel who lived in the cities of Judah and Benjamin, as it is written in 1 Kings 12, along with the entire priesthood, worship, temple and everything. Jeroboam also never gained control of the kingdom of Judah, much less other nations, as is said to have happened to Shiloh.

118) The third ones thus declare that Shiloh was sent, and that he was king Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, saying, The scepter of Judah shall not depart until Shiloh come, that is, the king of Babylon sent to take away Judah, and to destroy it. This is no good either, and a child who learns letters can overthrow it. For Shiloh and Shiloh are two different words. Shiloh may mean sent. But here it does not say Shiloh, sent, but Shiloh, which is, as the Chaldean says, Messiah. Now the king of Babylon is not the Messiah who is to come from Judah, as the Jews, indeed all the world, well know. Nor was the scepter of Judah taken away, whether the Jews were led captive to Babylon. For there was only one distemper seventy years: but there were great prophets, Jeremiah, Daniel, and Ezekiel, which endured, and determined the time, even Jechoniah king of Judah, 1) which was kept as a king in Babylon. And many that were carried away came again in their life, Hagg. 2. This is not called putting away the scepter, but a little prodding. For even though they had to be deprived of the land for a little while as a punishment, God pledged His precious word to them so that they would remain secure in the land. And much more surely is that which is promised, though it is not yet, than that which is and is not promised. For that must surely come; this is not certain for an hour. But these fifteen hundred years not a dog, let alone a prophet, said that they would be sure of the land. Therefore the scepter of Judah is finished, of which I have written against the sabbath keepers.

119. The fourth crucify the word Shebeth,

1) In the old editions the name "Jechanja" is written here, against it later in §132 "Jechonja". Also in the Bible both spellings occur.

And they interpret it thus: The rod shall not depart from Judah until Shiloh (that is, his son) come, who shall weaken the Gentiles. These call the rod the punishment or misery, since they are now in, and Messiah shall come and slay all the Gentiles. This also is a great wantonness, which putteth the Chaldean text freely out of sight, which they shall not do, nor may they do, and interpreteth the word Shebeth of his pleasure, and regardeth not that which goeth before, when Jacob maketh Judah prince and lion, or king, and saith quickly without remedy thereon, The scepter, or Shebeth, shall not depart from Judah. How could such an alien mind of punishment follow the glorious words of principality or kingdom so without means? The sins that deserved the punishment would have to be reported beforehand. But here nothing is reported before, 2) but praise, honor and glory of the tribe of Judah.

(120) And if the word shewbeth be called a rod of punishment, (3) what good is it? For the judge's or king's rod is also a rod of punishment over the wicked. Yes, the stick of punishment cannot be other than a judge's or sultan's stick, because the punishment is only due to the authorities, Deut. 32, 35. MIHI VINDICTA: 4) so remains for the still this opinion firmly that the scepter or stick should remain Judah, even if it is a punishment stick. But this Rabbi Muthwille interprets a foreign stick, which does not lie in Judah's hand, but on Judah's back from a foreign hand. And if that would be possible to understand so, as not is, where remains the other piece, from the Saphra or Mechokek to his feet? That would also have to be a strange master's mechokek and strange people's feet. But because Jacob says that it should be Judah and his feet Mechokek, the other piece, the staff, must also be his tribe's regiment.

2) Thus in the Wittenberg and in the Jena. In the old edition Walch's and in the Erlangen: "too previously reported".

3) Jenaer and Erlanger: "means". Jonas: significaret.

4) We have corrected these words according to Rom. 12, 19, in the Vulgate. In the old editions vindictam, while in the 5th book of Moses, 32, 35, it is written: Nva sst utio.

Some martyr the word DONEC, "until that", and should mean "therefore that"; the scepter of Judah will not come away DONEC, id est, therefore that Messiah will come. This is a delicious master, he should be crowned with donkey's feet, put the hindmost to DONEC vörderst, in this way: Messiah will come, therefore the scepter will remain. But Jacob set Judah a prince and a lion beforehand, to whom he gave the scepter before Messiah; and he gave the scepter to Messiah afterward. Thus Judah retains neither principality, nor lions, nor scepter, which Jacob grants him. In addition the fool makes from the word "until that" a new word "therefore that" out of pure courage, which the language does not admit to him.

Last of all is a rabbi who marshals the word "come," which to him must mean "setting," as the sun is Hebrew for "coming" when it sets. This one is rumbling so fine that I don't know if he wants to go on your head or on your ears. For I do not understand where to be waiting, since he thinks the scepter will not come away from Judah until Shiloh (the city) goes down, then David the Messiah will come. Where has the scepter of Judah been before Shiloh or Saul, as heard above? But so shall they rumble who rage against their conscience and known truth. Summa, Lyra says right, if they invent this and such a lot of glosses, the Chaldean text pushes them all to the ground, and convinces them that they are wanton liars, blasphemers, and transgressors of his word. But I wanted to bring it to us Germans, so that we can see what kind of fruit the blinded Jews are, and how mightily the truth of God stands against them.

(123) Seeing then that such evasions and vain pretexts are false, they confess that Messiah is come about the time when Jerusalem is destroyed; but that he is secretly in the world, and sitteth in Rome among the beggars, repenting for the Jews, until the time come that he should break forth. These are not the words of the Jews or of men, but the words of the arrogant, mocking devil, who through the Jews mocks us Christians with our Christ in the most bitter and venomous way, as if he should

The Christians boast much about their Christ, but they have to suffer and be tortured under the Romans and be beggars in the world, not only in the time of the emperors, but also in the time of the pope; they can do nothing in my kingdom in the world, I will remain their lord. Yes, mock, you wretched devil, and laugh at it enough, you shall tremble enough for 124 Thus it is with this saying of Jacob, as it is with the saying of Christ in our time, "This is my body, which is given for you. The scribes also tortured each word in a special and manifold way, putting the hindmost first, before they wanted to accept the text in its right sense, as we have seen. But it seems here that the Christians, as Lyra, Raymundus, Burgensis and their like, were nevertheless diligent, and would have liked to convert the Jews, they weeded from one word to another, as one weeds the foxes. But if they have been hunting for a long time, the Jews have finally persisted in their obstinacy, and knowingly want to err, and not depart from their rabbis; so we must also let them go, and not respect their poisonous blasphemy and lies.

It happened to me in the same way: Three learned Jews came to me, hoping that they would find a new Jew in me, because we began to read Hebrew here in Wittenberg; they also pretended that because we Christians began to read their books, things would soon get better. . When I now disputed with them, they did according to their manner, gave me their glosses; but when I forced them to the text, they escaped from me and said: They must believe their rabbis, as we believe the pope and doctors 2c. Now I had mercy on them, gave them an intercession to the escorts that they should let them go free for Christ's sake. But I learned afterwards how they had called Christ a Thola to me, that is, an executed thief. Therefore I will have nothing more to do with any Jew; they are, as St. Paul says, given over to wrath, the more one wants to help them, the harder and angrier they become; let them go.

But we Christians can strengthen our faith very much from this saying of Jacob.

ken that Messiah must be present, and have been present, now at fifteen hundred years. Not, as the devil scoffs, a beggar in Rome, but a reigning Messiah, otherwise God's word and promise would become a lie. And if the Jews wanted to let the Holy Scriptures be God's word, they would also have to give a Messiah from the time of Herod, let him be where he is, and wait for no other. Before they do this, they would rather tear up the Scriptures and turn them upside down, so that they are no longer Scriptures. As it is in truth with them, that they have neither Messiah nor Scripture, as Isaiah 28:7 prophesied of them. That is enough according to the saying of Jacob.

The other saying, from which it is proved that Messiah is coming. 1)

127 Let us take another before us, whom the Jews did not, nor can they, so bruise. Among the last words of David, 2 Sam. 23, 2. 3., he speaks thus: "The Spirit of the LORD has spoken through me, and his word has come through my tongue. The God of Israel has spoken to me, the mighty one in Israel" 2c. And soon after v. 5: "What is my Hans with God" (or that I give it actually and exactly from the Hebrew), "my house is not like this" 2c. That is, my house is not worth, it is too high and too much that God does so much with me poor man. "For he hath established with me an everlasting covenant, which shall be established and kept in all places." Mark well these words, that David boasts with so much and (as it seems) with superfluous words, that the Spirit of God spoke through him, and God's word was done through his tongue. Item: "The God of Israel has spoken to me, the Mighty One in Israel" 2c. As if he should say: Dear one, listen, hear who can hear. Here is God who speaks, listen 2c. What is it that you urge us to hear? What is God speaking through you? What does he want to tell you? What do you want us to hear?

128] This you shall hear, that God has made an everlasting, firm agreement with me and with my house,

1) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

(of which my house is not worthy), yes, it is 2) nothing against God; nevertheless, he has done it. What then is such an everlasting covenant? Open your ears and hear, my house and God have sworn together and joined forever; this is a covenant, a promise, which must remain forever. For it is God's covenant and promise, which no one shall break, nor hinder, nor be able to hinder; my house shall be called forever, established and refined in all things, as the word "Aruch" gives, that [it] shall not lack a hair, nor be wanting. Have you heard this? Do you also believe that God is true? Yes, without a doubt. But do you also believe that He can and will keep His word?

Now then, if God is true and almighty, and has spoken these words through David (as no Jew may deny), then David's house or rule (which is the same as much), since the time he spoke these words, must have remained, and still, and forever, that is, remain forever, or God must be a liar. Summa, we must have David's house or heir, who reigns from David's time until now and forever; or David died as a desperate liar at his last end, since he says these words with so much useless gibberish (as it seems) "God speaks," "God speaks," "God promises." For it is no good that we, with the Jews, want to prove God false, as if He had not kept such theUre words and promises. We must have (I say) an heir of David from his time, so that his house will not stand alone, even where he wills. For his Hans must remain forever, and remain forever. There is God's word that there shall be an everlasting, firm, sure covenant, in which nothing shall be lacking, but all things shall be Aruch, made perfect, as God makes perfect all His things, Ps. 111:3: "All His works are perfect and glorious."

130 Now let the Jews give such an heir to David, for they must give him, for it is written, David's house is eternal, which no man shall break nor hinder; but as the sun breaketh forth in the morning, which no cloud can withstand nor hinder, so there also stands. If they do not give an heir to David's house, this sentence has condemned them to the ground that they are certainly without God, without David, without Messiah and without everything, lost and eternally damned people. And they cannot deny that David's kingdom or house existed for all time until the Babylonian prison, yes, even through the Babylonian prison and after it until Herod's time. It did not exist by its own power or merit, but by virtue of this everlasting covenant, which was established with David's house. For they had several evil kings and rulers, who practiced idolatry, killed prophets and lived shamefully, such as Rehoboam, Jehoram, Joash, Ahaz, Manasseh, 2c., who made it worse than all the nations or the kings of Israel, so that they often deserved that both David's house and tribe were cut off, as finally happened to the kingdom of Israel. But this covenant, established with David, held fast, as the books of Kings and the prophets boast, that God gave a lamp or light to the house of David, and would not let it go out, as 2 Kings 8:19 and 2 Chron. 21, 7. It says: "The LORD would not destroy Judah because of his servant David, to whom he had spoken to give him a lamp among his children forever." Item 2 Sam. 7, 12. f.

2) "is" is missing in Walch's old edition and in the Erlanger.

131 And look at the kingdom of Israel, which never remained in one tribe or house until the third member, unless Jehu brought it into the fourth member in his house by special promise. Otherwise, it always fell from one tribe to another, sometimes barely remaining on one member, and not long after that, until it was completely extinguished. But the kingdom of Judah always remained on the tribe of Judah and on the house of David, by great miracles of God: for it had such great opposition from all the nations around, from Israel itself, from its own rebellions, from great idolatries and sinners, that it would not have been a miracle if it had perished in the third member under Rehoboam, or at least under Joram, Ahaz and Manasseh. But it had a strong restraint, which did not let it perish nor extinguish its light. It was promised to him, it should remain firm and eternal, firm and certain. So it also remained, and must remain until therefore remain and abide forever; for God does not lie and cannot lie.

(132) But the fact that the Jews drool over the Babylonian prison, as if it had perished there, is nothing, as we also said above. For it was only a small distemper that was certain to last for seventy years, and God had pledged His word for it, and had obtained it through excellent prophets. Also Jechoniah of Babylon was exalted above all kings. Daniel and his companions ruled not only over Judah and Israel, but also over the empire of Babylon. And though they were not in Jerusalem for a little while, yet they reigned in another place much more gloriously than in Jerusalem. So that it may be said that the house of David did not perish at Babylon, but 1) shone more gloriously than at Jerusalem; but they had to leave the place for a little while, as a punishment. For where a king lies in the field out of the land, he shall not be called a king that is gone out, though he be not at home, especially where he hath great victory and fortune against many nations; but he shall be called shining more gloriously out of the land than at home.

133 If then God has kept his covenant from the time of David until Herod, so that his house has not perished, he must have kept it from then on and keep it forever, so that David's house has not perished, nor can it perish forever. For we must not reproach our Lord God half truthfully and half deceitfully, that he has kept his covenant true from David until Herod, and that he has kept David's house faithful; but after Herod's time he began to lie and to be unfaithful, and has dropped and changed his everlasting covenant; but the house of David, as it remained and shone until Herod, so it must remain under Herod's time and after Herod, and shine forever.

134) Now we see how this saying of David is in harmony with the saying of Jacob the patriarch: "The 2) scepter shall be taken from Judah.

1) "habe" is missing in the Jenaer and Erlanger.

2) The Jena and Erlangen editions have here and in some other places: "das Scepter", but we have retained throughout with the Wittenberg the prevailing spelling: "der Scepter".

not come away, nor Mechokek from his feet, until Messiah come, whom the Gentiles will obey." What can be said here that is brighter and more different than that David's Hans should shine until Messiah comes? Then the house of David shall shine not only over Judah and Israel, but also over the Gentiles and other nations and more; that is, it shall not be extinguished, but shall shine more gloriously and more widely than before its coming. And so it has become an everlasting kingdom and an everlasting covenant, as David says. Therefore, it was decided that Messiah would come when the scepter of Judah was taken away, because we do not want to blaspheme God that He did not keep His covenant and oath. If the stiff-necked, obstinate Jews will not accept it, our faith is herewith firmly and strongly proven, and ask nothing of their foolish glosses, spun out of their heads; we have the clear text.

135 These last words of David are based on God's own word, when he speaks to David (as he boasts here at his end), 2 Sam. 7, 5. and says: "Should you build me a house to live in? You may read further, that there follows, how he tells one after another, that he had not dwelt in any house until then; but he had chosen him to be the ruler of his people, to whom he would give a firm place and rest. And he curses, "I will build you a house," that is, neither you nor anyone will build me a house to live in; I am far, far too great, as Isaiah also says in 66:1; but, "I will build, and I will build you a house." For thus saith the LORD (saith Nathan), "The LORD declareth unto thee, that the LORD will make thee an house." Now it is well known what is meant by a house built by men, namely an erected heap of stones and wood, quite perishable. But a house built by God means a father of a house, who has descendants and heirs of his blood and tribe, as Moses says in Exodus 1:21, "that God built houses for the midwives," because they let the children live against the king's commandment and did not strangle them. Again, the houses of the kings of Israel he breaks and destroys in the other member.

136 Therefore David has a house built by God, which shall have heirs for ever and ever; not a bad house, but "I have made thee prince over my people. Therefore it shall be called a princely, royal house, that is, the house of David the prince and king, wherein thy children shall reign for ever and ever, and be princes, as thou art. Now all this is proved by the books and histories of the kings, down to the time of Herod. Until then we have the scepter and saphra in the tribe of Judah.

137 Now follows the other piece, before 1) Silo. How long shall my house stand like this, and my heirs remain in my rule? Then he answers thus [2 Sam. 7, 12-16.]: "When your time is past, that you sleep with your fathers, I will raise up your seed after you, which shall come from your body (utero, that is, from your flesh and blood), to him I will confirm his kingdom, he shall build a house for my name, and I will confirm the throne of his kingdom forever. I will be his father, and he shall be my son. Where he does iniquity, I will punish him with the rod of men and with the blows of the children of men. But my mercy shall not be turned from him, as I turned it from Saul, whom I put away from before thee. But thy house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before me, and thy throne shall be established for ever." 2) This saying almost in the same words is also found in 1 Chron. 18, 11. ff. You may read that.

Whoever would interpret this saying as referring to Solomon would have to be a malicious interpreter. For although Solomon was not yet born at this time, nor did his adultery with his mother Bathsheba take place, he is not the seed or son of David, who was born after David's death, of whom he says: "When your time is over, and you sleep with your fathers, I will raise up your seed after you. For Solomon was born in the time of the living David. And it would be foolish, even ridiculous, that "raise up" here should be interpreted that Solomon was born after David.

1) The old edition of Walch and the Erlanger: "vom".

2) The following words to the end of the paragraph are missing in the Wittenberg.

Death was to be raised up to be a king, or to build the house; for there are three other chapters, 1 Kings 1:39, and 1 Chron. 23, 9. and 1 Chron. 30:22, which testify that Solomon was not only made king by the life of his father, but that he also received orders from David his father, and the whole pattern of the temple, with all the furnishings, with all the food, and also the whole order of the kingdom. It is clear that Solomon did not build the temple or set up the kingdom and the priesthood from his own head, but from David's head, who set it all before him and ordered it even while he was still alive.

139. also is a great disparity, and many other words 2 Sam. 7, 5. against the words 1 Chron. 23, 9. and Cap. 29, 6. 7. There God will build David an eternal house; here Solomon shall build a house in God's name. There it says freely without addition: "It shall stand forever, and no sin shall hinder it"; here it says, as long as Solomon remains pious and his descendants, when he did not remain, and therefore not only lost the ten tribes of Israel, but was also cut off in the seventh generation. The latter is promissio gratiae; the 1) is promissio legis. There David thanks God that his house shall remain forever; here he does not thank that Solomon's temple shall remain forever! Summa, it is spoken at another time and of other things and house there and here. And even though God calls Solomon his son here, and wants to be his father, it is still spoken with the addition, as long as he is pious. Such addition is not there. And is it not strange that God calls his saints, even the angels, his children. But that son, 2 Sam. 7, 14, is a different and special son, who should keep it without addition, and no sin should hinder him.

140 And so the prophets and psalms have taken before them the saying of 2 Sam. 7, which speaks of the seed of David after his death, and have left out the saying of 1 Chron. 23 and 29, which speak of Solomon. For thus says Psalm 89:2, 3, 4, 5: "I will sing of the grace of the Lord forever, and declare his truth with my mouth for ever and ever. And say, an everlasting grace shall be built, and thou castest thy

1) It should be read "this". Jonas: altera - altera.

Keep truth faithfully in heaven. I have made a covenant with my chosen one; I have sworn to David my servant: I will surely create seed for you forever, and build your throne for and for. "2c. These are also clear words that God vows and swears to give eternal grace to David, and to build and keep his hall, seed and throne forever.

141 And then in the 19th verse, the most beautiful prophecies of the Messiah, which cannot be understood by Solomon, because he was not the highest over all the kings of the earth, nor did he set his hand over the sea and the water; and here no one is allowed to speak. Also the kingdom did not remain on Solomon's house, because he did not have a certain promise, without being pious; but David's house has the promise, who had more sons than Solomon. 2) And as the histories testify, sometimes the scepter of Judah passed from brother to brother, from cousins to cousins, but always remained in the house of David. As, Ahaziah left no son, Ahaz left none, and brother's children had to be called heirs and son, according to the holy scripture way.

Now, that one would deny such bright and mighty sayings of the Scriptures about the eternal house of David, which the histories prove in their works, how always kings or princes have been for and for until Messiah, no one else would have to do that but the devil himself, and whoever is his member. For I suppose that if the devil, or whoever he is, would not let Messiah be, they would have to let David have an eternal hall and an eternal throne. For he cannot deny the bright words of God, since God swears that His word shall not be changed and that He will not lie to David, even for the sake of no sin, as the above Psalm mightily and clearly sings.

143) Now such an eternal house of David is nowhere to be found where one does not put the 3) scepter before the Messiah and the Messiah after

2) Wittenberger: "had". Jenaer, Walch and the Erlangeners: "hat". Jonas: habuit.

3) Here all outputs have: "that"; likewise immediately following "the".

the scepter together and join them together, namely that Messiah came when the scepter was gone, and thus David's house preserved in his eternity, and God found true and true in his word, covenant, and oath. . For it is evident that in the time of Herod the scepter of Judah fell completely; but rather that the Romans destroyed Jerusalem and the scepter of Judah. If David's house is to be eternal and God is to be true, then the right king of Judah, Messiah, must have come at the same time: no reading, interpreting or glossing can help against this, the text is too powerful and too bright. Whether the Jews do not want to confess this, we do not ask anything about it, we have enough:

First, that our Christian faith is herewith most strongly proven, and only such sayings give very great joy and comfort, because we also have such strong testimonies in the Old Testament. On the other hand, we are sure that even the devil and the Jews themselves have nothing to say in their hearts against this, and are overcome with their own consciences, which can be well and surely noticed by the fact that they torture Jacob's saying from the scepter (like all other Scriptures) so many times, as they feel convinced and overcome, but do not want to confess. Just as the devil knows that God's word is the truth, and yet out of deliberate malice contradicts and blasphemes: so the Jews feel that these sayings are vain rocks, but their interpretation is vain straw or cobwebs, but out of deliberate malicious intent they do not want to confess it, yet they want to be and be called God's people, solely because they are the blood of the fathers; otherwise they have nothing to boast about. But what blood alone does, is said above; just as if the devil wanted to boast that he was created angelically, therefore he wanted to be an angel and God's child alone, even though he is God's enemy.

The third saying, from which it is proved that Messiah has come. 1)

According to these sayings, let us hear what Jeremiah says; he makes it very strange.

1) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

We know that he was a prophet long after the kingdom of Israel had been taken away and destroyed, and only the kingdom of Judah still existed, which also soon had to go to Babylon, as he prophesied to them, and also saw that it happened. So he is still allowed to say Cap. 33:17 ff: "Thus saith the LORD, There shall not be cut off (I must speak Hebrew) from David a man that sitteth upon the throne of the house of Israel: neither shall there be cut off from among the priests, nor from among the Levites, a man before me, that offereth burnt offerings, and burneth incense, and slayeth sacrifices for ever."

146. "And the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD, If my covenant be broken with thee day and night, that there be neither day nor night in his days; then shall my covenant also be broken with David my servant, that he have not a son to be king upon his throne; and with the priests and Levites my servants. 2c. And the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, saying, Hast thou seen what this people speak? saying, Hath the LORD also rejected the two tribes which he hath chosen, and they have embittered my people, as though they should no more be my people? Thus saith the LORD; If I keep not my covenant of day and night, nor the ordinance of heaven and earth; then will I also reject the seed of Jacob and David my servant, that I take not of their seed to rule over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. For I will turn away their captivity, and have mercy upon them."

147 What shall we say to this? Let him interpret who can interpret, for it is written that not only David shall endure forever, but also the Levites; item, Israel, the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. And especially David shall have a son, who shall sit on his throne for ever, as day and night for ever. But Israel is taken away, and Judah after; Israel is not brought again, as Judah is brought again. Tell me, how does this rhyme? God's word must not lie; but as He keeps the course of heaven, that without ceasing there is day and night: so must David (that is, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob) also without ceasing have a Son on His throne; for God Himself gives such a likeness. It is impossible for the Jews to put it together, who see before their eyes that neither Israel nor Judah has a regiment, now at fifteen hundred years, but Israel far beyond two thousand years; nor must God be true, we do as we will. The kingdom of David must reign over the seed of Jacob, Isaac and Abraham, as Jeremiah says here, or Jeremiah must not be a prophet but a liar.

We let the Jews here rhyme and interpret what they will or can: the saying is certain to us, that David's house shall be forever, and the Levites also, and Abraham's seed, Isaac's seed, Jacob's seed, under the Son of David, as long as day and night (which is said, as long as sun and moon) endure. If this is true, then Messiah must have come when David's throne and reign ceased, and thus David's throne became more glorious through Messiah, as Isaiah 9:6 says: "To us a child is born, to us a son is given, whose dominion is on his shoulder, and will be called Paele, Jomez, El, 1) Gibbor, Abigad, Sarsalom. His kingdom shall be great, and there shall be no end of peace in the throne of David, and in his kingdom to establish it, and to strengthen it from henceforth even for ever" 2c. Now we let stand (perhaps we will do it afterwards) how the blind Jews torture the six names of Messiah; they allow the saying, and must allow it to speak of Messiah. Therefore we will lead him to the fact that Jeremiah says that David's house must reign forever, first by the scepter until Messiah, and then much more gloriously by Messiah. So that it is certain that David's house must not fall until this hour, and henceforth may not fall until eternity. 2) But now the scepter of Judah 3) lies fallen fifteen hundred years, so Messiah must have come fifteen hundred years ago, or, as said above, a thousand four hundred and eight and threescore years ago. This is all powerfully proven from Jeremiah.

1) So in the Wittenberg and in the Jena edition correctly. The Erlangen edition, after Walch's old edition, offers: "Jomez El" without an intervening comma.

2) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer and Erlanger: "still henceforth . . . may fall."

3) "Judah" is missing from the Wittenberg.

149. But if any of us may be moved, how it is possible that in the days of Jeremiah, and afterward unto Messiah, there should have been under the tribe of Judah, or the throne of David, and should have remained the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; yet Judah alone remained, and Israel was carried away: Who shall know that 4) the kingdom of Israel is taken away and destroyed, so that it is not returned, nor shall it come again for ever; but Israel, or the seed of Israel, is ever remaining among Judah, and is caught with Judah, and is returned. You may read about this in the first book of Kings 12, 17. and 2 Chron. 30, 11. 31, 1. f., where you will find that the whole tribe of Benjamin, as "a good part of Israel, remained with Judah, also the whole tribe of Levi, also many of Ephraim, Manasseh, Asher, Jesashar, Zebulou, who remained in the land after the spoiling of the kingdom of Israel, and went to Ezekiel to Jerusalem, and helped to cleanse the land of Israel from idols, and many Israelites dwelt in the cities of Judah.

150) Now if we have so much of Israel under the son of David, then Jeremiah is no liar, since 5) he says, Levies and seed of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob shall be found under David's house. These are all, or even partly, led with Judah to Babylon and come again with them, as Ezra counts and calls them, and no doubt many others more- which are led away under Sennacherib, because the Assyrian or Median empire was brought under the Persian empire by Cyrum, that Judah and Israel could well' have come together and go up with each other from Babylon to Jerusalem and to the land of Canaan; for these words are written Ezra 2, 70. I know this for certain: "and all Israel (or all that was of Israel) dwelt in her cities." How will they dwell there, where they have not returned? And in the days of Herod and Messiah the land was full of Israel again; for they had gathered in the seventy weeks of Daniel, that is, in 490 years, but had not gotten a kingdom again.

Therefore the present Jews are very rough teachers and industrious students of the Scriptures, pretending that Israel has not yet returned,

4) "that" is missing in the Jena and Erlanger.

5) Jenaer and Erlanger: "that".

Just as if they all had to return, but Judah did not return all, but a small number, as Ezra counts them all, that several parts stayed in Babylon, also Daniel, Nehemiah, Mordecai himself. Also, several parts of Israel remained in Medes, but perhaps came to Jerusalem at the high feasts and returned home, as Lucas writes in Acts 2:9 ff. But that the kingdom or scepter of Israel should return, as the scepter of Judah, that God had not promised; but to Judah He had promised it, who also had to get it again, in virtue of such a promise that God would build David's house and throne forever and not let them go out. For, as Jeremiah says here, God will not suffer it to be said of Him that He has rejected Judah and Israel altogether, that they should no longer be His people, and that David's throne should come to an end, as if He had forgotten His promise, since He promised and swore to David an everlasting house, even though they should now go to Babylon for a little while, yet it (says He) should remain an everlasting house and kingdom.

I say this to the honor and strength of our faith, and to the shame of the stubborn unbelief of the blinded, stiff-necked Jews, to whom God must always and forever be a liar, as if he had let David's house go out, and had forgotten his covenant and oath that David swore. For if they wanted to keep God true, they would have to confess that Messiah would have come fifteen hundred years ago, so that David's house and throne would not have had to be desolate as long as they respect it, since Jerusalem has lain in ashes for so long without a throne and David's house. For if God has kept His word from David until Babylon's prison, and from then on until Herod's time, when the scepter ceased, then He must also keep it from then on, after Herod's time, forever and ever, or David's house would not have been eternal, but a perishable one, which would have ceased with the scepter in Herod's time.

153. But God will not suffer this (as said), but David's house shall be for ever, as the day and the night, and the course of heaven and earth, saith Jeremiah. Now it cannot be eternal unless the son of David,

Messiah, when the scepter of Judah fell in the days of Herod, and sat on David's throne, and became Lord of the world. Otherwise, if the Jews were right, David's house would have been missing these thousand, four hundred, eight and sixty years, against God's promise and oath. This will not suffer. Well then, this is a thorough explanation of the matter, so that no Jew can really protest against it, even though he may outwardly pretend not to believe it, but his heart and conscience have nothing to say against it.

And where would God have preserved honor to His divine truth, since He promised David an eternal house and throne, and should have let it stand longer desolate, neither built? For, let us reckon, according to the opinion of the Jews, from David until Herod there was not completed a thousand years: so long did David's house or throne stand, including the seventy years in Babylon (but we reckon over a hundred more). But from Herod's time, or let us take (which is not much out of the way) from the destruction of Jerusalem to this year 1542 are 1468 1) years, as is said above; so according to David's house and throne four hundred or five hundred years longer desolate than built. Now ask stone and block if this is called an eternal house, especially built by God and preserved by His supreme faithfulness and truth, which stands a thousand years and lies in ashes fourteen hundred or fifteen hundred years?

Let the Jews be hard, and harder than any demant: such lightning and thunderclap of such bright, public truth should shatter them, if not soften them. But, as I said, our faith is gladly strengthened, made sure and certain, that we have the right Messiah, at the time when Herod took away the scepter from Judah and Sapphira, surely come and appear, that David's house may be eternal, and have a son on his throne forever, as God has spoken to him, sworn to him, and joined himself to him.

1) In the Wittenberg: "1569". In the Jena and Erlangen "1568". Compare the note to § 4 of this paper. - In § 154 the Wittenberg has: "1469" while the Erlangen retains "1568", as does Walch. Also Jonas has: 1568.

And if a slippery Jew would reproach me with my book against the Sabbaths, since I have proved the word eternal, Leolam, that it often means no more than a long time, not quite eternal, as Moses says, 2 Mos. 21, 6: "The master of the house shall pierce his 1) servant, who wants to stay with him, with an awl through the ear to the door, and so he shall be his servant forever. Here eternal means a human eternal; that is, as long as he lives. But I have also said there that when God sets an eternity, it is a truly divine eternity, and there He uses to add a word: "and shall not change," as Psalm 110:4: "God has sworn, and He will not repent"; item Psalm 132:11: "God has sworn to David a truth, which He will not change," 2c. Where such a thing is not added, it will certainly never be otherwise, as Isaiah 9:7: "There will be no end of peace." And Daniel 7:14: "His power is eternal, and his kingdom shall have no end." That means Eternal (not before men, who do not live eternally, but before GOD, who lives eternally).

157 Now it is written in this promise that David's house and throne shall be eternal in the sight of God, saying: "Before me, before me, a son shall sit on your throne forever. He also adds the word "not" to it, Psalm 89:36-38: "I have sworn once, by my holiness, I will not lie to David; his seed shall be forever, and his throne before me, like the sun, like the moon, it shall be preserved forever. And as the witness in clouds shall he be sure, selah." Such are also the last words of David, when he says [2 Sam. 23, 5.]: "God has made a covenant with me, eternal, sure and steadfast," or preserved. Such "sure" and "firm" is as much as a firm, sure eternal, which shall never be lacking. Likewise the saying of Jacob Gen. 49, 10: "The scepter shall not depart." Not to come away is eternal, until Messiah comes; that means quite eternal. For to Messiah all the prophets give an everlasting kingdom that shall not cease.

But let us suppose that it is a human or temporal eternity, or uncertain length.

of time (which is not possible), that would have to be the mind: Your house shall be eternal before me, that is, your house shall stand as long as it stands, or as long as you live. Hereby David would be sworn and given as much as nothing; for even without such an oath David's house would stand forever, that is, as long as it stood, or as long as he lived. But let such foolishness go, which no one but a blinded rabbi should think of. The Scripture shows that they [the prophets] all understood it from the right eternity, since it boasts that God did not want to destroy Judah because of the sins that happened under Roboam, so that David would remain a light, as God had spoken to him about his house.

159) The Maccabees may also be mentioned here, who, after Antiochus the Noble had horribly laid waste the land and the people, that the princes of the house of David departed, and the Maccabees, who were not of the house of David, but of the priestly tribe, sat in the reign, and so that the scepter of Judah had fallen, and not a son of David had eternally sat on the throne of David, because of which the eternal house of David nevertheless could not truly be eternal. Answer: The Jews may not dispute with us about this, and we may not answer them about it; for there is nothing about it in the Scriptures, because Malachi is the last prophet, and Nehemiah the last historian, who lived until Alexandrum, as his book indicates. Therefore, for both parts, for the sake of this piece, we must leave it based on Jeremiah's saying that a son sat or ruled on David's throne for and for, because apart from the Scriptures, whoever does not want to leave it, may consider it a delusion whether the Maccabees themselves ruled or served the rulers. But to the histories we want to indicate hereafter, what one may think of it.

160 But this methinks not from the scripture to be a contemptible little thing, because in the days of Athaliah the queen there sat not a son of David upon his throne six whole years, but she herself, Athaliah the tyrant, for she had slain all the male seed of the house of David, save one Joash, which was a child of a quarter of a year, or half a year old, and was secretly carried away under her hands, in the tempel was brought up in secret by the noble woman, Jehosheba, the wife of Jehoiada the high priest, 1) who was the daughter of King Jehoram and sister of King Ahaziah, whom Jehu slew [2 Kings 11:3 ff]. Verily, here the everlasting covenant of God, made with David, was in great danger, and stood on a single, young, hidden child, silent that he should sit on the throne of David; and his house, verily, at this time looked like a dark lantern, because the light in is gone out, because the strange queen of the Gentiles of Zidon sitteth and reigneth on David's throne; but she also burneth the butt graciously.

1) In all editions: his.

All this does not mean that the scepter has been taken away or that the eternal covenant of God has been broken. For although the light of David does not shine brightly here, it still glows in the child Joash, who is to shine brightly and reign again in the future, and who has already been born a son of David, so that these six years are nothing but a trial, a temptation, since God often presents Himself as if He wanted to forget His word and leave everything undone, as He did with Abraham. As he did with Abraham, when he burned the dear son Isaac to ashes [Gen. 22, 2], in whom he had promised the eternal seed; as he also 2) led the children of Israel out of Egypt. Yes, he led them to death, because they had the sea in front, on both sides high rocks, behind them the enemies, who had blocked their way and their escape. Still it went according to God's word and promises that the sea had to open, flee and give space. If the sea had not done so, the rocks would have split open and given way, and squeezed and crushed Pharaoh between them, as they drowned the sea. For all creatures must be destroyed a thousand thousand times before God's word should fail and be false, however strange it may seem. So Joash is king by and in the word of God, and sits on the throne of David before God, even if he lies in the cradle, even if he lies dead and buried under the earth; for he would have to come forth, like Isaac, from the ashes.

1) Walch and the Erlanger: Jojoda.

2) Instead of "as he also" in the Jena and the Erlangen: "and". Jonas: item.

162 So one would like to answer for that from the Maccabees also. But it is not necessary, and even has a different opinion. With the prison of Babylon it would have also a mind; but it goes there much more gloriously by excellent prophets and miracles. But Jehoash was an abominable torment to the house of David against the covenant and oath of God, even though the house and regiment of David still stood strong; only the regent, or head, is in need, and God is weak in His covenant. But it is the way of his divine grace that he sometimes plays and jokes with his own, hides and disguises himself, so that he tries us whether we want to be firm in faith and love toward him, as a father sometimes does with his children. But such jesting of our dear Lord hurts beyond measure, because we do not understand it. But this does not belong here. Let this be said of the saying of Jeremiah.

The fourth saying, from which it is proved that Messiah has come. 3) Further, we take before us one of the last prophets. It is written Hagg. 2, 7. ff.: "Thus saith the LORD, it is yet a little while, that I will move heaven and earth, the sea and the dry land; yea, all nations will I move: then shall come the consolation of the nations, Chemdath. 4) And I will make this house full of glory, saith the LORD of hosts. For I have silver and gold enough, saith the LORD of hosts: the glory of this last house shall be greater than that of the first, saith the LORD of hosts. And I will give peace in this place, saith the LORD of hosts."

This is also one of the sayings that causes the Jews the burnt suffering, trying, twisting, interpreting and torturing almost all words, as in the saying of Jacob, Gen. 49, 10, yet it does not help, their conscience pales before it, and feels that their glossing is nothing. Lyra does well, as he urges her with the word ADHUC MODICUM, "yet."

3) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

4) In the old editions written: "Hermdach".

a little one", and they cannot escape from him. This is what we want to see. A small short time (he says) cannot mean a great long time. Lyra is certainly right in saying that no one can deny, not even a Jew, that they are to be denied as hard as they always can. Now shall the consolation of the Gentiles come, saith he, for a little time after the same temple is built, that is, it shall come while the same temple is yet standing. And the glory of this last temple shall be greater than that of the first; and that in a little while, that is, for a little while.

165. For it is good to reckon, where the consolation of the Gentiles, which the old Messiah interprets, did not come while this temple was still standing, and is yet to come (as the Jews are now waiting for 1468 years after the destruction of the same temple, and cannot be called a short time, because they do not yet know the end of such a great time), it will never come, because it has missed the small short time, and has come into the great long time, where nothing will ever end; for the prophet speaks of a small time, not of a great time.

But here they turn out like this: Because they cannot deny the short little time, they take the word, comfort of all Gentiles, Hebrew Chemdath, before them, and crenellate it, as they did above to the saying of Jacob, with the word Shebet and Shilo, wanting it not to mean Messiah, but it should mean gold and silver of all Gentiles. Because the word Chemdath actually means desire or lust according to the grammar, as the heathen desire to have lust and love. And shall the text thus stand: Still over a short, then shall come the desire of all the Gentiles. What is this? What do the heathen desire? Gold, silver and jewels. Perhaps you would like to ask why the Jews are making such comments here? I will tell thee, Their breath stinketh for the gold and silver of the heathen: for there is no nation under the sun more covetous than they have been, 1) nor are, nor ever shall be, as is seen in their accursed usury; and they comfort themselves, when their Messiah cometh, that he shall take gold and silver from all the earth, and divide among them. Therefore, where they can draw the Scripture on their insatiable avarice, they do so with all sacrilege. You may think that God and his prophets knew nothing else to prophesy, but how to satisfy the unjustified avarice of the damned Jews with the gold and silver of the Gentiles.

But according to this stingy mind, the prophet did not speak wisely, but should have said thus: Over a little while shall come the covetousness of the Jews. For it is the Jews who desire gold and silver more than any people on earth, so that it should be called the desire of the Jews more than the desire of the Gentiles. For though the Gentiles covet gold and silver, yet the Jews are there who covet such desires of the Gentiles, and wait for it to be brought to them, and devour it, and leave nothing for the Gentiles. Why? Because they are the noble blood, the circumcised saints, who have God's commandment and do not keep it, but are stiff-necked, disobedient, prophet-killers, hopeful, usurers, and full of all unrighteousness, as all Scripture and their present nature testify. For to such saints belongs the gold and silver of the Gentiles, who earn it with such honesty and integrity, as the devil earns paradise and the kingdom of heaven.

168. further, how is it that such highly knowledgeable masters and wise, holy prophets do not also extend the word desire (chemdath) to all other desires of the heathen? For the pagans desire not only gold and silver, but also pretty damsels, and the women pretty youths. And where among the heathen there are not vain Jews (I wanted to say miserly), who do no good to their own bodies, they also desire beautiful houses, gardens, cattle, goods; item, good days, clothes, eating, drinking, dancing, playing, and all kinds of joy. Why then do they not interpret this saying of the prophet, that such desires of all the heathen also shall come shortly to Jerusalem, that the Jews alone may fill their bellies, and feed on the pleasures of the world? For Mahomet promises such a being to his Saracens, and in this he is a true Jew, and the Jews true Saracens, according to this interpretation.

The pagans have another desire:

1) In the Wittenberg: gewest ist.

How have these wise, intelligent interpreters of the same forgotten? I am surprised, the Gentiles die and have much sickness, poverty, all kinds of hardship and fear, and there is no one who does not desire most of all not to die, not to suffer hardship, misery, sickness, or to be rid of them soon and be safe; such desire is so strong in them that they would gladly give up all the other desires, as one sees daily in experience. Why don't they then indicate that such desires of all Gentiles should also recently come to Jerusalem into the temple? Fie on you here, fie on you there, and where you are, you damned Jews, that you are allowed to drag these serious, glorious, comforting words of God so shamefully onto your mortal, maddening avarice, and do not be ashamed to show your avarice so grossly. You are not worthy to look at the Biblia from the outside, let alone to read it inside. 1) You alone should read the Biblia, which is under the sow's tail, and eat and drink the letters that fall out of it; that would be a Bible for such prophets, who rummage up the word of the divine majesty, which should be heard with all honor, trembling and joy, so sourly, and tear it up so swinishly.

170] Further, since the prophet says, "The glory of this last house shall be greater than that of the first," let us hear the noble and circumcised (I say circumcised) holy and wise prophets, who would make us Christians Jews. The great glory of the last temple over the first is this, that the last, that is, this temple of Haggai stood ten years longer than the temple of Solomon 2c. Oh, that they would have had a good astronomer here, who would have calculated it a little more exactly, he would have found perhaps that to the ten years still three moons, two weeks, five days, seven hours, twelve minutes and ten half minutes would have been over it. If there were some stuff that was on sale in Schamroth, I could give the Jews a few guilders, so that they would go and buy a pound of Schamroth.

But they still spread it on their foreheads, eyes and cheeks, because they did not want to spread it on their insolent hearts and tongues. Or do they mean that they talk with sticks and blocks, as they themselves are, the unlearned, coarse asses?

There were many gray old men and women, and beggars and wicked men, in Jerusalem, when Solomon, a youth of twenty years old, became a glorious king; should they therefore have greater glory than Solomon? Perhaps the mule of David, whereupon Solomon became king, was older than Solomon; should he therefore be more glorious than Solomon? But so shall they run, fall and fall, who without ceasing reproach God with lies, and want to be right themselves; they are not worth better than that, that they vainly write such glosses, foolish works and their own disgrace over the Biblia (as they do with great diligence). Therefore beware, dear Christian, of the Jews, whom you see from this, how they have been handed over to the devil by God's wrath, who has robbed them not only of the right understanding of the Scriptures, but also of common human reason, shame and senses, and through them only makes a vain mockery of the holy Scriptures, so that henceforth one can neither trust nor believe them in any other piece, even if a true word sometimes escapes them. For whoever may so mock and shamefully play with the terrible word of God, as you see here, and also saw above in the saying of Jacob, must have no good spirit with him. Therefore, where you see a true Jew, you may with a good conscience put a cross in front of you and speak freely with certainty: There goes a devil in the flesh.

172. The desperate peelers know well that their ancient ancestors understood this saying of Haggai of the Messiah, as Lyra, Burgensis, and others testify; They still fall from it wilfully, and make their own biblia out of their own foolish head, that they keep their wretched Jews with them in their error, against their own conscience, to our chagrin, just as if they were doing us great harm with it, and as if God would still reward them, where they serve Him (as they dream) us Gentiles, even in publicly recognized

1) In the Jenaer, with Walch and in the Erlanger: sollet. Jonas: Debebatis.

Truth, resisted. So it goes with them, as you have seen, that they disgrace themselves, do us no harm, and lose God and His Scripture over it.

Now this is the saying: "Over one small thing, I will move heaven and earth, the sea and the dry land (that is, the islands in the sea), and Chemdath shall come to all the nations," that is, Messiah, the desire of all the nations, which we have translated "comfort. For Begierde is not intelligible enough, because in German it means the inward lust and desire in the heart, active. But here it means desire, the outward, passive thing that a heart desires; if it were also translated as: "aller Heiden Freud und Wonne," it would not be wrong either. Summa, it is Messiah in whom the unbelieving, hardened Jews should have vain displeasure, disgust and abomination, as Isaiah 52:14 prophesies of them. But the Gentiles should welcome him as their heart's joy, pleasure, all desire and lust. For he brings them salvation from sins, death, devils, hell and all evil forever. Yes, this is the desire, heart's desire, joy and comfort of the Gentiles.

174 This agrees with the saying of Jacob, Gen 49:10: "And the nations will obey Shiloh, or Messiah," that is, they will accept him with joy, hear his word, and become his people without sword, without restraint, as if he should say, "The base, uncircumcised nations will do this; but my noble fruits, my circumcised lost children, will not do it, but will become furious and senseless against it. Isaiah 2:2 ff. and Micah 4:1 agree with this: "In the last days the mountain where the Lord's house is will be made higher than all mountains, and will be exalted above all hills, and there all the nations will run to it (no doubt without restraint, out of lust and desire), and many peoples will rush to it and say, 'Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of Jacob the God, that he may teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths. For out of Zion shall go forth a law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem'" 2c. And indeed the prophets speak of Messiah's kingdom among the Gentiles.

175 Yes, that's the trouble, that's the trouble.

This makes the Jews mad and foolish and drives them to such a damned mind that they have to pervert all the sayings of the Scriptures so shamefully; namely, they do not want it, they cannot stand it, that we Gentiles should be like them before God, and the Messiah should be our comfort and joy as well as theirs. Before they suffer this, I say that we Gentiles, who are spat upon, maledicted, cursed, blasphemed, desecrated by them without ceasing, should partake with them in the Messiah, be called joint heirs and their brothers, crucified before ten more Messiahs, and kill God (if it were possible) themselves, with all the angels and all the creatures, and deserve a thousand hells for one: so even an incomprehensible hard pride is in the noble blood of the fathers and circumcised saints. They want to have the Messiah alone and be lords of the world; the accursed goyim shall be servants, give their desire, that is, their gold and silver to the Jews, and let themselves be slaughtered like the poor cattle; before they leave this sense, they rather remain knowingly and eternally lost.

They have imbibed such poisonous hatred against the Goyim from their youth, from their parents and rabbis, and still drink in themselves without ceasing, that, as the 109th Psalm, v. 2 ff. says, it has gone through their blood and flesh, through their marrow and bone, has become their very nature and life. And as little as they can change flesh and blood, marrow and bone, as little can they change such pride and envy, they must remain and perish like this, where God does not perform particularly high miracles. And if I wanted to cause a Jew great, great annoyance and anger, I would say: Do you hear, Jehudi, do you know that I am a true brother of all the holy children of Israel, and a joint heir in the kingdom of the true Messiah? There is no doubt that I should see Rahm; 1) if he could look at me with the eyes of a basilisk, he certainly would, and what he would wish for me, all the devils would not be able to do, I truly know, if God would allow them to. But I don't want to do it, and I also ask that no one does it.

1) Compare the note to § 69 of this paper.

for the sake of Christ. For the weather would go with under our protection and umbrella, need land and streets, cursing and blasphemy in the heart and mouth of the Jew market and alleys; in addition, the princes and authorities against the name of Jesus Christ and against God the sit, snore and have their mouths open, let the Jews take Father; so we should do well, and not give cause where from their open bag and box, steal and rob what they want, we can avoid it, just as I should not provoke a possessed that is, they let themselves and their subjects toil and be man when I know that he will blaspheme and curse God, sucked dry by the Jews' usury, and make beggars of Otherwise the Jews hear and see more than enough in themselves with their own money. For the Jews, being in us, that they blaspheme the name of Jesus, and curse in misery, should certainly have nothing, and what they have their hearts every moment, as they are possessed. must certainly be ours: so they do not work, earn us

For, as I have said, they cannot bear to hear or see nothing; so we do not give or give it to them; nor do they that we cursed Goyim Messiah should boast of our have our money and goods, and are thus our masters in Chemdath, and be as good as they are, or make our own lands, and in their misery. If a thief steals ten themselves to be. Therefore know, dear Christian, and do guilders, he must hang; 1) if he robs in the street, his head not doubt that, next to the devil, you have no more bitter, is lost. But a Jew, if he steals ten tons of gold and robs by poisonous, fierce enemy than a true Jew who earnestly his usury, he is dearer than God himself.

wants to be a Jew. There may be some among them who 180. and for a sign they confidently boast, and believe what the cow or goose believes, but they all have strengthen their faith and venomous resentment against the blood and circumcision attached to them. Therefore, us, saying among themselves, Hold fast, behold, how God they are often blamed in the histories for poisoning wells, is with us, and does not forsake his people even in misery. stealing children, and keeping them in a state of We do not work, we have good days, we have bad days; cultivation, as in Trent and Weissensee 2c. They may say the cursed Goyim have to work for us, but we get their no to it, but whether they do or not, I know well that there money; thus we are their masters, but they are our is no lack of full, complete, ready will among them, where servants. Hold fast, dear children of Israel, it will get better, they could do it, secretly or obviously. Be sure of this, and our Messiah will still come, if we continue like this and act accordingly. have brought all the Gentiles Chemdath to us through

But if they do something good, know that it is not out usury, and otherwise. Well, this we suffer from them under of love, nor for your benefit, but because they must have our protection and shield; still they curse us, as said. But room to live with us, they must do something out of more of this hereafter.

necessity, but the heart remains and is as I have said. If Now we act as they cannot suffer us to be joint heirs you don't want to believe me, then read Lyra, Burgensem in the kingdom of Messiah, nor to have our Chemdath in and others, honest, truthful men. And if they did not write it, as the prophets abundantly give it to us. But what does it, the scripture says that the two seeds, the serpent and God say to this? He says: He wants to give the Chemdath the woman, are enemies, and God and the devil are not to the Gentiles, and their obedience shall please Him, as one. Also one finds it in their writings and prayer books Jacob, Gen. 49, 10., says, and all the prophets, and again roughly enough. wants to be so hard against the hard head of the Jews that

A person who does not know the devil might wonder He wants to reject them before they 2) choose and accept why they are so hostile to Christians before others, since the Gentiles, un- they have no reason to be, since we do everything good for them. They live with us at home,

1) In the old editions: hencken.

2) Wittenberger: she marriage.

whether they are not full of the noble blood of the fathers, nor circumcised saints. For thus saith Hosea Cap. 2, 23. "I will call that, which is not my people, my people, and they shall call me their GOt." But to the Jews he says [Hos. 1, 9.]: "LoAmni, you are not my people, and I am not your GOD", which also Moses sang to them long before in his song: "They provoke me to anger with that which is not God, and they provoke me to anger with their useless doings: so again I will provoke them to anger with that which is not my people, and with a foolish people I will provoke them to anger [5 Mos. 32, 21.]. This saying has now gone strong for fifteen hundred years, that we foolish Gentiles, who were not God's people, are now God's people. That makes the Jews mad and foolish, and have become over it not-God's people, who nevertheless should have been God's people and should be fair.

(182) Now that we have finished the saying of Haggai, it is here proved with authority that Messiah, the Chemdath of the Gentiles, came at the time when this temple stood; as the ancients understood, and the present Jews also bear witness to their lazy, vain sayings, because they know nothing to say against it, except that in which they speak their own shame. For he who gives an idle, cold and loose answer testifies and judges of himself that he has a lost cause, and it would be better for him to be silent with less shame than to answer idly with great shame. So now Haggai says: "Still over a little one, then I will move heaven and earth, sea and dry land, yes, I will move all nations, and shall 1) come the desire of all nations." This I understand after my simple sense thus: There has been from the beginning of the world enmity between the serpent's seed and the woman's seed, and have for and for with each other caused turmoil, but one time greater than the other.

For where the seed of the woman is or comes, it brings with it a jumble and a tumult, as it says in the Gospel, "I have not come to send peace on earth, but sword and dissension," and takes away the household goods of the strong-armed man who had peace in his court [Matt. 10:34].

1) Jenaer, Walch and Erlanger: should.

Luc. 11, 22]. He does not like it, because angels and devils are stirring in the air, and men are stirring with men on earth, all for the sake of the seed of the woman. And although without this there is also much and great rumbling, war and unrest in the world, but because it is not because of this seed, it is a small thing before God, since all angels have to do with this rumbling.

Because it was now high time for this seed or Messiah to come, he said, "Yet a little," that is, until now the rumbling has been in my people Israel alone, that is, in a small corner, which the devil has always wanted to devour, and all the kings around have set against them. For he knew well that the promised seed was in this people, which should do it to him; therefore he has always wanted to wear it out, to accuse one unrest, displeasure, war, rumor after another. Well, there is still a small thing to do, so I will give him enough rumors. And I will stir up such a tumult, and it shall be good; not only among my people Israel in the narrow corner, but as far as heaven and earth, sea and dry land, that is, where it is wet and dry, whether in the land, or in the islands, or by the sea, or by the waters, that is, where men are (or, as he says): "All nations will I stir up," that all angels may fight with all devils in heaven or in the air, and all men may quarrel with all men on earth over the seed.

For I will send Chemdath to all the nations, and they will love him and cling to him, as Gen 49:10 says: "The nations will fall to him," and they will become enemies of the devil, the old serpent, and fall from him. Then it will happen as it should happen, when the god and prince of the world has become angry, mad and furious, so that he has to grant Chemdath and Shiloh, the seed of women, his kingdom, his Hans, his household, his services, his power. Read the histories from the time of Christ, whoever wants to, how first the Jews and pagans, then the heretics, last the Mahomet, and now the pope vows and still rages against God and his Messiah, Ps. 2, 1, so he will understand what Haggai says here about rumors. There has not been a corner in the world, nor a place in the sea, where the gospel has not sounded and brought Chemdath, as Ps. 19:4, 5 says: "There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard. Their sound goes out into all the earth, and their speech to the end of the world." And the devil was truly found at home with murders by tyrants, with lies by heretics, and with all his devilish wiles and powers, as he still does to hinder and resist the gospel. This is the rumor.

2) "an" is missing in the Wittenberger.

I will begin this rumor with the tender fruit of Antioch the Noble. For from Haggai to Antioch are about 300 years. That is the small time in which they had peace. For the kings of Persia did them much good; so Alexander did them nothing, and stood well with his descendants, except for this unruly man, Antioch, who began the strife and misfortune, and the devil sought through him to extirpate the seed of the woman; he washed away 1) Jerusalem, temple, land and people, desecrated the temple, and raged as his god the devil drove him. And there almost all the happiness of the Jews was gone, and never came back to the former state until this day, and never comes again.

187 This is so that the Jews may be understood correctly when they say: Chemdath of all the Gentiles, that is, gold and silver have come into this temple; that is, if the previous kings have put something into it, this one has taken it away purely; and reverses their gloss thus: Chemdath of all the Jews brings Antiochus among the Gentiles; so that this saying of Haggai cannot be understood from the shirt nor coat of all the Gentiles. For after these 300 years, or little time for and for, from that time on, they got not much from the Gentiles, but had to give much to the Gentiles, until the Romans came in soon after, and made it all over, and set Herodem king over them; what he gave them they well invented; and so is with

1) "Flush" here and at the beginning of § 188 as much as: rob, plunder. Cf. § 254 at the end. Jonas: diripuit.

From Antioch on, they were left with very little peace. And Daniel also stops at this Antiocho, as if he should say: Now it is at the end and everything is over, now the Messiah is before the door, who will make the rumor the longer the greater.

(188) Not only did the wicked Antiochus wash and desecrate the temple, but he also oppressed the Shebeth or Sultan, the prince of the house of David, that is, the last prince John Hyrcanum, so that none of his descendants came again to the throne of David or to the regency, without the Saphra or Mechokek remaining until Herodem, that from now on David's house was to be looked upon as if its light had gone out, and there was no longer a shul or scepter of Judah. It was also now at the end, and still about 150 years approximately up to Messiah. But it is common that what is to break must first crack or crack a little; what is to sink must first sink or sway a little. Thus the scepter of Judah also did at its last end; it became weak, cracked and crumbled for 150 years, until it fell completely at the hands of the Romans and Herod. And so the princes of Judah remained the 150 years without regiment among the commoners, perhaps even impoverished. For Mary, Christ's mother in Nazareth, boasts that she was a poor, miserable little girl [Luc. 1, 48].

But it is also true that the Maccabees fought against Antiochum and won (as Daniel 11:34 says of a little help) and thus came to the throne of David, who were priests of the tribe of Levi and Aaron. Now one can say with good reason that the royal and priestly tribe are mixed. For so we read 2 Chron. 22, 11. about Josabea, daughter of King Joram and sister of King Ahaziah, that she was the wife of the high priest Jehoiada, from the royal tribe of Solomon, grafted into the priestly tribe as a graft. One trunk and tree with him. Because of this, she became the descendant of Jehoiada, the priest's archmother, and a right Sarah of the priestly lineage. Therefore the Maccabees may well be called David's blood and children, from the mother's line. For that which comes from the mother, belongs to us just as closely as it comes from the Father. Which way goes also in other countries. As, our emperor Carolus is king in Hispania from the mother, not from the father; his father Philip was duke of Burgundy, not from the father Maximiliano, but from the mother Maria.

190 So David called all the children Jehoiada and Josabea his natural children, sons and daughters, because Josabea was descended from his son Solomon, and by the Maccabees Solomon's tribe returned to the regiment and the scepter, according to the female line, from which he had fallen by Ahaziah, according to the male line, and remained until Herod, who cut off and cut off all of them, both Shulman and Saphra, or Sanhedrin. There now lies the scepter of Judah and Mechokek; there stands David's house in darkness, both from the male and female line. Therefore Messiah must be there, the right light of David, the right son, who shall preserve his house until now, and now continue to preserve and shine forever, as God has said that the scepter of Judah shall remain until Messiah comes, and David's house shall endure forever and not go out. But God must (as said) nevertheless remain the liar of the Jews, as the Messiah has not yet sent, as He has promised and sworn.

Further, God says through Haggai: "I will make this temple full of glory; I have gold and silver, and the glory of this last house shall be greater than the glory of the first house. It is true, great glory happened to this temple in the three hundred years before Antioch, when the Persians and Alexander's descendants, the kings of Syria and King Philadelphus in Egypt gave great goods to it; but it is still nowhere equal in glory to Solomon's first temple with all of it, there must be another glory, or that temple of Solomon's 1) far surpasses it. For there was also gold and silver in abundance, and the ark, and the mercy seat, and the cherubims, and the tables of Moses, and Aaron's rod, and the bread of heaven in the golden vessel, and Aaron's garments; and the Urim and the holy things.

1) Erlanger: "overview", which is not a misprint because "übersticht" is given as a variant. Jonas: superat.

Thummim, the holy oil with which the kings and priests were anointed (Dan. 9). And when Solomon dedicated the same temple, fire fell from heaven and consumed the sacrifice. And the temple became full of mist (that is, it), divine majesty, which shows itself present in it, as Solomon speaks there: "God has said that he will dwell in the mist" [1 Kings 8:12]. For this is what He did in the wilderness over the tabernacle of Moses.

192. none of these glories (which are far above gold and silver) have been in this Temple of Haggai; yet God says that there shall be greater glory here than there. Then let the Jews whistle, who has been this greater glory? They can't murmur here, because, as the text says and the old Jews, their ancestors, confessed, that the Gentile Chemdath, Messiah, came at the time of the same temple and honored the temple with his presence; as we Christians know that our Lord Jesus Christ, the right Chemdath, sacrificed inside by his mother, and he himself often taught inside and did miracles; that is the right mist, his tender humanity, in which God showed himself present and let himself be heard and seen. Whether the blind Jews scoff at this, yet our faith is strengthened with it, until they give another glory of this temple, greater than this Chemdath of all the Gentiles. This is what they will do when they build the third temple, that is, when God is a liar and the devil is the truth, and they will possess Jerusalem again, and not before.

193 Josephus 2) writes that Herod had demolished the temple of Haggai, as it was not built splendidly enough, and built it anew, as splendidly or more splendidly than Salompn's temple had been. I want to believe the histories gladly; but still it lacks the pieces, which are told above of the high old sanctuary, namely, the ark, mercy seat, Cherubim 2c., if it would have been equally vain Demant and Rnbin. Moreover, because Herod had no command from God to do such things, but, as an ungodly enemy of God and His people, out of vain, he did not do them.

2) Antiquit., Lib. XV, cap. XI, § 3.

If Zerubbabel, for his own glory and pride, did such construction, all his building and work was not as good in the sight of God as the smallest stone that Zerubbabel placed in the Temple by God's command. And no doubt he did not deserve much mercy, that he wanted to build the commanded temple, erected and consecrated by God's word, broken down, desecrated and much more glorious, without God's word and command. Although God, for the sake of the place 1) that He had chosen for the temple, allowed such things to happen and suffered, that He rather gives an evil interpretation with His breaking down, that henceforth the people of Israel should lose the temple, God's word and everything, and instead practice the vain splendor of the world under the appearance of God's service.

194 This temple was not only less glorious than Solomon's temple, but it was also more defiled in every way than Solomon's temple, and often made full of shame. First of all, against the will of the Jews, when Antiochus took everything that was inside and put an idol on the altar, sacrificed pork, and made a real pigsty and idolatrous mess out of the temple, he made an abominable strangulation, as if he were the devil himself, in Jerusalem, 1 Maccab. 1, 57, as Daniel 11, 31. had proclaimed. No less dishonor was practiced by the Romans, and especially by the disgraceful Emperor Caligula, who also placed his abomination in the temple, of which Daniel 9:27 and 12:11 tell us. Such dishonor and disgrace was not done to that temple of Solomon by pagans and foreigners, that it would be a trouble, how the word of Haggai is true: "I will make this temple full of honor, which shall be greater than the honor of that temple"; so one would like to say against it, that it was full of disgrace and more than that temple, where one wants to speak of outward, physical honor. Therefore another glory must come to it, if Haggai is right.

Secondly, they themselves, the Jews, have also defiled this temple more than it has ever been defiled, namely, with spiritual idolatries. Lyra writes, and others more in many places, that the Jews, after the Returning from Babylon, they have not committed idolatry, nor as grave a sin with the murder of prophets as before; so that he will prove that this cause of their misery must be a greater sin than idolatry, prophet murder 2c., namely, that they crucified Messiah. This argument is right, good and strong; but that they did not murder prophets, the fault was not in their evil will, but they had no more prophets to punish their idolatry, avarice and vice; therefore they could not murder prophets. Although the last prophet Malachi, who began to rebuke the priests, hardly escaped, if he escaped otherwise.

But they practiced idolatry more abominably in this time than in the time of the temple; not the crude, tangible, foolish idolatry, but the subtle spiritual idolatry, as Zechariah paints it on the 5th, v. 1 ff. under the name of the flying letter and the traveling bushel, and finally, chap. 11, 13. and 12, 10. prophesies a shameful thing: "as they sell and pierce God for thirty pieces of silver". Elsewhere. Is it not great shame enough that at the same time the priests most shamefully perverted the ten commandments of God? Tell me, what idolatry is like this abomination that turns God's word into lies? That is, to set up false gods under God's name and appearance, as the other commandment says: "You shall not take the name of your God in vain.

197. Yet their Talmud and Rabbis write that killing is not sin if a Jew kills a Gentile, but if he kills a brother in Israel; and if he does not keep an oath to a Gentile, it is not sin. Item, stealing and robbing (as they do by usury) the goyim is a service to God; for they hold, because they are the noble blood and circumcised saints, but we are cursed goyim, so they cannot make it 2) rude with us, nor sin against us, because they are lords of the world, and we are their servants, yea, their cattle. Of this you may read further yourself Burgensem

1) Wittenberger: Worts.

2) Wittenberger: so. Jonas: non satis esse scelerati.

additione Isa. 34. and Zachariä 5., there you will find what the rabbis teach good, and you will say that I write much too mildly against them.

198. Summa, as their rabbis taught, our evangelists also tell us. Matth. 15, 6: that they abrogated the fourth commandment, to honor father and mother, and Matth. 23, 13. ff., practiced many shameful teachings without what Matth. 5, 20. ff. Christ says, how they preached and interpreted the ten commandments so harmfully, and had established in the temple changers, merchants, and all kinds of covetousness, that our Lord Christ said: they had made of God's house a den of murderers [Matth. 21, 12. Luc. 19,45.]. Now you count what a beautiful honor this is, how full of glory Hans has been, that God must call His own house a pit of murder, because so many souls have been murdered by their stingy false doctrine, that is, by perverse idolatry. Even today, the Jews persist in such teachings, and do as their fathers did, perverting God's word, being stingy, usurious, stealing, murdering (wherever they can) and always teaching their children to do so.

This is not yet the greatest disgrace of this temple. This is first of all the true abomination of all abominations, shame above all shame, that at the time of this temple some high priests and a whole sect were Sadducaean, that is, Epicurean, who held no angel, devil, heaven, hell, or life after this life. And such fellows should go to the temple in priestly office and garments, sacrifice for the people, pray and burn incense, preach to the people, and govern? Tell me, how much worse could Antiochus have been with his idol and pork sacrifices than these Epicurian sows and ferch mothers 1)? Where is Haggai's word that the glory of this temple shall be greater than Solomon's temple? A physical sow's stall can be a royal one in the sight of God and reason.

Hall against this temple, for the sake of such great, abominable, monstrous pillars.

How much more honestly do the pagan philosophers and poets write and teach, not only about God's rule and the life to come, but also about temporal virtues, since they teach that a man is by nature obliged to serve others, to believe even his enemies, and especially to be faithful and helpful in times of need, as Cicero and his peers teach. Yes, I think that in three fables of Aesopi, in half of Catone, in several comedies of Terentii there is more wisdom and teaching of good works than is found in all Talmudists' and rabbis' books, and may fall into all Jews' hearts.

If anyone thinks that I speak too much. I do not talk too much, but much too little, because I see their writings: they curse us Goyim and wish us all misfortune in their schools and prayers, they rob us of our money and goods by usury and, where they can, they prove to us all evil trickery, want to have done right and well in this, that is, to have served God, and teach to do so. No Gentiles have done this, nor does anyone, except the devil himself, or those he has possessed, as he possessed the Jews.

Burgensis, who was a very learned rabbi among them, became a Christian by God's grace (which is strange), is almost moved by this piece, that they curse us Christians so horribly in their schools (as Lyra also writes), and concludes that they must not be God's people. For if they were God's people, they would do as the captive Jews did in Babylon, to whom Jeremiah wrote: "Pray for the king and for the city where you are captives, for in its peace you also have peace" [Jer. 29:7]. But our bastards and false Jews think they must curse us, hurry, and do all harm where they can, when they have no cause; therefore they are certainly no longer God's people. More about this later.

203. Now that we come back to the temple of Haggai, it is certain that no greater, more shameful disgrace has happened to a house than to this holy house of God by such disgraceful

1) In the Wittenberg: "Ferchmütter" - piglet mothers, sows. The same expression: "Farchmutter" is also found in Luther's letter to Gabriel Zwilling of 3V. Sept. 1535, Walch, old edition, vol. XXI, 383. The Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger offer here: "Sewmütterre."

The house of Christ is called the House of God because brought, and the visions and prophecies sealed, and the the four poles are his. Nor is it called Christ's house, Most Holy One anointed." [Dan. 9, 24.]

because the four poles are his. Therefore, against such 206 We cannot now deal with this rich saying, which great dishonor, there must have been great and different is, of course, one of the most distinguished in all of glory inside, neither silver nor gold. If not, Haggai's Scripture, and all have (how rightly) been taken up around prophecy will not stand, that the glory of this temple will it. For he not only predetermines the time of Christ, but be greater than Solomon's temple, and no glory can be also prophesies what he shall do, namely, to take away found in such overpowered disgraces, except that of sin, and to bring in righteousness, and that the same by Chemdath, who is to come shortly and surpass such his death; and makes Christ the priest, which taketh away disgrace with his glory; the Jews cannot show any, and the sin of all the world. These things, I say, we must now must stifle here. leave in abeyance, and consider the time (as we have time of Antiochus until this time, when the Jews have suffered all misfortunes and are still in misery, for there shall be peace in this place, says God. The place is and still stands, the temple and peace is gone; the Jews will know how to interpret it. The histories tell me that before Antiocho there was little peace for 300 years, and after that none, until this hour, without what existed in the time of the Maccabees; I leave that, as I said, to others. Summa, this peace must not be a physical one, but the peace of Messiah or Chemdath, that is, the peace in the kingdom of God, which is eternal, which Messiah brought and taught, Is. 11, 2. Zach. 9, 9.

I must break off and leave the last part of Haggai, determined), whether such a Messiah or priest has come, where he prophesies: "In this place (says the LORD) I will or is yet to come, to strengthen our faith against all devils give peace"; whether this should be understood from the and men.

The fifth saying, from which it is proved that Messiah has come. 1) Lastly, we must listen to the great prophet Daniel, with whom a special, so-called angel, Gabriel, speaks, the like of which is not found in the old Scriptures. This must be something special, since the angel is named; he speaks to Daniel thus: "Seventy weeks are determined over your people and over 2) your holy city, so that the transgression is prevented, the sin is sealed, the iniquity is reconciled, an everlasting righteousness is established.

Of the seventy weeks of Danieli. 3)

(207) First, it is agreed that these seventy weeks are not weeks of days, but weeks of years, that one week is called seven years, and makes 490 years in all; that is one. Secondly, it is also one that these seventy weeks were completed when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans. In these two matters there is no doubt in anyone's mind, although there are countless doubts as to when and where such seventy weeks actually began and were completed; which we do not need to dispute here, because it is unanimously decided that they were completed and finished around the time of Jerusalem's destruction, which is enough for us this time.

If this is true, as it must be, because after the destruction of Jerusalem there is not a week left of the seventy weeks, then Messiah must have come about the time before the destruction of Jerusalem, when there is still something left of the seventy weeks, namely, the last week, as the text hereafter speaks clearly and powerfully. After the seven and sixty-two weeks (that is, after nine and sixty weeks), namely, in the last or seventieth week, Christ will come

1) This superscription is in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.
2) "about" is missing in the Wittenberger.

3) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.
4) "der" is missing in the Jenaer and in the Erlanger.

be killed, but in such a way that he will come back to life. For "in the same last week he shall make a covenant with many" (says the angel), which he cannot do as long as he is dead, he must be alive. For "to make a covenant" can mean nothing else than to fulfill the promise of God made to the fathers, namely to spread the blessing promised in Abraham's seed among all the Gentiles, as the angel Kroben says: "the visions and prophecies shall be sealed or fulfilled." There belongs a living Messiah, who nevertheless is to be killed before. But the Jews do not want to know about this; therefore we leave it this time and stick to the fact that Messiah must have come around the time of these seventy weeks, which the Jews cannot deny.

209 For there are their books and certain histories which prove that not only a few Jews, but all the Jews at that time, were of opinion that Messiah should come or be present at that time; this we will hear. When Herod became king by force of the Romans in Judah and Israel, the Jews saw that the scepter of Judah would be taken away by force, and they fought hard against it, and during the thirty years (that is how long they resisted) many thousands of Jews were slain and much blood was shed, until they grew tired and surrendered. But the Jews looked around for their Messiah, and there was a cry that the Messiah had been born, which was true, for in the thirtieth year of Herod our Lord Christ was born. But Herod put a stop to this cry by force, strangled all the young children around Bethlehem, so that our Lord had to be fled into Egypt. He also strangled his own son (because he was from the Jewish mother), fearing that the scepter of Judah would rise again through him and gain the followers of the Jews, because such a rumor of the born Christ (as Philo writes) had spread.

210) More than thirty years later John the Baptist comes out of the wilderness and preaches about the Lord, that he was not born alone, but that he was on his way to rule among them, soon after him, as our evangelists describe. Suddenly he is Even there, he preached great miracles, so that the Jews hoped that after the fallen scepter would come Shiloh. But the chief priests, rulers and their followers were offended by the fact that he did not come as a mighty king, but as a poor beggar. For their thoughts were that Messiah should gather the Jews together, and not only thrust the foreign king from the scepter, but also subdue the Romans and all the world with the sword, and make them great rulers over all the Gentiles. Since such a thought was lacking, the noble blood and circumcised saints were spurned, as to whom the kingdom was promised, and could not come to it through this beggar. So they despised him and did not accept him.

211 But he, when they despised and blasphemed John and his preaching and miracles as the deeds of Beelzebub, spoiled it, and salted it altogether, chastising and reproving them severely (which he should not have done), that they were stingy, wicked, naughty children, false teachers, seducers of the people, 2c. Summa, serpent-breeders and devil-children, on the other hand he was friendly to the sinners, tax collectors, pagans and Romans, so that it could be seen that he was an enemy to the people of Israel and a friend to the pagans and husks. Then the fire was kindled against him, and they were angry, bitter, venomous, and foolish against him, and at last poured out the bells to kill him, and so they did, crucifying him as cruelly as they ever could, and so they cooled their little troubles, that even Pilate the Gentile perceived and testified that they innocently condemned and killed him out of hatred and envy, without a cause.

212 Since they had executed this false Messiah (when they wanted to have considered it), they nevertheless did not leave the delusion that Messiah must be present or near. The Romans were always grumbling about the scepter. Soon the rumor came that Jesus, whom they had killed, had risen again, and was now preached for Messiah freely and openly, and the people in the city of Jerusalem fell to him, also the Gentiles in Antioch and everywhere in the country. Here they got to do; they should,

To resist this dead Messiah and his people, so that he would not be believed to be the resurrected Messiah, and also to resist the Romans, so that their Messiah, whom they hoped would not come eternally from the scepter; there arose a stranglehold against the Christians, there unrest against the Romans. This they did for forty years, until the Romans were forced to disturb the country and the city. And they lost over this delusion of their false Christ and for persecution of the true Christ eleven times a hundred thousand men, as Josephus writes, along with the land, city, scepter, temple, priesthood and everything they had in the most terrible way.

This great cruel defeat, which is terrible to read and to hear, should have made them cheap and humble. Yes, they became seven times harder, angrier and more proud than before; it helped that they, scattered around, had to see how the Christians grew and increased daily with their Messiah, and the saying of Moses, Deut. 32:21, came over them with full force: "They have angered me. They have provoked me to anger against that which is not a God; so will I provoke them to anger against that which is not a people"; and Hos. 2:23 [Cap. 1:9]: "I will call that which is not my people my people; but ye shall not be my people, neither will I be your God." And putting on their heads and horns, they wanted to have their own Messiah, of whom 1) the Gentiles should not boast, and to cut off this Messiah, of whom both Jews and Gentiles boasted; They went all over the world through the Roman Empire, where they could strangle a Christian in a corner, they dragged him out to the judges, and cried out over him (because they could no longer, since they had no court nor power), until they killed him, shed thereby a lot of Christian blood and made countless martyrs, also outside the Roman Empire, in Persia, and where they could.

214. but they still held fast to the delusion that the time of Messiah must be at hand, because the seventy weeks of Daniel were over, and the temple of Haggai destroyed, and yet not liking the person of JESUS of Nazareth, they continued

They had a rabbi or Talmudist, named Akiba, who was very highly learned among them and held above all rabbis, an old, gray, honest man, who was fervent about the sayings of Haggai and Daniel, and also Jacob, Gen. 49:10. They chose one whose surname was Kochab, which means a star in German (Burgensis calls his real name Heutoliba), who is almost well known in all histories, and called him Ben Kozba 2) or Bar Kozban; this one had to be their Messiah, and he was quite happy to do it. Then all the rabbis and all the people fell down, confidently gathered themselves together and armed themselves strongly, and wanted to clean up both Christians and Romans from the world. For they now had the Messiah of their liking and mind, of whom the above Scriptures proclaimed.

This displeasure began about thirty years after the destruction of Jerusalem, under the emperor Trajan. And Rabbi Akiba was the Kochab's prophet and spirit, who blew, drove, and incited him fiercely, bringing all the sayings in the Scriptures of Messiah upon his person before all the people, saying, Thou art Messiah. He especially made use of the saying Balaam, Numbers 24:17, 18, 19, because of his surname, that he was called Kochab, that is, Star. For thus Balaam saith in the spirit there, A Kochab (star) shall come forth out of Jacob, and a scepter shall arise out of Israel, and shall smite the princes of Moab, and destroy all the children of Seth. Edom he shall take, and Seir shall be subject to his enemies; but Israel shall have victory. Out of Jacob shall the ruler come, and destroy the remnant of cities."

That was a right sermon for such an angry, restless mob to lead them on, as it happened. And so that it would be certain and could not be lacking, the high, noble Rabbi Akiba (the old fool and hunch) made himself a satellite.

- 2) About this change of the name from Barcochba compare § 218.
- 3) Scripture - Scripture passages.

1) Wittenberger: "the".

If I haven't got it right in German, someone else will do it better; it should be the one who is first at the king's or prince's side in the field or battle, be he on horseback or on foot, although here there is something more, because he is also a prophet and (as happened with us) a coiner. Now the scepter of Judah and Messiah are sitting there, and they are sure of the things. Nevertheless they did this for thirty years, so that Kochab always let himself be called King Messiah, slaughtered many Christians who did not want to deny our Messiah Jesus Christ. His captains also attacked the Romans wherever they could, especially in Egypt, where they once defeated the Roman captain under Trajano; indeed, their hearts, brains and stomachs swelled; now God had to be with them and with them, and they took a city near Jerusalem, called "Bitter", which is called Bethoron in the Scriptures.

Here they knew no other way, because their Messiah, King Kochab, would now be master of the world, and would have won the Christians and Romans under him and everything. But the emperor Adrianus sent his army against them, besieged Bitter, won it and killed Messiah and prophet, star and eclipse, lord and ruler, so that they themselves complain in their books that there were twice eighty thousand men at Bitter, who blew the trumpets, and were over a large number of captains, and that forty times a hundred thousand men were slain, without what was slain at Alexandria, which is said to have been twelve times a hundred thousand. But methinks they throw the axe much too far. So I will interpret it: That the two times eighty thousand trumpet-blowers were brave men, able to defend themselves in battle, that each of them was able to lead large and many troops in the field.

218. after this defeat, which was very good, they themselves called Kochab, their lost Messiam, Kozab; that rhymes and reads close together. For so their Talmudists write: You shall not read Kochab, but Kozab; therefore he is now called Kozban in all histories. Kozab means: wrong. Because it had lacked, and was a false, "light a true Messiah. Just as we Germans would rhyme: You are not a German, but a deceiver, not a Welshman, but a forger. And of a usurer I may say: You are not a citizen, but a strangler; as such rhyming is common in all languages. Of such histories also writes our Eusebius, eccl. hist. lib. 4, cap. 6, calls Barcochabas, and says that there was a cruel great battle, that the Jews were so completely driven out of the country that they could no longer have seen their fatherland with their godless eyes, even from afar, if they had climbed the highest mountains.

219. such terrible history gives sufficient testimony that the whole Jewry had such a mind that the time of the Messiah must be there, when the seventy weeks had ended, the temple of Haggai had been destroyed, the scepter had been taken away from Judah, as the Proverbs of Jacob, Gen. 49, 10., Haggai 2, 8. and Daniel 9, 24. had clearly pointed out and proclaimed, that we Christians (praise God!) are sure and certain of our faith.) are sure and certain of our faith that the true Messiah, Jesus Christ, has come at that time; because not only his excellent miracles, which the Jews themselves cannot deny, stand as a testimony, but also his opponents, who wanted to cut him off together with all his own, so terrible a fall and misfortune over the name Messiah. 1) How else could they have started such misery over themselves, if they had not been sure that the time of Messiah must be here? Well, I mean, that is to say, they ran and pushed themselves, now for another time, "against the stone of offence and rock of trouble," as Isaiah 8:14, 15 says, since so many times a hundred thousand wanted to devour Jesus of Nazareth, and were themselves crushed, disintegrated, broken, entangled and caught, as Isaiah says there.

1) It seems to us that according to the context "name-Messiah" stands for "false Messiah". In all editions the words "names" and "Messiah" are written separately. A hyphen in compound words was not yet in use at Luther's time. Jonas, we believe, also did not understand this passage correctly, for he translates: propter nomen Messiae. It should be noted that in none of the German editions does it say: "Messiä", but: "Messia".

220 Since they had lacked such two dangerous and If you want to know how masterfully the Jews interpret the cruel entrenchments in the most horrible way, the first one Scriptures, so that they may not have a certain in Jerusalem under Vespasiano, the other one in Bitter understanding.

under Adrians, they should have been struck in So they have also martyred this saying of Daniel. I themselves, become soft and humble, and thought: Help cannot tell all their shameful glosses. I will take one before God, how does it happen, the time of Messiah has me, which Lyra and Burgensis consider to be the most appeared and passed according to the word of the famous and meanest of the Jews, from which the Jews prophets, and we are so cruelly and terribly struck over it! must not depart at the loss of their souls, which reads How if our thoughts of Messiah, that he should become thus:

such a worldly cook, had deceived us, and had come in 223. "Seventy weeks are appointed (says Gabriel to another way or form, how if it were Jesus of Nazareth, to Daniel) over thy people and over thy holy city, that whom so many Jews and Gentiles fall, and do many great transgression may be increased, sin sealed, iniquity miraculous signs daily? Yes, they have become seven atoned for, and everlasting righteousness brought, vision times harder and angrier than before. Their thoughts of and prophets sealed, and the most holy anointed." This is the worldly Messiah must be right and not wrong; they the text. Now follows their beautiful gloss: 3) must lie and be wrong before the appointed time and all There are still seventy weeks, then Jerusalem will be the prophets; they do not want Jesus, and if they pervert destroyed, and the Jews will be led into misery by the all the Scriptures, have no God, and never get a Messiah, Romans, and the same therefore, that through such misery they let go of their 4) sins, and therefore 5) are they will have it.

221. Therefore, from that time on, they have opposed punished, repent and make atonement or reconciliation, the Scriptures (because they were now beaten by the and thus become eternally pious, so that they deserve Romans, powerless and defenseless), and they have that the prophecies 6) of Messiah are fulfilled, and the been able to take them from us with other people's minds holy temple is rebuilt 2c.

1) and to use them; have fallen from all the forefathers Here you hear, first of all, that the immense holiness of and prophets, and from their own understanding, because the Jews misses that God will fulfill His promise of the of which they lost so many hundred thousand men, land Messiah not out of pure grace and mercy, but according and city, and have come to all miseries; these fourteen to their merit and repentance, and for the sake of their hundred years they have done nothing else, except where great exuberant piety. And how should and can God, the they learned a saying from the Christians, understood by poor man, do otherwise? For when He promised the our Messiah, They took him before them, scourged him, Messiah to Jacob, David, and Haggai out of pure mercy, tore him apart, crucified him, tortured him, so that they He did not think nor know that after the seventy weeks might put on him a different nose and a different body, and and disturbance of Jerusalem such great saints would acted in the same way as their forefathers acted against come to merit the Messiah from Him, that He would not our Lord Christ on the silent Friday, so that God might be fulfill anything out of mercy, but for the sake of their great found to be a liar, but they might be found to be the truthful ones; as you heard above, how they followed the saying of Jacob, Gen. 49, 10., 2) by ten noses, and likewise by many noses to the saying of Haggai, in which you may find two certain examples.

1) The Wittenbergers and the Jenaers offer: "nemen". Erlanger: "nennen".

2) In the old editions: "Jacob 49."

3) This sentence is missing in the Wittenberg; in Jonas it is translated.

4) Marginal gloss of the second Alisgabe, which is found in the Wittenberg and Erlangen, but is missing in the Jena: "Sins; of which they have done none, the holy children of God, nor crucified the Son of God, but committed vain worship."

5) Jenaer and Erlanger: in favor.

6) Thus the Jena. Wittenberg and Erlangen: prophets. Jonas: proksoiao.

The Jews had to give the Messiah when, where and how they wanted for the sake of purity and holiness. Such a mighty thing is it about the Jews, who after the seventy weeks have repented and become devout.

226 You can also easily think that before and during the seventy weeks they did not atone, nor were they pious, nor did they need it, and the priests at Jerusalem all died of hunger, because there was no repentance, no sin offering, no guilt offering (on which they had to feed), but everything was saved for repentance and holiness to begin after the seventy weeks. Even where there is no repentance or nothing to atone for, there is no sin. But it seems strange that after the seventy weeks, when they have atoned for all their sins by the sacrifices of the priests (who were ordained by Moses) all the days, they have to atone for them, and now they have to atone for them after the seventy weeks, when the temple, the office and the sacrifices for sin are no longer there.

But this is much more subtle: Gabriel speaks (as they gloss it), the Jews will repent and become pious after the seventy weeks, so that Messiah will come by their merit. Well, that is out; if Gabriel speaks right and does not lie, then the Jews have atoned, have become pious, have earned the Messiah since the time after the seventy weeks. For he says that these things shall come to pass from the Jews after the seventy weeks. Where now? They confess, yes, they complain, that Messiah has not come in the seventy weeks, nor until then, probably 1468 years, and they do not yet know when he will come: so they must also confess that these 1468 years after the seventy weeks they have never atoned for any sin, nor become godly, nor earned the Messiah. Otherwise, 1) the angel Gabriel must be lying, who promises by God that after the seventy weeks the Jews will repent, become righteous and merit the Messiah'.

228. if the angel Gabriel lied that the Jews have not atoned for 1500 years after the seventy weeks, which is a long time to atone for, then he will lie for eternity, and the Jews will not repent for eternity. For whoever does not repent in 1500 years, nor become pious, if he intends to do so, will certainly never repent nor become pious.

229) Moses also clearly proves that they never atoned for their sins after the seventy weeks, 3 Mos. 26, 44. 5 Mos. 4, 30. 31. and 30, 1-6. where he promises with many glorious words, where they will turn from their hearts and confess their sins, God will bring them back to their homeland, even if they were scattered to the ends of the heavens 2c. Moses speaks such words because of God, whom one does not have to punish with lies. Since they are not brought back into the land until then, it is certain that they have never atoned for any sin after the seventy weeks from their hearts, and it must be a lie that Gabriel should speak of their repentance, as they falsely interpret.

230 Thus we also know that God is so kind by nature that the hour a man repents or repents from the heart, his sin is forgiven, as David says, Ps. 32:5: "I said: I will confess my sin unto the LORD; and thou wilt forgive me the iniquity of my sin." So we also read, when the prophet Nathan punished David's sin, and he then said, "I have sinned"; immediately Nathan absolved him and said, "God has forgiven your sin" [2 Sam. 12:13]. And even though he often does not take away the punishment as soon as it happens, as happened to David, he nevertheless lets the forgiveness of sins be certain for the person, and if there were not a prophet or priest, an angel would have to come and say: Your sins are forgiven you; so that the sinner in his repentance and under the punishment does not despair or despair. As we also see in the Babylonian prison, how graciously and fatherly he comforts those who confess their sin, so that they may endure the punishment; and even the punishment cannot last the length of time, but must have its definite time, measure and end, where there is right repentance and penance.

231 But here with these Jews there is no forgiveness of sin, no prophet to comfort them and make them sure, no appointed time of punishment, but only unending wrath and unmercifulness without all mercy, so that they may be forgiven.

1) "Wo anders" is only in the Erlangen edition, but is also in Jonas: Huiä si seeus rss kaderst.

is not only false, but also impossible to understand to that which is not; so shalt thou merit grace, as they merit Gabriel's promise of their repentance, much less of their the Messiam.
merit and righteousness.

232. ah, what shall we lose much words and time? even the very coarse outward life should convince them
The land of Canaan has hardly been a beggar's piece or well, what they do for repentance. For they are full of a plate compared to the whole world's kingdom; nor have sorcery and witchcraft, of signs and figures and of the they earned it by their repentance, contrition or name Tetragrammaton (that is idolatry), full of envy and righteousness, as Moses says, Deut. 9:4, 5. That they did pride, in addition vain thieves and robbers, who daily not take the land by their righteousness, but as the stiff- neither eat a morsel nor wear a thread, which they have necked and disobedient (that is, with great sins and not stolen and robbed from us by their damned usury; thus unmerit), only by the gracious promise of God; and yet they live daily by vain theft and robbery with wife and child, they were at that time the most pious and best, as Hosea as the arch-thieves and land-robbers in all impenitent and Balaam, Numbers 23:21-23. 23, 21-23. They had security. For a usurer is an ore thief and land robber, who Moses, Aaron, worship, prophets, God Himself with His should hang on the gallows seven times higher than other miracles, bread from heaven, water from the 1) rock, thieves. Indeed, of such beautiful repentance and merit clouds by day, pillars of fire by night, imperishable God would have to prophesy from heaven through His garments and shoes 2c. And these saddened yeast, nasty holy angel, and thus become a shameful, blasphemous yeast, withered foam, moldy basic soup, and evil 2) liar, for the sake of the noble blood and circumcised cesspool of Judaism should deserve with their repentance saints, who boast themselves sanctified by God's and righteousness of the whole world kingdom, that is, commandments, and yet trample all of them underfoot Messiah and the fulfillment of the prophecies, since they and do not keep any of them.
do not have anything, nothing but a rotten, stinking, discarded yeast of the fatherly blossom.

Summa, Moses and all right Israelites understood the 236 Then follows in the saying of Daniel: "Know sayings of the Messiah, given by pure grace and mercy, therefore, and mark, that from the time that the without repentance and merit, as we have seen in the commandment goeth forth, that Jerusalem shall be built the above-mentioned sayings of Jacob, David, and Haggai; again until Messiah the prince be seven weeks, and for Daniel also does not ask, desire, or think that such a threescore and two weeks, then shall the streets and the glorious promise of the seventy weeks should be revealed walls be built again, though in a small time. And for two to him; but far, far beyond his desire, it is proclaimed to and threescore weeks Messiah shall be slain, and have him by grace. nothing."

From this you can see what repentance the Jews have 237] How ridiculous it is to the circumcised saints that done and are still doing after the seventy weeks, which we cursed goyim have interpreted and understood this they began with lies and blasphemy and continued to do, saying, especially because we have not read their rabbis, and still do without stopping. If anyone desires, let him Talmudists, Kochabists, which are more resounding with take here an example of the repentance of the Jews, and them than all the Scriptures, for they do it much better, lift up and say: God and his angels are liars, talking about namely, "Know therefore and know of the origin of the word that Jerusalem is to be rebuilt; that is, remember and understand it well, that a word has gone out how Jerusalem is to be rebuilt.

1) Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: den. Jonas: de petra.
2) Jenaer, Walch and Erlanger: mörsichtiger.

3) In the editions: rigidly blind.
4) In the Wittenberg and Jena editions: "das sich". In the old edition of Walch and in the Erlangen: "das sie". Jonas: qui se - "the themselves". We have assumed the latter.

are to be built; that is one. Further: Up to Messiah the prince, that is up to king Cores, are seven weeks; that is again one. Next: And two and threescore weeks shall the walls and streets be built again, though in a little time; which is once more one. And after sixty-two weeks, Messiah (that is, King Agrippa) shall be slain, and shall not be (that is, shall not be king 2c.).

238 It is indeed vexatious to deal with such confused lies and fools' remarks; but I must give ours cause to consider the devilish will of the rabbis in this beautiful saying. Well, here you see how they divide the text, which is to be attached to each other, and, since it is to be divided, attach it to each other. Namely, they shall hang one upon another, "Know and mark that from the beginning of the word, how Jerusalem is to be rebuilt until Messiah, there are seven weeks and sixty-two weeks. These things, I say, shall hang one upon another, and be a whole text. Follows: "then shall the walls and the gates be built again in a little while." This piece, which is divided, is attached to the previous piece (sixty-two weeks), so that walls and streets are built for sixty-two weeks.

These are called "arch-knave pieces". I am immediately reminded of the boy, of whom I heard say, when I was a young monk, how he had torn and disjointed the Lord's Prayer in this way: Our Father, hallowed be thy name in heaven, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Or as that unlearned priest read the lection in the Vigil, 1 Cor. 15:55, 56: Ubi est mors stimulus, Tuus stimulus autem mortis, peccatum est virtus vero, etc. 240. Such tearing up of the text is done by the Jews only because they want to destroy the text of Scripture for us Christians, even though it is of no use to them in this way. For it teaches them nothing, comforts them nothing, gives them nothing, and remains vain words, so that the angel does as much as if he had spoken nothing. But they want to go without such comforting, blessed words and suffer harm before they should be of use to us. Like ground stein [Carlstadt] also sacrilegiously tore up the words of the Sacrament, so that they should not be useful to us. But it shall not help the rabbis, yes, the Nachtraben and Huhu; we want to give up their howling and lying with God's help, and want to take one piece after the other.

241 First, I will let the Hebrew scholars be instructed whether the word intellige is also constructed with the word de in the Scriptures; I have not found it, and it seems to me to be a matter of opinion. If it is to be called de, as de subjecta materia, the Hebrew has praepositio Al, as also the Latin, multa super Priamo etc.. But this I know well, that the Jews cannot prove such construction in this place, and the examples of Scripture here agree that it stands absolute sine regime. But to freely attribute something to God, which is not certain nor can be proven, is just as much as trying God and punishing him for lying.

242 Now let us see how they tear up the text: Know and mark the end of the word, that Jerusalem shall be built again. This piece is not to give the beginning of the seventy weeks, but an understanding of the outgoing word, after which follows: Until Messiah the Prince there are seven weeks. Now it is the way of all languages that this word donec, until, must have a beginning; but the Jews do not give it one, do not want to suffer it to be called: from the beginning of the word until Messiam. I must give a simile 1).

If someone said to you here in Wittenberg in the marketplace of St. Galli, "You have heard a sermon about God's word that the church is holy; think about it and notice it well. Well, you look him in the mouth, what he wants to say more, because he wants to say more. So he suddenly starts: Until Michaelmas are seven weeks, or: Until Halle are three miles away, Here you would look at him and say: What, art thou foolish? Shall the seven weeks now begin at the market, or the three miles from Wittenberg? No, he would say, you must understand this, from St. Lorenz to Michaelmas, and from Bitterfeld to Halle. Here you would like to say: Kiss me the sow on the Pacem under the Pirzel, 1) where did you learn to talk like that? And where do the seven weeks rhyme with that, since you tell me that I should well remember the sermon of God's word heard in Wittenberg 2)?

1) In the editions: "Gleiches"; but the Wittenberg and the Jena have as marginal gloss: "Gleichniß". Jonas: simile.

The rabbis do the same with the word of the angel Gabriel, who must begin, "Until Messiah, there are seven weeks. Would Daniel now say, What then, my Gabriel, shall the seven weeks begin now that thou speakest unto me? No, saith he, thou must understand this, to begin from the destruction of Jerusalem. Yes, thanks be to you, you noble circumcised rabbis, you are masters over God and all the angels, that you teach the angel Gabriel to speak in this way, as if he could not tell the beginning of the seven weeks as well as the middle and the end. But Daniel shall understand it. I thought, he is to pass away it in it or to miss it. Fie on you shameful rabbis, that you may ascribe your foolish speech to the angel of God, so that you disgrace yourselves and convince yourselves that you are liars and blasphemers in the words of God. But that is only the Grammatica, now let us see the Theologica 3).

They say, the holy circumcised ravens, that the seventy weeks shall begin from the first destruction, and end in the second destruction of Jerusalem. How can they get away with it, because their eyes and ears are closed, they have not looked at the Scriptures or the histories, but they have spoken out of free conceit: It seems to us thus, and wanting thus, therefore God and his angel must have spoken thus? how can it fail? we are the ravens, who can master God and angels.

246 Well, this may be called a wicked, fretful, blasphemous people, who can merit the Messiah by such their repentance. But let us hear their prudence: The seventy weeks looked on from the destruction of Jerusalem, from the king of Babylon; that is out. From that time there are seven weeks until Messiah the Prince, that is, until King Cores; that also is out. Now tell me, where is this written? In the ranch hole. Who said it? Marcolfus. Who else could say it or write it?

247 There is the bright, clear text of Daniel in the beginning of this 9th chapter, that this revelation of the seventy weeks happened to him in the first year of Darii, the Mede, who had won the kingdom of Babylon, since the first destruction of Jerusalem had happened seventy years before; as Daniel clearly says there that seventy years of desolation were fulfilled, according to the word of Jeremiah 29:10, likewise 2 Chronicles 36:22. 36, 22. Nor must such bright two sayings of the Scriptures, as Daniel 9. and 2 Chron. 36, 22, are liars to the rabbis, but they are right, that the seventy weeks must have begun seventy years before they are revealed to Daniel. Isn't that fine? Now believe the rabbis, the coarse unlearned asses, who regard neither Scripture nor history, and spout out of their wicked mouths against God and angels, as they please.

248 Because their lies and false courage are now publicly convinced that the seventy weeks, which were revealed in the first year of Darii, could not have begun seventy years earlier, from the destruction of Jerusalem, all their lies, which were built on this foundation, have fallen down and must let Daniel's saying about the seventy weeks remain pure and unadulterated without their thanks, but they have to pay eternal disgrace for their courageous, obvious lie. For this lie is followed by another lie, that they point Messiah the prince to the king Cores, who is supposed to have come seven weeks after the destruction, when he probably came ten weeks, that is, seventy years after the destruction, as 2 Chron. 36, 22. and Dan. 9, 24., Ezra 1, 1. is written.

(249) Even if we suppose (which is impossible) that the seventy weeks began from the destruction of Jerusalem, yet the gross lie will not be mended, and here falls the third lie after it. For they say that Cores came fifty-two years after the destruction of Jerusalem.

1) "Pirtzel" - rump, tail. The old edition of Walch and the Erlangen offerü: "and the Pirzel". - Pacem", euphemistic for podicem, also for its incense, Walch, old edition, vol. XVII, 1299, § 32.

2) "zu Wittenberg" is missing in the Wittenberg specification.

3) In the Jenaer, with Walch and in the Erlanger: Theologia. Jonas: Theologiam.

of destruction, they make seven weeks and three years, which is eight and a half weeks; so they take three years, or half a week, out of the sixty-two weeks, and put them with the seven first weeks; just as if the angel were so much a fool or a child that could not count seven, and spoke seven, when he should speak eight and a half. Why do they do this? Because they want to see how they handle lies, how they tear apart and pervert God's word. Therefore Cores must have come to them eight and a half weeks, which they call seven, after the destruction, when he came ten weeks, that is, seventy years after, as is said.

(250) Neither suffereth the angel that the weeks should be so divided and broken, 1) That thou shouldest take from one three years, that she may have four years only; and that thou shouldest divide to another, which hath seven years, the three years, that she may have ten years, or a week and a half. For he saith, The seventy weeks are actually numbered, and counted, or reckoned.

251 He suffers much less from this fourth lie, that Cores should be called Messiah here, if the other lies were true, that Cores would have come after seven weeks (that is after fifty-two years). For there stand the bright dry words of the angel: "Seventy weeks are determined over your people and your city", wants to say: I have spoken in other chapters of foreign people and kings; but now in this saying of the seventy weeks I speak of your people, of your city and your Messiah. And he that saith otherwise of other people and kings is a wanton, desperate liar.

252 After this fourth lie comes the fifth, when they tear the seven weeks from the sixty-two weeks. For they shall cleave one to another, and there is no cause why they should be severed one from another, especially because the lie of the king Cores was omitted, for whose sake they severed the seven and sixty-two weeks one from another, that they might give him seven, that is, eight and a half. And is the scripture wise thus in Hebrew, to count the years. First the one number, then the other number of years, but all together, as Gen. 5, 6. 7. and 11, 16. 17. the examples much stand, in the fathers, so died; namely: "Seth lived five year and hundred year, and begat Enos. After that he lived seven years and eight hundred years." Item Gen. 11, 17: Eber lived after the birth of Peleg thirty years and four hundred years. And Gen. 25, 7: Abraham lived a hundred years, seventy years and five years. From this it can be seen that it is pure courage to separate the number of seven years and sixty-two years in this saying.

253 The Latin and German language finely resists such tearing, because it does not repeat the little word year so often, but attaches it to each other and says: Abraham lived a hundred and five and seventy years. So here also, from the beginning of the word to Messiah, the prince, are seven and sixty-two weeks. This number is to be attached to each other and be one number until Messiah, But the angel has reason why he calls the whole number, seven weeks and sixty-two weeks, when he could have said nine weeks and sixty weeks, and many other ways call such number, as five weeks and sixty-four weeks, item, six weeks and sixty-three weeks 2c. For he must have the seven weeks to build the walls and streets of Jerusalem, and the sixty-two to the last week, for which all things are to be done, in which Messiah shall die and make the covenant 2c.

254 The sixth lie follows, when they say that the walls and streets of Jerusalem were rebuilt for sixty-two weeks (not including three years), that is, until the last week, after which (as they lie for the seventh time) Jerusalem is destroyed again. For with the last week the seventy weeks are over. And therefore Jerusalem should not have been built longer than one week, that is, seven years. Deny, Jew, confidently, and do not be ashamed. Nehemiah, on the other hand, stands with his book and testifies that he built the walls, set the gates, divided the city, and consecrated it gloriously, so that the temple was ready in the seventh week.

1) "zermerkeln" probably as much as: zermergeln. Jonas: truncentur - verstümmele.

sixth year Darii, Ezra 6, 15.; also Alexander Magnus found the city of Jerusalem ready for a long time; still much more found it ready after him and the temple very rich the noble fruit Antiochus, who plundered it horribly.

The eighth gross lie falls after this, because they interpret this word of the angel: "And after sixty-two weeks Messiah will be killed, and will have nothing": Messiah is the king Agrippa, he is killed, and after his death he has had nothing, and no king has come after him. Why is not Messiah more the emperor Nero, who is killed at this time without heirs? Yes, I fear they would take Marcolfum or Thersitam for Messiam before they suffered the right Messiam. How should God suffer such a shameful public lie, who loves the truth and is the truth itself, if such a lie is offensive to a man who is a liar or false, or who does not love the truth so much? And this eighth lie is a manifold lie: first, that in so short a text they interpret Messiam differently and differently; there he must be Cores after the seven weeks; here he must be Agrippa after the sixty-two weeks; as if the angel were a fool, always wanting to give another Messiah over the third word.

(256) So we have heard above that the angel does not speak of a foreign people and city, but "of your people" (he speaks), and "of your city" I speak, therefore we must not unite two Messiahs in this saying, but one, and he who is Messiah of this people and city, namely Shiloh of Judah, after the fallen scepter, the son of David, Chemdath Haggai, yes, we must understand him here, otherwise the saying will not suffer anyone. For Agrippa was not king in Jerusalem, much less Messiah before the last week, that is, after seven and sixty-two weeks. The Romans gave him a small land on the other side of the Jordan by grace, and the Roman governors ruled the land of Judea, Felix, Festus, Albinus 2c., nor was Agrippa killed after the sixty-two weeks. Summa, everything they say is a lie.

257. because they now confess and confess

If a Messiah is killed after the sixty-two weeks, that is, in the first year of the last week, and Agrippa cannot be (as they would like to confirm their lies), nor any other, I would like to see where they will take one; we must have one who has been there before the seventy weeks have ended, and who is killed after sixty-two weeks; and who is from their people (as Gabriel says) without doubt from the royal tribe of Judah. Now they had not had a king of their people or tribe since Herod's time, that is certain; so Gabriel also wants to be certain, and have a Messiah of their people. Where now from?

258 I will say further. They themselves confess that from the first destruction of Jerusalem until the last destruction they had no Messiah, that is, an anointed king (Messiah means the anointed one), because the holy anointing oil, of which Genesis 2 Mos. 30, 25. writes, so that kings and priests were anointed, no longer existed after the first destruction. Therefore Zedekiah was the last anointed king; his descendants were princes, not kings, until Herod, when the scepter ceased and Shiloh, the true Messiah, was to come.

259. they want to clean the lies completely, because Daniel says: "He will confirm the covenant to many a week" (that is, the last week). Here they do the ninth lie, saying: "The Romans made peace and decency with the Jews this last week or seven years; but because the Jews resisted, the Romans came over three years and destroyed Jerusalem. Yes, where does Gabriel stand here, who says that the peace or decency (as they interpret the covenant) should stand for seven years? If it has not stood longer than three years, Gabriel lies with his seven years or last week, that is, the desperate liars falsely impute this to the angel Gabriel out of their lying heart. Ah, what decency! what peace! Read Joseph[us] and the histories, and you will find how the Romans slew many thousands of Jews long before, and there was no peace until they had to destroy Jerusalem and the land.

260. the tenth and last lie, that the desolation of Jerusalem shall endure until the

1) "Messia" is missing in the Wittenberg.

The end of the quarrel. This they interpret: until the battle of their Messiah, who shall slay Gog and Magog and win all the world. This is a poor, impotent lie, which is dead before it is born. For where it is received that Messiah is to come before the seventy weeks are out, such a lie is already destroyed 1500 years ago. And so the Jews do not keep a word of the whole saying of Gabriel that they have not made a lie, except when the angel says that Jerusalem is to be destroyed. That they now believe the same and let it remain true, no one knows them no thanks; but at the time when they still had Jerusalem, they believed it much less, neither they now believe in our Messiah, although it is brightly enough prophesied, see Dau. 9, 26. and Zach. 14, 2. And if they were still sitting in it, they would have to think up a hundred thousand lies before they believed it, as their forefathers did before the first destruction; they were not persuaded by any prophet that the holy city of God should be destroyed, and they tormented it and raged like mad dogs until faith came into their hands. They have always been a stiff-necked, unbelieving, proud, wicked, desperate people, and still remain so.

From all this we see that Daniel with his seventy weeks stands for us against the lies and foolishness of the Jews as an iron wall and immovable rock, that the true Messiah must have come before the end of the seventy weeks, and was killed, and came to life again, the covenant of God (for what should Daniel speak here of the Gentiles' covenant, which was also never nothing at that time?) the last week, so that the city and the people were given leave after the end of the seventy weeks, so that soon after it was torn apart by the Romans, and the people were destroyed with all their regiment and everything, as the angel said, "Seventy weeks have been reckoned for your people and your city," or determined; so that an end was made.

262 If the Jews can lie and interpret a lot to maintain their error against such a bright and powerful text, they need to do so; the previous lies have become disgraceful in themselves. But if they have a hundred

A thousand years should lie and take all devils to help, nor would they always have to stand with shame for and for. For it is impossible to give a Messiah at the time of the seventy weeks, as Gabriel's revelation compels, if it is not to be our Lord Jesus Christ; of this we are sure, certain and joyful, and offer it with a clip in defiance of all the gates of hell, all the gates of the world, and all that will or may be high, wise and prudent against us. I, a wicked, lowly saint in Christ, trust to resist them all alone, and to defend such with light, sleepy, merry work. But to convert the devil and his own is not possible, nor are we commanded to do so; it is enough to expose their lies and reveal the truth. Whoever does not want to believe the truth for the sake of his own soul may well leave it alone for my sake.

We will now leave it at these four sayings, Jacob, David, Haggai, Daniel, in which we see what a beautiful work the Jews have done in the Scriptures these 1500 years and are still doing. For as they deal with these sayings, so do they with all other sayings, especially those concerning us and our Messiah; they must all be lies, but they are the ones who cannot err or be mistaken. But they have not learned the art of lying well; they lie too roughly and unawares, that one can grasp it well, who wants to pay a little attention to it.

But a frightening example of divine wrath is presented to us Christians, as St. Paul says, Rom. 11, 21, that we should fear God and honor His word, while the time of grace seems to be, lest such a shameful or even worse thing happen to us, as we have already experienced with the Pabst and Mahomet. For in the case of the Jews one can see how easily the devil (once one falls away from the right understanding of the Scriptures) can lead people into such blindness and darkness that even natural reason and sheer unreasonable animals can grope and grasp; nor should those who teach and hear God's word daily see it, but consider it to be the right light. Oh, Lord God, have mercy on us!

265. where I should find all the other articles of the

I might have to write against them as much and for as long as they have been telling lies, that is, for more than two thousand years. I have said above, as they corrupt their circumcision with seditions, and destroy their bloodline with courtship; so also do they profane their Sabbath and all their feasts. Summa, they eat, they drink, they sleep, they watch, they stand, they walk, they dress or undress, they fast, they bathe, they pray, they praise, and everything they live or do is so polluted with rabbinical, obscene essays and misbelief that Moses is no longer recognizable among them, just as among us under the papacy Christ and his word became almost unrecognizable before the great immensity of human essays. But that is enough of their lies against doctrine or faith this time.

The third part of this book, of the Jews' lies against the person of our dear Lord Jesu Christ. 1)

In the end, we also want to see their lies against people, which neither make the doctrine worse nor better, whether they are pious or evil, namely, what they lie about the person of our Lord; item, about his dear mother, and about us and all Christians. These are such lies, when the devil can do nothing to the doctrine, 2) then he sets himself against the person, denies, reviles, curses and rages against the same. Just as the papist Beelzebub did to me; when he could not resist my gospel, he wrote: 3) I have the devil, I am a changeling, my dear mother is a whore and a bathmaid; immediately, when he had written this, my gospel was destroyed, and the papists had won. So John the Baptist and Christ himself had to have the devil and be called Samaritan [Joh. 8, 48.]; immediately John's and Christ's teaching became wrong, and the Pharisees' teaching right. This is what happened to all the prophets. Recently, now also, when the assassin of Wolfenbüttel 4) (of the Holy Roman Church, according to your Cardinal at Mainz, a certain sanctuary and treasure) 5) had reviled and disgraced the person of the Elector of Saxony and Landgrave of Hesse in the most shameful way, they were both lost in a flash; but he, the holy man, king over all kings, was crowned with a diamond wreath and gold, so heavily that he could not bear it and had to flee.

Therefore, whoever wants to win an evil cause, do so also, and, as the loose tongues do in court, if the silver addiction and the golden fever persist, scold and lie confidently on the person, then the cause is won. As that mother taught her child: "Dear son, if you cannot win, enter into a quarrel. These are called lies, because the liar does not believe or err in the matter (as happens in matters of faith), but knows himself well that he is lying and wants to lie against the person, and does not intend to prove it either with appearance or truth, as he cannot.

268. So do the Jews in this case; they confidently reproach, lie and curse the person, against their own conscience; Thus they have long since won the cause, that God must hear them, sitting in Jerusalem in a golden city for 1500 years, as we see before our eyes, being lords of the world, running to all the Gentiles with their chemdath, skirts, brogues 6) and shoes, letting themselves be strangled by the noble princes and lords of Israel, giving them land and people and everything they have, as they curse, spit and maledict the Goyim.

And if they did not lie, curse, spit, blaspheme, and revile the people so shamefully, you can think that God would not have heard them, and that they would have lost their cause long ago, that they would not be masters in Jerusalem, but would be scattered in the world, not seeing Jerusalem, feeding themselves with lies, deceit, stealing, robbing, usury, and all kinds of evil among the cursed goyim. Such a mighty thing is it, if one can curse the persons, if the thing is evil and lost. Therefore let

1) This superscription is in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

2) "anhaben" put by us instead of: abhaben. Jonas: laedere aut opprimere.

3) Duke George of Saxony.

4) Duke Henry of Brunswick.

5) These brackets are set by us.

6) d. i. Pants.

Do not let the Jews' example be a bad thing to you, where fifty-five. So they call Jesus, that is, three hundred and you have an evil thing. They are the noble princes of sixteen. Such a number shall then give another word, in it Israel, who can do anything when they have lost the stands Hebel Vorik, of which you may read further Anton. cause and can curse the goyim greatly. Margaritam, what they do devil's work with such number devil, because they cannot deny his miracles, just as their Now when a Christian hears them speak Jesus, as fathers did, saying, "He casts out devils through must sometimes happen because they have to speak to Beelzebub, the prince of all devils" [Luc. 11:15]. And they us, a Christian thinks they call the name Jesus; but they have much to lie and make up about the name of God, mean the numerical letters, Jesus, that is, the three Tetragrammaton, that our Lord Jesus was able to hundred and sixteen number in the blasphemous word interpret the same name (which they call Vorik. And so, when they have said Jesus in their prayer, Shemhamphorah) and whoever is able to do this is able they spit three times on the earth in honor of our Lord and to perform all kinds of miracles; But they cannot give an all Christians, with great love and devotion. But when they example that ever there was a man who by such a themselves speak among themselves, they add:

270 First, they call our Lord Jesus a sorcerer and a and words.

Shemhamphorah performed a miracle worth a gnat, so deleatur nomen ejus, in good German: that God may that one has to grasp it, as they, as desperate liars, invent destroy him, or: that all devils may take him away. such things about our Lord. For if such a rule were true of Shemhamphoras, someone must have done it before or after; otherwise how could one know that Shemhamphoras had such power? But it is too long, will let it go out after this booklet in special note, what Purchetus writes about it. 1) It has happened rightly to them, since they rejected the truth of God, that they had to believe such shameful, foolish, foolish lies for it, and for the beautiful face of divine word had to look into the black, dark back lying hole of the devil, and worship his stink.

After that they take his name. For JEsus in Hebrew means Savior or Helper. The old Saxons used a name, Helprich or Hilprich, which sounds like the name JEsus, so that we would now say Hülfreich, that is, he who can or should help. To their chagrin, however, the Jews do so, and call him Jesus, which in Hebrew is neither a name nor a word, but three letters, like the cypher or number letters; as if I took the three number letters C. L. V. cypher-wise, and made the word Clu out of them, which are a hundred and ten letters.

deleatur nomen ejus, in good German: that God may destroy him, or: that all devils may take him away.

They do the same to us Christians: when they receive us, if we come to them, they turn the word, welcome to God, and say, "Sched wil kom,"²) that is, devil come, or, there comes a devil. Because we do not understand Hebrew, they secretly exercise their wrath on us, so that we think they are talking to us in a friendly manner, and so they curse us with hellish fire and all misfortune. Such fine guests we poor pious Christians have with the Jews in our country, whom we mean with all faithfulness, and would gladly do them the best, both in body and soul, and suffer very many rough things from them.

274 After that they call him a whore child and his mother Mary a whore, whom she had with a blacksmith in adultery. I must speak so rudely, though unwillingly, to the wretched devil. Now they know very well that they lie such things out of pure hatred and will of courage, only that they poison their poor youth and simple-minded Jews bitterly enough against the person of our Lord, so that they do not fall for his teaching (which they cannot deny). Nor do they want to be the holy people to whom God, for the sake of their righteousness, has given the

1) This was done by the next following writing of Shemhamphoras.

2) Deceptively spoken instead of: Be welcome". - In our Wittenberg edition, the following remark is made in an old hand: "Anton[ius] Margar[ita] C. 1.

Messiah. God commanded in the eighth commandment not to speak falsely against one's neighbor, not to lie or deceive, not to revile or blaspheme, even to one's enemies. Because Zedekiah did not believe the king of Babylon, he was severely punished by Jeremiah and Ezekiel for such lies, and was also miserably imprisoned [Jer. 37:17, Ezek. 17:16].

But our noble princes of the world and circumcised saints have invented this beautiful doctrine against such commandment of God, that they may freely lie, blaspheme, curse, rape, murder, rob, and do all evil as and when and to whom they will. God may keep His commandment Himself, the noble blood and circumcised people shall do contrary to it according to all their pleasure and good pleasure, and shall nevertheless be called right and well done, Messiah and deserving of Heaven. In spite of God and all the angels, that they should rebel against it, be silent, that the devil and the accursed goyim should reprove it unjustly; for here is the noble blood, which cannot sin, nor is subject to God's commandment.

Now what has the poor maid Mary done to them? With what do they want to prove that she is a whore? She has done nothing but bear a son, whose name is Jesus. Is it then an evil thing for a young wife to bear a child? or shall they all be called harlots who bear a child? where will their wives and themselves be? are they also all harlots and harlot children? Yes, you cursed goyim, that is another. Do you not know that the Jews are Abraham's noble blood, circumcised, and kings in heaven and earth, what they say is right. Now if among the accursed goyim there were a virgin as pure and holy as the angel Gabriel, and one of the least noble princes said that she was an arch-whore and worse than the devil, it would have to be so, without any other proof than this: "A noble mouth of the blood of Abraham has said it, who can say no to it? Again, if an arch-whore of the noble blood of the Jews were as ugly as the devil himself, if it pleased the noble lords, she is purer neither no angel. For the power stands with the noble circumcised lords, who cursed goyim to lie, revile, defile, blaspheme and curse as they please; in turn, to bless, honor, praise and extol themselves, even if God would have it otherwise. Do you think it is such a bad thing for a Jew? God in heaven and all the angels must laugh and dance when they let a Jew hear a forz, so that you cursed goy may know from now on what a glorious thing it is about a Jew; otherwise, how could they so boldly call Mariam a whore for whom they know no guilt, when they would not have such power to trample God and His commandment underfoot?

You and I, as the pale goyim, want to present a rough similitude, so that we, as the blind Gentiles, may understand a little the high cleverness of the noble holy Jews. If I had a cousin or close blood friend, of whom I knew nothing evil nor had ever noticed anything, and other people, to whom I would have been unhappy, praised the same 1) my cousin, honored her highly, considered her to be an excellent, pious, virtuous, praiseworthy woman, so that they would also say that the wretch is not worthy that he should have such a fine honest female image for a cousin, a bitch or she-wolf should be his cousin. And if I were to hear such praise of my cousin, I would begin to say against my conscience, "She is an evil whore, they are all lying," and I would want everyone to believe me without any proof, since I would truly know that I, a desperate liar, was speaking such things against the innocent cousin, and I would curse all those who did not believe such a lie of mine (as I myself would have to consider it a certain lie in my heart):

Tell me, what would you consider me? Would you not say: I would not be a man, but a monster, a fierce monster, who would not be worthy to look at the sun, leaves, grass, or some creature, yes, you should consider me full of devils, as I should cover my base's shame, if I knew one, as it would be my own, where it wanted to break out, as all other people do. And now no one knows of her but vain honor, nor I myself, yet out-and to lie to my cousin with false shame as a villain, regardless of the fact that such shame would come home to me myself.

1) In the editions: "the same".

The noble circumcised saints are also such people (where I should or could call them so). We Goyim, to whom they are hostile and hateful, confess that Mary is not ours, but the Jews of Abraham's blood, their base and blood friend, praise and extol her to the highest: then they go to and ravish her to the highest. Now if there were a real drop of blood from Israel in such shameful Jews, do you not think they would say, "What will we do? If her son has angered us, what can she do? Why would we ravish her? After all, she is our flesh and blood; surely before a wicked child comes from a pious mother. No, such saintly people must not have such reasonable human thoughts, but they must have devilish, evil, lying thoughts, so that they may repent and soon deserve their Messiah, as they have deserved for 1500 years.

280 They lie further and blaspheme him and his mother, that she conceived him untimely. This bit they mean very poisonous, bitter and evil. Moses writes, Leviticus 18:19, that when a woman's mother purifies herself, she should separate herself from her husband, and the husband from her, for loss of life and limb; for what is conceived at the same time of purification will also produce an unfit, infirm fruit, such as delusional children, natural fools, kilts, 2) changelings, and the like, who have broken brains all their lives. Thus the Jews want to disgrace us Christians, that we honor a natural born fool from the womb, or a right kilcrop for a messiah. Such nonsensical, accursed goyim they hold us, the highly understanding, circumcised and deeply enlightened saints. Well, these are the devil's own thoughts and words.

281. do you ask, for what reason they such or what is the cause of it? Thou coarse, accursed goy, shalt thou ask this first? Is it not enough for you to hear that the noble circumcised saints say so? Wilt thou not yet learn that such a holy people, free from all the commandments of God, cannot sin, may lie, blaspheme, revile, murder whom they will, even God Himself and all His prophets, is all vain glorious service of God. Didn't I tell you above that a Jew is such a noble and precious jewel, that when he lets out a pomp, God and all the angels dance, and even if he does something worse, it should still be considered a golden Talmud, and what goes down and up from such a holy man, that the cursed goyim should have for vain sanctity.

For if it were not such a noble thing for a Jew, how would it be possible that he should despise all Christians with their Messiah and his mother so disgracefully, and destroy them with such sacrilegious, poisonous lies? That they would let us be as good as geese or ducks, if they did not want to take us for human beings, the tender, pure, wise saints! For such nonsense, which they herewith attribute to us, I would not know how to appropriate to a sow, which lets itself be defiled with dung below and above, does not eat much purer. Well, this may be called a wrath of God, which is terrible, namely, to fall into such groundless, devilish, hellish, furious malice, envy and hopefulness. And if I were to take revenge on the devil himself, I would not wish him such evil and misfortune, so that the Jews are tormented by God's wrath, that they have to lie and blaspheme so shamefully against their own conscience. Well, they have their reward, that God has always had to be their liar.

283. it also indicates Sebastianus Münster 4) in his Bible, that a poisonous rabbi should be, who calls the dear mother of Christ not Mary, but Haria, sterquilinium, a heap of dirt. And who knows what they have more among them, of which we know nothing? One sees

1) Wittenberger: and. Jonas: ex Abraham.

2) On "Kielkrops" compare Luther's Table Talks, Cap. 24, § 95 and § 96. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 756 ff. Jonas translates: lymphati, daemone afflati.

3) Pomp - Bombart, Fart. Compare § 293 and § 340 of this paper.

4) About Sebastian Münster compare the Tischreden, St. Louis edition, Vol. XXII, 1704, No. 106. Lauterbach, p.47.

They know that the devil drives them to all kinds of lies and blasphemies, which he can always devise in the worst way. So they do not begrudge the dear mother Mary, the daughter of David, who has done them no harm, not even her right name, how should they begrudge her life, good or honor? And what should they grant us cursed goyim, when they wish and show all shame and evil to their own flesh and blood, which is innocent, of which they know nothing evil?

With such a heart and mouth, they may therefore come before God, call His holy name, pray, and call upon Him to bring them back to Jerusalem, to send the Messiah, to kill all the nations, and to give them the goods of all the world. The fact that God does not strike them with thunder and lightning and sink them suddenly with fire, like Sodoma and Gomorrah, is the reason that such punishment is too small for such wickedness. Therefore he smites them with spiritual lightning and thunder, as Moses writes, among others Deut. 28, 28: "The LORD shall smite thee with madness, blindness, and raging of the heart." Yes, these are the right weather axes, lightning and thunderbolts, madness, blindness, racing hearts.

Although such terrible, shameful, blasphemous lies especially concern the person of our Lord and his dear mother, they also mean the person of all of us, and want to make us the highest mockery and annoyance by the fact that we honor such a Messiah, so shamefully cursed and scorned by them that they do not consider him worthy to be called by them or any man, let alone remember him 1). So we must repay him by believing in him, praising him, honoring him, serving him.

But I would like to ask: What did the poor man Jesus do to the holy people? If he was a false teacher, as they claim, he was punished for it, received his due, atoned for it with an ignominious death on the cross, paid for it, and did enough. Do no accursed heathen in the whole world so that they would always give a dead, poor man, who has suffered his right for his wrongdoing, for and for more?

persecute and blaspheme. How then do these most holy, blessed Jews think that they do much worse than the accursed Gentiles? Because they confess that Jerusalem is not destroyed, nor that they are imprisoned for sin, because they crucified Jesus. For they will have done right and well, as they did the deceiver his due, and so earned their Messiah. What can the dead man do, who has now endured his judgment, that we Goyim are so foolish and foolish, and honor him for Messiah? Why do they not fight it out with us, convince us of our foolishness, and prove their high, heavenly wisdom? We have never fled from them, and still stand here, defying their holy wisdom; what they can do, let us see. For it behooves such great saints to grovel at angles, and curse and reproach in darkness.

Now, as I began to ask, what has poor Jesus done to the most holy children of Israel, that they cannot stop cursing him after his death, so that he has paid? He may want to be Messiah, which they cannot suffer? Oh no, he is dead, as they themselves crucified, and a dead man cannot be Messiah. Perhaps he prevents them from coming back to their country? Neither; how can a dead man hinder such a thing? What then is the cause? I will tell you: It is the thunder and lightning of Moses, as told above: "God will strike you with madness, blindness and raging of the heart" [Deut. 28, 28.] and the eternal fire, of which the prophets say [Jer. 21, 12.]: "The wrath of God will go out like a fire that no one can extinguish." Likewise John Baptista preaches to them, after Herod had taken away the scepter, saying, "He hath the word-shovel in his hand, and shall sweep his threshing-floor, and gather the wheat into his barns; but the chaff he shall burn with fire that cannot be quenched" [Matt. 3:12.]. Yes, such fire of divine wrath we see in the Jews, how it burns brightly and brightly, more horrible than Sodoma and Gomorrah.

288 Although such devilish lies and blasphemies against the person of Christ and His

1) "his" is missing in the Wittenberger.

The same thing that was done to our dear mother is also done to our person and to the person of all Christians. For they also mean our person, since Christ and Mary are dead, but we Christians are such shameful people that we honor such shameful dead persons, so they also give us our special part in this. First, they complain about us before God that we hold them captive in misery, and fervently ask that God would redeem His holy people and dear children from our power and imprisonment, and call them Edom and Haman, so that they may have hurt us before God, which they mean very bitterly, and here [to] tell too long; for they themselves know that they lie in this, and I would not be ashamed (if it were true) to have Edom for my grandfather, who was the natural son of the most holy woman Rebekah, and the nephew of dear Sarah, Abraham his grandfather, Isaac his right father. And Moses himself commanded, Deut. 23:7, that they should hold Edom for their brother; yea, they hold Moses, as they are Jews.

After that, they teach God and write before Him the way in which He should redeem them. For he is a bad cobbler among the Jews, the highly learned saints, who has no more than a left last to make shoes, namely, that he should strike us Gentiles dead by their Messiah and destroy us all, so that they may have all the land, goods and dominion of the world. And here the weather goes over us with cursing, blaspheming, spitting, so that it is not to be said, wish us that sword and wars, fear and all misfortune come over us cursed Goyim. They practice such cursing publicly every Saturday in their schools and daily in their homes, teaching, training and accustoming their children to it from their youth, so that they may remain bitter, poisonous and evil enemies of the Christians.

From this you can see how they understand and keep the fifth commandment of God, namely, that they are scanty bloodhounds and murderers of all Christendom with full will, now more than 1400 years ago, and would rather be with the deed; as they have often been burned over it, that they were accused of having poisoned water and wells, stolen children, and of having broken and so that they secretly cooled their little tiredness with the blood of Christians. God still does not want to hear their holy repentance of such great saints and dearest children, and the unjust God lets such holy people curse (I wanted to say, pray) so heartily against our Messiah and all Christians for nothing, does not want to see or know them or their pious nature, which is covered with the blood of Messiah and his Christians thickly, thickly, roughly, roughly. For they are much holier than the captive Jews of Babylon, who did not curse, nor shed the children's blood secretly, nor poison the waters; but, as Jeremiah [29:7] taught them, they had to pray for the Babylonians with whom they were captives. Cause that they were not so holy as these Jews are, neither had they so wise rabbis as these Jews have now. For Jeremiah, Daniel, Ezekiel were great fools who taught such things, and should be torn with teeth among these Jews.

Now behold, what a fine, thick, fat lie this is, when they complain that they are captives with us. It is more than 1400 years since Jerusalem was destroyed, and we Christians have been martyred and persecuted by the Jews all over the world for almost 300 years (as said above), so that we would like to complain that they had captured and killed us Christians at that time, as it is the plain truth. In addition, we still do not know today which devil brought them here to our country, we did not bring them to Jerusalem.

Moreover, even now no one holds them, land and roads are open to them, they may go to their country when they want, we would gladly give a gift to be rid of them. For they are a heavy burden to us, like a plague, pestilence and vain misfortune in our country. They have often been forcibly expelled from landmarks (let it be said that we should keep them); they have been expelled from France (which they call Zarpeth from Obadiah, v. 20), which is a fine, peculiar nest. Now recently they are expelled by the dear emperor Carolo from Hispania (which they call Sepharad also from Obadiah), the very best nest. So fine they understand the prophet Obadiah; make of Zarpeth France, and Sepharad Hispania; that rhymes like a cow to the wind.

mill. And this year from the whole Bohemian crown, since they had one of the best nests in Prague. Item, from Regensburg, Magdeburg and more Oertern with my life expelled.

293 Does that mean to hold captive, if one cannot stand one in the country or home? Yes, they hold us Christians captive in our own country; they make us work in the sweat of their noses, win money and goods, meanwhile they sit behind the stove, loafing, pumping 1) and roasting pears; eating, drinking, living gently and well from our earned goods; have captured us and our goods by their cursed usury, mock at it, and spit at us that we work and let them be lazy squires of ours and in ours; are thus our masters, we their servants with our own goods, sweat and work, curse our Lord and us afterwards, for reward and thanks. Should not the devil laugh and dance here, if he can have such a fine paradise with us Christians, that he eats ours through the Jews, his saints, and for reward fills our mouths and noses, mocks and curses God and men for it?

They could not have had such good days in Jerusalem under David and Solomon in your own estate as they have now in our estate, which they steal and rob daily; nor do they complain that we have imprisoned them. Yea, we have caught and hold them captive, as I have caught my calculum, blood sores, and all other sickness or calamity, who must wait as a poor servant, with money and goods and all that I have, would that they were at Jerusalem with the Jews, and whom they would have with them.

295 Since it is certain that we do not hold them captive, why do we deserve such hostility from such noble and great saints? We do not call their wives harlots, as they do Mary, Jesus' mother; we do not call them children of harlots, as they do our Lord Christ; we do not say that they are born in the time of purification, that is, natural fools, as they do our Lord; we do not say that their wives are harlots.

We do not curse them, but wish them well, both physically and spiritually; we shelter them with us, let them eat and drink with us; we do not steal and tear up their children, we do not poison their waters, we do not thirst for their blood. Why do we deserve such cruel anger, envy and hatred of such great holy children of God?

296. It is no different from what we said above from Moses, that God struck them with madness, blindness and a raging heart: so it is also our fault that we do not avenge the great innocent blood, which they shed on our Lord and the Christians three hundred years after the destruction of Jerusalem, and until then on children (which still shines from their eyes and skin), do not put them to death, but let them sit free with us for all their murder, cursing, blaspheming, lying, defiling, Protect and shield their school, houses, body and property, so that we make them lazy and safe and help them to confidently suck our money and property, to mock us, to spit at us, whether they could finally become powerful, and for such great sin beat us all to death, take all our property, as they daily ask and hope. Tell us now if they do not have great cause to be hostile to us cursed goyim, to curse us, and to finally seek our eternal destruction?

From all this we Christians see (for they, the Jews, cannot see it) what a terrible wrath of God has come upon this people and goes on without ceasing, what a fire and blaze burns there, and what those gain who curse Christ and His Christians or are enemies. O dear Christians! Let us take such a terrible example to heart, as St. Paul says in Romans 11:21, and fear God, lest we also fall into such or even worse wrath in the end; but (as we also said above) honor His divine word, and not miss the time of grace, as Mahomet and Pope have already missed it, and have become not much better than the Jews.

What do we Christians want to do with this rejected and damned people of the Jews? It is not too much for us to suffer, since they are with us, and we have to put up with such lies, blasphemies, and

1) The word "pompen" is formed from "pomp". Compare § 281 of this document.

We have to know about their curses so that we do not participate in all their lies, curses and blasphemies. Thus we cannot quench the unquenchable fire of divine wrath (as the prophets speak), nor convert the Jews. We must exercise a sharp mercy with prayer and fear of God, if we could save some from the flame and embers: we must not take revenge, they have vengeance on their necks a thousand times worse than we may wish for them. I will give my faithful advice.

First, set fire to their synagogue or school, and heap earth over what will not burn, and pour it down, so that no man may see a stone or cinder of it forever. And this is to be done in honor of our Lord and Christianity, so that God may see that we are Christians and have not knowingly tolerated or consented to such public lying, cursing and blaspheming of His Son and His Christians. For what we have hitherto tolerated out of ignorance (I did not know it myself), God will forgive us; but now we know it, and should freely protect and shield such a house from under our noses to the Jews, in which they lie, blaspheme, curse, spit upon and defile Christ and us (as was said above), that would be as much as if we did it ourselves, and much worse, as is well known.

300 Moses wrote in Deut. 13:16 that if a city practiced idolatry, it should be completely destroyed by fire and nothing should be kept. And if he lived now, he would be the first to set fire to the Jewish schools and houses. For he commanded harshly, Deut. 4:2 and Deut. 12:32, that they should not change anything from his law, but that they should not pervert his testimony of the Messiah and the right understanding of the law; and Samuel says in 1 Sam. 15:23 that it is idolatry to disobey God. Now the teaching of the Jews is nothing else than vain additions of the rabbis, and idolatry of disobedience against Messiah and laws, that Moses has become completely unrecognizable with them (as said), just as with us under the papacy the Biblia has become unrecognizable. That therefore also Moses half their schools are not to suffer, whom they just as well and it is not necessary that they should have their own free churches for such idolatry.

301 Secondly, that their houses also be broken up and destroyed in the same way. For they do the same inside that they do in their schools. For this they may be put under a roof or in a stable, like the gypsies, so that they may know that they are not masters in our land, as they boast, but in misery and imprisoned, as they cry out and complain about us before God without ceasing.

(302) Third, to take away all their prayer books and Talmudic books, which teach such idolatry, lies, cursing and blasphemy.

Fourthly, that their rabbis be forbidden, life and limb, to teach henceforth. For they have justly lost this office, because they have imprisoned the poor Jews with the saying of Moses, Deut. 17:11, 12, where he commands them to obey their teachers for loss of life and limb, when Moses clearly states what they teach you according to the law of the Lord. The evil-doers ignore this and use the obedience of the poor people for their courage against the law of the Lord, pouring such poison, curses and blasphemy into them. Just as the pope imprisoned us with the saying Matth. 16, 18: "You are Peter" 2c. that we had to believe everything that he lied to us and deceived us out of his devil's head, and did not teach us according to God's word, because he lost the office to teach.

Fifth, that the Jews be completely deprived of escorts and roads, for they have no business in the country, since they are not lords, nor officials, nor merchants, or the like; they shall stay at home. I am told that a rich Jew 1) is now riding in the countryside with twelve horses (he wants to become a kochab) and is overgrowing princes, lords, countryside and people, so that great lords look askance at him. If you princes and lords will not lay the road properly for such usurers, then a rebellion may arise against them, because

1) Here Jonas has the marginal gloss: "Michael Judaeus".

They will learn from this booklet what the Jews are and how one should deal with them and not protect their nature. For you should not and cannot protect them either, because you want to be partaker of all their abominations before God. What good may come of it, let it be known and come to pass. 1)

305. sixth, that they be forbidden to practice usury, which Moses forbade them, when they are not lords in their own land over foreign lands, and that they be deprived of all their goods and jewels of silver and gold, and that they lay them up for safekeeping. And this is the cause: all that they have (as said above) they have stolen and robbed from us by their usury, because they have no other food. Such money is to be used for this purpose (and not otherwise), if a Jew is seriously converted, so that one gives him a hundred two three florins of it before the hand, according to the occasion of the person, so that he may start food for his poor wife and child, and maintain the old or infirm with it, because such evil gained good is cursed, if one does not turn it with God's blessing into good necessary use.

306. but that they boast that Moses permitted or commanded them to usurp the strangers, Deut. 23, 20. (otherwise they have no more letter to pretend for themselves), to this is to be answered: There are two kinds of Jews or Israel. The first are those whom Moses brought out of Egypt into the land of Canaan, as God had commanded him; to them he gave his law, which they were to keep in that same land, no further, and all this until Messiah came. Although it was rather an indulgence than a law, which they should not have needed before, because they had kept Mosiah's law before (which they had never kept). Moreover, they were to do such things to strangers who would not suffer it from them, for they had been subject to them before. But this was a strange wild thing. For they were commonly subject to the strangers, as the books of judges and kings show. But we are not subject to them, but they shall be subject to us. Therefore Their usury is vain theft and robbery against their overlords and against Moses.

The other Jews are the emperor's Jews, not Mosiah's Jews. They began in the days of Pilate the governor in the land of Judah. For when he asked them before his judgment seat, What shall I do with Jesus, who is called Messiah? Then they cried out, Crucify him, crucify him. And he said, Shall I crucify your king? They cried out again, "We have no king but Caesar" [Matth. 27, 22. Joh. 19, 15.]. Such subordinates to the emperor God had not commanded them, they did it by themselves. When the emperor demanded obedience, they resisted and sat against him, not wanting to be imperial. Then he came and visited his subjects and brought them to Jerusalem, scattering them throughout his empire so that they would have to be obedient.

308) Of these are the present rest of the Jews, of whom Moses knows nothing, nor they themselves of him; for they keep no passover 2) or verse in Moses. Now if they want to enjoy Moses' law, they must first come back to the land of Canaan, and Moses' Jews, keeping his commandment, will force Gentiles and strangers among them; there they may then grow as much as the strangers will suffer from them. But because they are in foreign lands under Caesar, and have disobeyed Moses, they shall keep Caesar's law, and not usurp their overlords, until they have obeyed Moses. For Moses' law never went a step beyond the land of Canaan, or out of the nation of Israel; for he was not sent with his law to the Egyptians, Babylonians, or any other nation, but only to the people whom he brought out of Egypt into the land of Canaan, as he himself often declares in the fifth book of Moses, that they should keep such commandments in the land which they would take over Jordan.

309. moreover, because priesthood, worship, principality, of which Moses gave most and almost all, has fallen, now over 1400 years, it is certain that his Law

1) Jenaer and Wittenberger: verkommen. Jonas: *praeveniat*is.

2) i.e. verse division.

The Jews, who had existed at that time, also fell and came to an end. Therefore, these imperial Jews are to be given imperial justice and are not to be allowed to be Mosaic Jews, who have not been any more for more than 1400 years. For they have no land of their own, much less foreign land, where they might grow up according to Mosiah's permission.

310. seventh, that the young strong Jews and Jewesses be given a mallet, an axe, a cart, a spade, a stick, a spindle, and be made to earn their bread by the sweat of their noses, as Adam's children were made to do, Gen 3:19. For it is not fit that they should make us cursed goyim work by the sweat of our noses, and that they, the holy people, should eat it behind the stove with rotten days, feasts and pomps, 1) and thereupon blaspheme that they are lords of the Christians, by the sweat of our noses; but the rotten rogue's leg should be cast out of their backs.

311 But we are concerned that they may harm us in body, wife, child, servants, livestock 2c. If they should serve us or work for us, because it is to be assumed that such noble lords of the world and poisonous bitter worms, accustomed to no work, would not like to humble themselves so highly among the cursed Goyim: so let us remain with the common wisdom of the other nations, as France, Hispania, Bohemia 2c., and reckon with them what they have robbed us of; and thereafter divide amicably, but always drive them out to the land. For, as we have heard, God's wrath is so great against them that gentle mercy only makes them worse and worse, but sharpness does little to improve them. Therefore always away with them.

312 I hear that the Jews give large sums of money and are useful to the rulers. Yes, from what do they give it? Not from their own, but from the property of the lords and subjects, which they steal and rob by usury. And so the lords take from their subjects what the Jews give, that is, the subjects have to give money and allow themselves to be exploited.

for the Jews, so that they remain in the country and can lie, blaspheme, curse and steal confidently and freely. Should the desperate Jews not laugh in their fists that we allow ourselves to be so shamefully fooled and fooled, and give our money so that they may remain in the country, and do all the wickedness, and become rich from our sweat and blood, while we become poor and are sucked dry by them? If it is right that a servant, a guest or a prisoner should give his master or host ten florins a year and steal a thousand in return, the servant and guest will soon be rich and the master and host will soon be a beggar.

313. And if the Jews could give such a sum of their own to the rulers as is not possible, and they should buy protection and protection from us, publicly, freely in their schools, to lie, blaspheme, spit on, curse our Lord Christ so shamefully, and also to wish us all misfortune, that we all might be stabbed and perish with our Haman, emperor, princes, lords, wives and children: That would truly be selling Christ, our Lord, the whole of Christendom, including the whole empire, to us, with wife and children, at a shameful price. How much of a saint would the traitor Judas be esteemed against us? Yes, if every Jew (as much as he is) could give a hundred thousand florins a year, we should not allow them to blaspheme, curse, spit, and run riot so freely against some Christian; it would still be much too cheaply sold. How much more unmistakable it is that we should allow the whole of Christ and all of us to be bought with our own money, to blaspheme and curse the Jews, 2) and to make them rich and our disciples for the reward of it, who also ridiculed us and tickled their courage. This would be quite a joy to the devil and his angels, that they could laugh through their noses as a sow laughs at her piglets, but earn a right wrath before God.

2) The meaning is: that we let ourselves be bought by the Jews with our own money, that they might blaspheme and curse us, and so on.

314. Summa, dear princes and lords who have Jews among them, if such my counsel is not equal to you, make a better one, so that you and we all may be relieved of the unpleasant devilish burden of the Jews, and not become guilty before God and be guilty of all the lies, blaspheming, spitting, cursing, which the raging Jews so freely and wantonly commit against the person of our Lord Jesus Christ, His dear Mother, all Christians, all authorities, and ourselves, not letting them have any protection, shield, escort, or fellowship, nor letting your and your subjects' money and goods serve and help them by usury. We have enough sin of our own upon us before, nor from the papacy, and do much to it daily with all kinds of ingratitude and contempt of his word and all his graces, that it is not necessary to burden us also with these strange, shameful vices of the Jews, and yet give them money and goods. Let us think that we are now fighting daily against the Turk, since we may well expect relief from our own sin and the betterment of our lives. Hereby I will have cleared and excused my conscience, as I have faithfully denounced and warned.

315. And to you, my dear lords and friends, who are pastors and preachers, I hereby faithfully remind you of your office, that you also warn your pastors against their eternal harm, as you well know how to do, namely, that they beware of the Jews and avoid them where they can; Not that they should curse them much, or do them harm personally; for they have cursed and offended themselves too much when they curse the man Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Mary, as they have unfortunately been doing now for over 1400 years. Let the authorities here be with them, as I have now said. But let the authorities do it or not, that each one nevertheless perceives for himself his conscience, and makes him such a definitio or protopoeia of a Jew.

When thou seest or thinkest of a Jew, say thus unto thyself, Behold, the mouth that I see there hath cursed every Saturday my dear Lord Jesus Christ, who redeemed me with his precious blood.

and 1) maledicted and eaten, prayed and cursed before God, that I, my wife and child and all Christians would be stabbed and perish most miserably; would like to do it himself, if he could, so that he would possess our goods, has also perhaps this day fed many times on the earth over the name of Jesus (as they use), that the saliva still hangs in his mouth and beard, where he would have room to spit: And if I should eat, drink or speak with such a devilish mouth, then I would eat and drink myself full of devils out of the bowl or jug, as I would certainly make myself a partaker of all the devils that dwell in the Jews and spit out the precious blood of Christ. God protect me from this.

317. For if they do not believe as we do, we cannot help it, nor force anyone to believe (which is impossible); yet this is to be avoided, that we do not strengthen them in their wanton lying, blaspheming, cursing and profaning, nor with protection, umbrella, food, drink, lodgings, and other neighborly benefits make ourselves partakers of their devilish raging and blustering, first because they boast proudly and shamefully, where we are friendly or of service to them, that God has made them their masters and us their servants, as where a Christian makes their fire on the Sabbath, cooks for them what they want in the inn, for which they curse us, spit at us and blaspheme, as if they were well off, and yet feed on our goods, which they have stolen from us. It is such a desperate, evil, poisoned, devilish thing about these Jews, so that these 1400 years have been and still are our plague, pestilence and all misfortune. Summa, we have real devils in them, that is no different, there is no human heart against us Gentiles. They learn this from their rabbis in the devil's nests of their schools.

In particular, where you are preachers, where there are Jews, diligently persevere with your lords and rulers, that they perform their office as they owe to God, and compel the Jews to work, forbid usury, and control their blasphemy and cursing. For if they punish among us Christians the thieves, robbers, murderers, blasphemers and other vices -

1) "and" is missing in the Wittenberger.

Why should the Jews be devil-free to practice this with us and against us? We suffer more from them than the whales from the Spaniards: the latter take the householder's kitchens, cellars, closets, and bags, curse them, and threaten them with death. The Jews, our guests, do the same to us. We are their landlords; so they rob and suck us dry, lie at our throats, the lazy rogues and idle wretches, drink, eat, have good days in our house, curse in reward our Lord Christ, churches, princes, and all of us, curse and wish us death and all misfortune without ceasing. Think, where do we poor Christians come to this, that we should feed and make rich such lazy, idle people, such useless, wicked, harmful people, such blasphemous enemies of God for nothing, and get nothing in return but their cursing, blaspheming and all the misfortune they can do and wish us? Are we as blind and staring blocks in this matter as the Jews in their unbelief, that we suffer such great tyranny from the unholy rascals, neither seeing nor feeling how they are our nobles, even our furious tyrants, but we are their prisoners and subjects, still complaining that they are our prisoners, mocking us for it, as if we had to suffer it from them.

319. But the lords will not force them, nor will they control their devilish will, that they be driven out to the land, as has been said, and let 1) them be told that they go to their land and goods to Jerusalem, and there lie, curse, blaspheme, spit, murder, steal, robbing, usurping, mocking, and committing all such blasphemous abominations as they do among us, leaving our dominion, land, body and goods, much more our Lord, Messiah, faith and churches, unharmed and untouched by such their diabolical tyrannies and wickednesses. Whether they could use liberties [privilegia], they shall not help; for no one can give liberty to practice such abominations, and all liberties are thereby neglected and lost.

320 If you pastors and preachers (besides me) have issued such faithful warnings, you will be able to do so.

1) Wittenberger: lasse. The reading given by us is confirmed by Jonas.

and neither master nor subject will do anything about it, then let us (as Christ says [Matth. 10, 14.]) shake the dust off our shoes and say: We are innocent of your blood. For I see well, and have often experienced it, how utterly merciful the perverse world is, when it should be cheaply sharp; and again, sharp it is, when it should be merciful, as king Ahab, 1 Kings 20:32. Thus reigneth the prince of this world. So perhaps now they will also want to be merciful over the Jews, the bloodthirsty enemies of our Christian and human name, in order to earn heaven. But that the Jews, with all such diabolical abominations, catch us poor Christians, torment us, torture us, and cause us all heartache, that is to be suffered, and is Christian, well done, especially if there is money which they have stolen and robbed from us.

321 What do we poor preachers want to do? First, let us believe that our Lord Jesus Christ is true, who speaks of such Jews, who did not accept him, but crucified him, such a judgment: You are serpents and devils' children, as his forerunner, John Baptist, also says [Matth. 3, 7], and yet you were his blood friends. Now our rulers and all such merciful saints, who are kind to the Jews, will at least leave us the space to believe Jesus Christ, our Lord, who certainly knows all hearts better than such merciful saints, that these Jews must be serpent-bred and devil's children, that is, who grant us as much good as their father, the devil; 2) We Christians should have long since understood from experience and from the Scriptures what good the devil grants us.

322 I have read and heard many histories of the Jews, which agree with this judgment of Christ, namely, how they poisoned the wells, secretly murdered, stole children, as reported above. Item, that a Jew sent a pot full of blood to another over the field, also by a Christian; item, a barrel of wine, since that was drunk, a dead Jew found in the fast, and the like much.

2) In the old editions: "gan".

And the stealing of children has often (as said above) burned them and made them perish. I know well that they deny these things and all; but it all agrees with the judgment of Christ, that they are poisonous, bitter, vengeful, malicious 1) serpents, assassins and children of devils, who secretly stab and do harm, because they are not able to do it publicly. That is why I would like them to be, since they are not Christians. The Turk and other pagans do not suffer from them what we Christians suffer from poisonous snakes and young devils; they do it to no one but us Christians. This is what I said above, that a Christian has no enemy more poisonous and bitter than the devil, except a Jew, yet no one does so much good, nor suffers so much from anyone, as from such evil devil-children and serpent-breeds.

323 Therefore, whoever desires to harbor and defile such poisonous serpents and young devils, that is, the worst enemies of Christ our Lord and of us all, 2) and to honor them, and desires to toil, rob, plunder, desecrate, spit, curse, and suffer all evil, let these Jews be faithfully commanded to him. If it is not enough, then let him also put him in the mouth, or crawl into their buttocks and worship the same sanctuary, then boast that he has been merciful, has strengthened the devil and his young devil, to blaspheme our dear Lord and the precious blood, so that we Christians are bought, then he is a perfect Christian, full of works of mercy, which Christ will reward him on the last day with the Jews in the eternal hellish fire.

324 Let this be spoken roughly of the gross cursing of the Jews, of which others write much; which also the Jews well understand to mean cursing, as they knowingly mean to curse and blaspheme. Let us also speak of it more subtly and, as Christians, spiritually; thus our Lord Jesus Christ says Matth. 10, 40: "He who receives me receives him who sent me"; Luc. 10, 16: "He who despises you receives him who sent me."

He that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me"; Joh. 15, 23: "He that hateth me hateth my Father also"; Joh. 5, 22: "That they all may honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He who does not honor the Son does not honor the Father who sent Him." 2c.

These are (praise be to God) clear, understandable words, namely that everything that is done in honor or dishonor of the Son is certainly done to God the Father Himself. This cannot be doubted nor suffered by us Christians. Whoever then denies, blasphemes, curses JEsu of Nazareth, Mary, the virgins, the Son, denies, blasphemes, curses also God the Father Himself, who created heaven and earth. This is what the Jews do 2c.

If you say, "Yes, the Jews believe and do not know this, because they do not accept the New Testament," I answer, "The Jews may know or believe this or that, but we Christians know that they publicly blaspheme and curse God the Father when they blaspheme and curse this Jesus. If now or on the last day God will speak to us Christians in this way: Do you hear, you are a Christian and have known that the Jews have blasphemed and cursed my Son and me publicly, but you have given them room and space for it, and have also protected and shielded them, so that they might do it unhindered and unpunished in your country, city and house: tell me, what shall we answer here?"

For that each one for his own person does not believe, omissive et privatim, we must leave to each one on his conscience; but to praise, to sing, to teach, to defend such unbelief publicly and freely in churches and before our noses, eyes and ears, and to blaspheme and curse the right faith, thereby to draw others to himself and to hinder ours, that is far, far different. It will not help us that the Jews do not believe, nor know, nor respect the New Testament, because we know it well, and cannot allow the Jews to profane and curse it in our hearing. Our watching and silence is as much as if we did it ourselves. So the wretched Jews complain to us with their

1) Wittenberger: domestic.

2) fretzen - to feed. Jonas: pascat.

diabolical, blasphemous, abominable sins in our own country.

328 It is not to be said here: We Jews do not ask about the New Testament or the faith of the Christians. They may speak such words in their own country or secretly; in our country and before our ears they must keep silent, or we must do otherwise. They know well, the desperate boys, that the New Testament is a book from our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and they pretend that they do not want to know what the New Testament is. No, companion, it does not apply here what you know or want to know; it applies what you should know and what you are obliged to know. Now not only the Jew, but all the world owes to know that the New Testament of God the Father is the book of His Son JESu Christo. And whoever does not accept nor honor the same book, does not accept nor honor GOD the Father Himself. For it is said, "He who despises me despises my Father" [Luc. 10, 16]. If the Jews do not know this, we Christians know it, as I said.

329 Therefore, just as we cannot suffer the Jews (if we do not want to be condemned with the Jews' sin) to publicly blaspheme and defile God the Father in our hearing, when they blaspheme and defile Jesus our Lord, as he says, "Whoever hates me hates my Father also"; so we also cannot suffer them to speak publicly in our hearing, that they ask nothing about the New Testament, and consider it a lie. Which is just as much as to say, We ask nothing of GOD the Father, and hold him for a liar; because it is GOD the Father's book and word concerning his Son JESu Christo. And it shall not help them, but rather it shall help them not to say that they know not of the book, or that they regard it not. For God's book is to be known. He did not reveal it so that it should not be known or despised; he wants it to be known and no one to be excused from it.

(330) If a king put his only son in his place, and commanded the land to take him for their lord (though he was an heir by nature), and the land gladly received him; but some of them would not take him for their lord.

wanted to oppose it and pretend that they did not know. But the king would give seals, letters and all kinds of testimony that it was his will. But they said they did not want to know or respect it. So the king would have to take them by the head, throw them into the towers and order Master Hansen to teach them how to speak: We would like to know. If not, they would have to stay in the tower forever and leave the others satisfied with their rottenness, who would like to know.

God has also done this. He appointed His Son Jesus Christ in His place in Jerusalem and commanded that homage be paid to Him, Ps. 2:12: "Pay homage to the Son, lest He be angry and you perish. Some of the Jews did not want to know. God gave testimony through many tongues of the apostles, and all kinds of miraculous signs, and led the prophets to witness their sayings; but they did as they still do, standing stiffly, not wanting to know. Then came Master Hans the Romans, and spoiled Jerusalem, and took the boys by the heads, and cast them into the tower of misery, where they are yet, and shall be for ever, or until they say, We would know.

For God did not do this secretly, nor did He act in secret, so that the Jews could excuse themselves, as if they would despise the New Testament without sin. For, as we have heard above, He has given a sure sign through the patriarch Jacob: when the scepter of Judah would fall, they should certainly take care of the Messiah [Deut. 49:10]. Item, when the seventy weeks of Daniel would be over [Dan. 9, 24]. Item, a short time after the built temple Haggai, before the same would be destroyed [Hagg. 2, 7.]. Item, he let them know through Isaiah, when they would hear a voice in the wilderness (that is, a preacher and prophet), who taught: "Repent, the Lord is here, and come himself", they should be sure that Messiah would be there [Is. 40, 3].

333. soon after, he himself comes, teaches, baptizes, and performs unspeakable great miracles, not secretly, but throughout the whole country, that many also said, "He is Messiah" [John 41]; item v. 31: "If Messiah comes, how can he do greater signs?" And they themselves: "What do we do? This man does many miracles; if we let him, the whole world will believe in him" [Joh. 11, 47, 48.], and at the cross: "He has helped others, but cannot help himself" [Matth. 27, 42.]. Yes, indeed, God should allow the circumcised saints not to know all these things, if they alone have overcome from the above four sayings, Jacob's, David's, Daniel's, Haggai's, that Messiah must have come at that time; as also some of their rabbis say that he goes begging in the world and in Rome 2c.

334 About this he warned them that they should not be offended at the person, proclaiming through Zechariah 9:9, 10. He would come to Jerusalem mounted on an ass, miserable and poor, but a king of salvation, who would teach peace, put away chariots, horses, and bows (that is, not rule worldly, as the mad Kochabites, those bloodthirsty Jews, race), and such a poor (yet peaceful, salutary) king would reign as far as the world. This is an exceedingly bright saying, that Messiah should reign without a sword and with peace as a holy king in all the world, so that I am not a little surprised how the devil can be so powerful to persuade a man (let alone a whole nation that boasts of God) otherwise than such a bright text forces him to do.

Furthermore, he faithfully warned them that they should not be angry when they saw that such a great miracle worker and poor king, riding on an ass, would be killed and crucified. For he had previously proclaimed this, Dan. 9, 26. and Isa. 53, 4. ff., "that his servant, of whom the kings would be astonished, must be beaten and miserably slain; but all this because God laid all our sin upon him, and smote him for the sins of us all, but he should give his life for a trespass offering for sin, and pray for sinners, and by his knowledge make many righteous," as the text stands brightly.

336. but outrageous thing has the sun not seen nor heard, neither these 1) blasphemous Jews practice in this saying, which they point to themselves in this misery, of which now is not time to act. Oh, should they be the ones who are beaten for our sins, bear our sins, and make us righteous, and pray for us 2c., 2) as no worse people have ever been, who with their lying, blaspheming, cursing, profanation, idolatry, robbery, usury and all vices weigh us Christians and all people, where they are, down higher before God and the world? To this end, do not pray for us sinners, as the text says, but curse in the worst way, as is proven above from Lyra and Burgensi. But before great idleness and willfulness, the blasphemous evil-doers mock the Scriptures, God and all the world with such insolent glosses as they deserve and are worthy of doing.

After such a crucified king, God first gave the right signs that this Jesus was Messiah. Then the poor, despondent, unlearned, unconsecrated fishermen, who did not know their own language well, stood up and preached with the tongues of all the world, so that all the world, heaven and earth were still amazed; they led the scriptures of the prophets in the right understanding, did such miracles and signs that their sermons were accepted by Jews and Gentiles all over the world, so earnestly that countless people, young and old, let themselves be horribly tortured over it, and now for 1500 years it has lasted until us, and will last until the end of the world.

Since such signs did not move the Jews at that time, what do we hope from these wicked Jews, who now gloriously do not want to know about such stories? Yes, God will allow them to do so, who has so gloriously revealed such things before all the world, that they still today see us Christians preaching and keeping such things, which we have not invented, but have heard from Jerusalem from 1500 years ago, and no enemies nor Gentiles (the Jews in particular) have ever been able to dampen how hard they have opposed it; that it is impossible for them to have known it.

1) Wittenberger: the. Jonas: his.

2) "2c." is missing in the Wittenberger.

is to exist such a thing where it would not be of God.

The Jews themselves, with their fifteen hundred years of misery, must bear witness to this, that it was preached in their ears all over the world, and that it was challenged and proven by much heresy, so that God cannot be blamed as if he had done this secretly or in the dark, or that it never happened to the Jews or to any people. For they have persecuted it 1) all these 1600 years with great care and confidence. The blasphemous Jews still oppose it as shamefully and mockingly as if a drunkard had recently invented it, which they would not be obliged to believe, but would like to blaspheme and curse it freely and safely, and we Christians would have to give them room and place, house and courtyard for it, to protect and shield them, so that they could blaspheme and curse such a word of God confidently and freely, and let our money and goods grow into wages for them.

No, you miserable father of such blasphemous Jews, you infernal devil, it must therefore be said: God has publicly preached to your children, the Jews, with miraculous signs long enough in all the world, now at 1500 years and still, which they have been and still are guilty of obeying, but they have obdurately always contradicted, blasphemed and cursed for and for. Therefore, we Christians are obliged not to suffer their wanton and deliberate blasphemy, as it is said: "He who hates the Son hates the Father" [John 15:23]. For if we suffer them to do so in the place where we are powerful, and protect and handle them, we are eternally condemned with them for their sins and blasphemies, as if they were others, even though we might be as holy in our own persons as the prophets, apostles or angels, quia faciens et consentiens pari poena, perpetrators, robbers, helpers, abusers, and abusers, one is as 2) pious as the other. And it is of no help to us (the Jews much less) that the Jews do not want to know. For we Christians know it, as I have said, and the Jews owe it to us to know it, as they do with us.

1) "it" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) "so" is missing in the Wittenberger.

have heard at the same time for 1500 years, and have seen and heard all kinds of miraculous signs, how such teaching has been established by divine power against all devils and all the world.

Since it is certain (through such a long and powerful preaching in all the world) that "he who dishonors the Son, dishonors the Father", and he who does not have the Son, cannot have the Father [Joh. 5, 22. 1 Joh. 2, 23]. The Jews nevertheless always blaspheme and curse God the Father, the Creator of all of us, for and on behalf of His Son Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Mary (whom He has now transfigured for His Son with preaching and miraculous signs for 1500 years in all the world), against all devils and men's power and art, and still transfigured to the end of the world) blaspheme and curse, calling him Hebel Vorik, that is, not only a liar and false, but the lies and falsehood itself, worse than the 3) devil himself: so we Christians are not to suffer such things, before our ears and freely before our noses, in public synagogues, books and prayers, practiced daily in our own country, houses and government, by any means; or must God lose the Father with His dear Son, who bought us so dearly with His holy blood, with, and for the sake of the Jews, and be eternally lost; then God be for.

342 Accordingly, we Christians should not and must not be joking but very serious about seeking counsel against this and saving our souls from the Jews, that is, from the devil and eternal death. And is that, as said above.

343 First, that their synagogue be burned with fire, and whoever can throw brimstone and pitch; whoever can throw hellish fire would also be good, so that God may see our earnestness and all the world such an example that we have hitherto ignorantly tolerated such a house (in which the Jews have so shamefully blasphemed God, our dear Creator and Father, with His Son), and now have given Him His reward.

344 Secondly, to take away all their books, prayer books, Talmudic books, and the whole Bible, and not to leave them a single page, and on those who were converted. For they need all of this to blaspheme the Son of God, that is, God Himself the Father, Creator of heaven and earth (as has been said), and will never need it otherwise.

3) In the old edition of Walch and in the Erlanger: "der". Jonas: quam contra diabolum ipsum.

Thirdly, that they be forbidden to praise, thank, pray, teach God publicly in our country and in ours, at the loss of life and limb. In their own country they may do so, or wherever they can, so that 1) we Christians may not hear nor know it; for their praise, thanksgiving, prayer and teaching is blasphemy, cursing, idolatry, because their heart and mouth call God the Father Hebel Vorik, as they call His Son, our Lord Jesus. For as they call and honor the Son, so is the Father called and honored. Does it not help them that they use many beautiful words and glorify God's name. For it is said: "You shall not take God's name in vain" [Exodus 20:7], just as it did not help their ancestors to take God's name, yet they called him Baal in the days of the kings of Israel.

346 Fourth, that they be forbidden to call the name of God before our ears, for we cannot in good conscience hear it, nor suffer it, because you blasphemously call the mouth and heart of God's Son Hebel Vorik, and so must also call His Father, who cannot nor will understand it otherwise; just as we Christians cannot understand it otherwise, who must believe that as the Son is called and honored, so also the Father is honored and called. Therefore the mouth of the Jew is not to be held worthy among us Christians, that it should call God in our ears; but whoever hears it from the Jew, that he should report it to the authorities, or throw a saber at him, if he sees him 2) and chase him away. And let no one be merciful or kind in this. For it affects God's honor and the salvation of us all (the Jews as well).

347) And whether they, or 3) someone on their behalf wanted to pretend that they did not mean it that way.

evil, nor would they know that with such blasphemy and cursing they were blaspheming and cursing God the Father; for though they blaspheme Jesus and us Christians, yet they praise and honor God most highly and beautifully: it is said above, as you have heard: If the Jews do not want to know, or pretend to know, we Christians must know. So the Jews are not excused for their ignorance, because God has preached this for 1500 years, that they owe to know this, God also demands this from them. For whoever hears God's word 1500 years and always says: I don't want to know, his ignorance will certainly earn him a bad excuse, that is, a sevenfold guilt.

Yes, they did not know at that time that it was God's word, but now they have heard for 1500 years that it is God's word, and have seen great signs, and have raged against it themselves, even coming to such misery 1500 years later. Well then, let them still hear and believe it, then all things shall be bad; if not, then it is certain that they will not know it eternally, but always want to curse for and for, as their ancestors did these 1500 years; so we Christians (who know) cannot suffer their wanton, eternal ignorance and blasphemy with us, nor take it on our conscience; they may go to their own country, there be ignorant and blaspheme as long as they can, and leave us unburdened with such their abominable sins.

Yes, how shall we do, if we forbid the Jews to burn their synagogue, to praise God, to pray, to teach, to call God's name publicly, 2c., nevertheless they will not let it be done secretly. And because we know that they do it secretly, it is just as much as if they did it publicly. For what is known to be done secretly and tolerated does not mean secretly, and yet our conscience is burdened with it before God. Well then, let us be careful. In my opinion, the point is this: if we are to remain pure and not participate in the blasphemy of the Jews, we must be separated, and they must be expelled from our country; they may think of us in their own land.

1) Wittenberger: "that". Jonas: ut. In the other editions: "da wirs Christen".

2) In the Jenaer, with Walch and in the Erlanger: "them". Jonas: petat caput Judaei.

3) Wittenberger: "vber", which is: over; a misprint.

Fatherland, they must no longer cry out before God about us and lie that we hold them captive, nor must we complain that they weigh us down with their blasphemy and usury. This is the nearest and best counsel that will secure both parties in such a case.

But here they, as they do not like to leave the land (so sour and grievous is this prison, in which they are our tyrants and young lords), will confidently deny everything and anything, and also offer money enough to the rulers, if they want to stay. But woe to those who take such money, and cursed be such money, which they have also cursedly stolen from us by usury. For they deny as much as they lie, and where they can secretly curse, poison, or harm us Christians, they make no conscience of it. If they are apprehended or otherwise accused, they may confidently deny it, even unto death, because they do not esteem us worthy of confessing the truth to, since the holy children of God certainly consider it that whatever evil they can curse and do to us, they do a great service to God by it. Yes, if they could do to us what we can do to them, none of us would have to live an hour. But because they are not able to do it publicly, they still remain in our hearts our daily murderers and bloodthirsty enemies. This is proven by their prayers and cursing, and by so many stories about how they tortured children and practiced all kinds of vices, and how they were often burned and driven out.

351 Therefore I believe that they speak and do much evil secretly, neither the. They do not write the Histories and others about them, but they rely on denial and their money. But even if they could deny everything, they cannot deny that they curse us Christians publicly, not because of our evil life, but because we consider Jesus to be the Messiah, and that they must be imprisoned with us, knowing full well that they are lying about it, and that they rather keep us imprisoned in our country by their usury, but that everyone would like to be rid of them. But because they curse us, they also curse our Lord. If they curse our Lord, they also curse God the Father, Creator.

Heaven and earth; that therefore their denial can help them nothing. They are overcome only by cursing, that one must believe everything that is written evil of them; they certainly do it more and worse, neither we know nor experience. For Christ doth not deny nor confess, who judgeth them serpents and devils' children, that is, his and all his murderers and enemies, where they can. I also hear miracles, how they take revenge on Christians in Turkey, where they have room, and cool their devilish little mouths; which is to be believed, because they are such devils with us, since they are not overlords.

If I had power over the Jews, as our princes and cities have, I would play this serious game with their lying mouths. They have a lie, so that they do great harm to their children and common men, and disgracefully denigrate our faith; namely, they blame us and lie to us among their own, that we Christians worship more than one God; there 1) is no measure nor number of boasting and pride. Thus they hold their people captive, as they alone are the people who worship no more than one God before all the heathen. Oh how certain they are in this matter of theirs!

Whether they know that they do us wrong in this, and lie as desperate, wanton evil-doers; whether they have heard from all Christians for 1500 years, and still hear that we say no to them: nor do they stop their ears like serpents, and knowingly will not hear us, but as they lie and spit upon us, so it must be right with their people. Even if they read in our writings that we, like Moses 5 Mos. 6, 4. says: "Hear, Israel, our God is one Lord", that we thus confess, publicly and secretly, with hearts, tongues, writings, life and death, that there is no more than one God, of whom Moses writes there, and the Jews themselves call; whether they know such (I say), hear such, read such from us, now at 1500 years, it does not help to deny the -

1) Wittenberger: das. Jonas: ibi.

Nor must their lies be right, and we Christians be defiled by them, that we worship many gods.

354 Therefore, if I had power over them, I would gather their scholars and their best, and charge them, with the loss of their tongues, to come out from behind their necks, that within eight days they should convict and convince us Christians, and thus make true this blasphemous lie against us, namely, that we worship more than the right one God. If they could do that, we would all become Jews one day and circumcise ourselves; if not, they should await their deserved reward for such a shameful, wanton, harmful, poisonous lie. For we, praise God, are not so much ducks, logs or stones as the highly knowledgeable rabbis (nonsensical fools) regard us, that we should not know that One God and many gods cannot be believed with truth at the same time.

But the fact that we believe that there are three persons in the one, eternal Godhead does not prove that we believe more than one God, neither Jew nor devil. If the Jews want to pretend that they cannot understand how three persons are one God, why do they deny, condemn and curse their blasphemous lying mouth that does not understand? Such a mouth should be punished in two ways: first, it should confess that it does not understand; second, it should blaspheme that it does not understand. Why do they not ask before? Yes, why have they heard it 1500 years and not wanted to learn nor understand? Therefore such ignorance cannot help nor excuse them, nor us Christians, if we suffer it longer from them, but must force them (as said) to make such blasphemous lies about us true, or suffer their right because of it. For he who in this article idolatrously beseeches and blasphemes us, beseeches and blasphemes Christ, that is, God himself, as an idol, from whom we have learned and received it as his eternal word and truth, confirmed, known and taught with signs and sounds for 1500 years.

No man has ever been born, nor will ever be born, who would want to be born.

They do not understand how leaves come out of wood or trees, and grass out of stone or earth, nor some creatures how they are created. And these insolent, blind, obstinate liars want to judge and know how it is done apart from and above the creature in the hidden, incomprehensible, inscrutable and eternal essence of God, when we hardly and with weak faith grasp what is revealed to us in the dark word; they fall into such terrible blasphemy that they call our faith idolatrous, that is, they call God himself an idol and blaspheme. For we are sure of our faith and doctrine, and we ourselves also owe it to know, as we have now heard for 1500 years that it is through Jesus Christ, of God and from God.

If the coarse people had been a little more careful and said: The Christians worship one God and not many gods, and we lie and do them wrong by saying that they worship more than one God, although they believe in three persons in one Godhead, which we do not understand, they must let their mind rule 2c., that would be spoken with reason. But now they fall into 1) the devil's name, like filthy swine into the trough, blaspheming and defiling, which they neither know nor want to understand. Quickly therefore: We Jews do not understand it and do not want to understand it, therefore it must be unjust and idolatrous.

But it is the people, to whom God has always had to be not God, but a liar in all the prophets and apostles, as much as he had them preach. Therefore, again, they must not be his people, no matter how much they teach, cry out and pray. They do not hear him, so again he does not hear them, as the 18th Psalm, v. 27. says: "With the perverse you consort." The wrath of God has come upon them, which I do not like to think about, and I have not been able to write this book happily, so that I have had to, now with anger, now with mockery against the Jews, tear the terrible look out of my eyes, and it grieves me that I had to mention their terrible blasphemous words about our Lord and his dear mother, which we Christians do not like to hear at all; and I understand well what St. Paul means Rom. 10, 1.1) that his heart is grieved when he thinks of them; which I consider to be the case for every Christian who thinks of them seriously, not because of the temporal misfortune and misery about which they, the Jews, complain, but because they are given to blaspheme, to curse, to spit at God Himself and all that is God's, to their eternal condemnation, and yet do not want to hear or know such things, but do them as out of a zeal for God. O God, Heavenly Father, turn and let your wrath on them be enough and be an end, for the sake of your dear Son, amen.

1) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer and Erlanger: "herein des". Jonas: irruunt Satanico impetu.

I wish and ask our overlords, who have Jews among them, that they would exercise a sharp mercy against these wretched people, as I said above, if it would help a little (although it is unfortunate), as the faithful physicians do, when the holy fire 2) has come into the legs, they proceed with ruthlessness and cut, saw, burn off flesh, veins, bone and marrow. So also do here, burn their synagogues, forbid all that I have said above, force them to work, and deal with them according to all unmercifulness; as Moses did in the wilderness, and slew three thousand, lest the whole multitude perish. They truly do not know what they are doing, nor do they want to know, hear or learn, like the possessed people. Therefore, no mercy can be shown here to strengthen them in their nature. If that does not help, we must chase them out like mad dogs, so that we do not deserve God's wrath with them and be condemned, being partakers of their abominable blasphemy and all vices. I have done my part; let each one see how he does his part. I am pardoned.

The fourth part of this book, what a difference between the Christians and Jews Messiah, and what both people at her Messia search. 3)

I will say this for myself: If God would not give me another Messiah than the one the Jews desire and hope for, I would much, much rather be a sow than a man. I will tell you this for a good reason: The Jews do not desire more from their Messiah than that he should be a Kochab and worldly king, who kills us Christians, divides the world among the Jews and makes them lords, and finally also dies, like other kings, his children after him also. For thus saith a Rabbi, Thou shalt not suppose that in the days of Messiah things shall be different from those which were made in the beginning of the world, 2c, that is, there will be days, night, year, moons, summer, winter, sowing, reaping, childbearing and dying, eating, drinking, sleeping, watching, 5) threshing and casting out, and everything will go as it goes now, without the Jews being masters, having all the gold, goods, joy and pleasure of the world, but we Christians must be their servants; However, as Mahomet also thought and taught, who kills us Christians (as the Jews would gladly do) and takes land, goods, pleasure and joy, and if he were a Jew, not an Ishmaelite, the Jews would have long since accepted him as Messiah, or made him Kochab.

361 If I had all this, or could now become the Turkish emperor, or the Messiah, as the Jews hope, myself, I would rather become a sow. For what use would all this be to me if I could not be sure of it for an hour? Nevertheless, the terrible burden and plague of all men, death, would remain upon me, from which I would not be safe, would fear it every moment, would tremble before hell and God's wrath.

3) This superscription is found in the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

4) i. e. to say goodbye.

5) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: grow. Jonas did not translate this, but says: dormire etc..

1) Wittenberger: thut.

2) The holy fire, that is, the red run or the rose. Jonas has not translated this, but says: in morbis gravioribus.

and lift, and that all this should know no end, but should wait eternally; as the tyrant Dionysius showed such fine to one who praised him blessedly, he set him over a table, splendidly dressed, over him he hung a mere sword on a silken thread, under him a fiery blaze, and said: Eat, be merry 2c. Likewise would be the joy of this Messiah also. And I know that he who has ever felt the terror or burden of death would gladly be a sow for it, before he would ever bear such for and for.

For a sow lies in her downy feather bed on the street or dung, rests securely, snores softly, sleeps sweetly, fears no king nor lord, no death nor hell, no devil nor God's wrath, lives so completely without worry that she does not even think where the little ones are. And if the Turkish emperor were to march along with all power and wrath, she should be so proud that she would not stir a bristle for his sake; if one were to urge her on, she should probably crown herself and (if she could speak) say: "Behold, how you rage, you fool; you do not have the tenth part as well as I do, and never live an hour as safely, gently and quietly as I always live for and for, if you were still ten times as great and rich. Summa, she remembers no dying, is vain safe gentle life with her.

When the butcher comes upon her, she thinks that a wood or a stone is holding her up; she does not think of dying until the moment she is dead; she has not felt death for a moment, neither before, nor in death, nor after, but has felt vain and eternal life. No king, nor the Jew Messiah himself, will do this to her, nor any man, no matter how wise, high, rich, holy and powerful he is. She has not eaten of the apple that taught us wretched men in paradise the difference between good and evil.

What should the Jew Messiah do for me? If he could not help me, a poor man, against this great horrible fault and damage, and could not make my life the tenth part as good as the sow has? I would say: Dear Lord God, keep your Messiah, or give it to whoever wants it, but make me a sow for it. For it is better to be a living sow than an eternal one.

dying man, yes, as Christ says: "It would be better for man that he had never been born" [Matth. 26, 24.].

But if I had such a Messiah, who could heal this damage, so that I would not have to fear death, would be sure of life always and forever, could strike a cliff against the devil and hell, and would no longer have to tremble before the wrath of God, my heart would leap for joy and become drunk with vain delight; a fire of love for God would be kindled, praise and thanksgiving would never cease. If he did not give me gold, silver and other riches after that, all the world would be paradise to me, even if I should live in prison.

We Christians have such a Messiah and thank God, the Father of all mercy, with the full exuberant joy of our hearts, happily and gladly forgetting all the suffering and harm that the devil inflicted on us in paradise. For he has been amply atoned for and repaid through this Messiah. So the apostles sang and praised before such joys in dungeons and all misfortunes, also young maidens, as Agatha, Lucia 2c. For this the wretched Jews, who did not want to have this Messiah, have languished and become corrupt in the fear of their hearts, worries, citations, anger, impatience, malice, blasphemy and cursing, as Isaiah, Cap. 65, 14. 15. says: "Behold, my servants shall shout for good cheer; but you shall cry out for sorrow of heart, and howl for mourning, and leave your name for an oath to my chosen ones. And the LORD shall kill you, and call his servants by another name." Item v. 1. 2.: "I am sought by them that ask not for me; I am found by them that sought me not: and unto the heathen that called not on my name (that is, that were not my people) I say, Here am I, here am I! For I have stretched out my hand all day long to the people who would not listen" 2c.

367. Yes, we have such a Messiah, who speaks to us like this, Joh. 11, 25: "I am the resurrection and the life; he who believes in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die"; and Joh. 8, 51:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that keepeth my word shall never see death." After such Messiah the Jews and Turks ask nothing. And what is he to them? They must have one from the land of the sleeping monkeys to fill their stinking bellies, and die with them like a cow or a dog.

Nor can they be anything against death, for they themselves are holy enough to come before God with their repentance and piety, to obtain such and all things. But the Christians are such fools and pusillanimous rascals, who fear God so much, who esteem their sin and His wrath so highly, that they do not dare to appear before the eyes of His divine majesty without a mediator or messiah to represent them and offer Himself on their behalf. But the Jews are holy and bold heroes and knights, and are allowed to appear before God even without a mediator or messiah, and to ask and obtain everything they desire, so that the angels and God Himself must of course be pleased when a Jew humbles himself so highly that he wants to pray; then the angels must sit in prayer and place God's crown on his divine head; as we see that this has happened 1500 years ago. So high does God think of the noble blood and circumcised saint, that they can call his son Hebel Vorik.

369 Further, since we senseless, pusillanimous Christians and cursed goyim think so highly of our Messiah that he must deliver us from death by himself without our holiness, we wretched people fall into such great, terrible blindness that we believe he does not need a sword or worldly power to do so. For we cannot understand how God's wrath, sin, death and hell can be driven away with the sword, since we see that from the world until now death has not asked for the sword, all emperors, kings, and whoever wielded the sword has been eaten as well as the most miserable infant 1) in the cradle.

The great deceivers, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and all the prophets, who charm us mad goyim, do us great harm.

1) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: child. Jonas: infantulum.

With their false teaching, when they say that the kingdom of Messiah shall not have a sword. Oh, that the holy rabbis and chivalrous, bold heroes of the Jews would come to our aid and help us out of these terrible errors, since Isaiah 2:2. prophesies of Messiah, how "the Gentiles shall run to the house and mountain of the Lord", and want to be taught (no doubt not with the sword, otherwise they would not run, and probably remain outside) and says v. 4: "He (Messiah) will judge among the Gentiles, and punish many nations. 2) Then they will turn their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. For no nation shall lift up a sword against another, neither shall they learn to fight any more."

In the same way he does magic with us poor Goyim also Isaiah 11, 9: "Nowhere will one perish on my holy mountain, for the land is full of the knowledge of the Lord". Here we poor blind goyim understand: "Knowledge of the Lord", not a sword, but the teaching, by which one learns to know God, as above Isaiah 2. is also said before teaching, which the Gentiles are to follow. For knowledge must not come by the sword, but by teaching and hearing, as we foolish goyim think. And Isa. 53, 11: "By his knowledge he will make many righteous", that is, by teaching, hearing and believing in him; what else can his knowledge mean? Summa, to know Messiah must come through preaching.

372 See the work before your eyes. The apostles did not use swords or spears, but only tongues; and this has been done throughout the world for 1500 years by all bishops, pastors and preachers, and is still going on. See whether the priest wields a sword or a spear when he goes into the church, preaches, baptizes, administers the sacrament, binds and loosens sins, controls the wicked, comforts the pious, and teaches, feeds and corrects everyone's soul. Does he not do all this with the tongue or word alone? In the same way, the people do not bring a sword or a spear to such an office, but only their ears.

2) In the German editions: "among many peoples". Jonas: multos populos; likewise the German Bible.

373 Then behold the miraculous signs. The Roman Empire and all the world were full of idols, which the heathen held fast; the devil was mighty, and resisted confidently; yet the tongue alone, without a sword, cleansed the whole world from all the same idols, against all swords; it also cast out innumerable devils, raised the dead, healed all kinds of sick people, and performed and rained down miracles, after which it purged all heresy and error, as it still does daily before our eyes. And, which is the greatest of all, forgives and cancels all sin, makes happy, peaceful, patient hearts, devours death, closes hell, opens heaven, gives eternal life. And who can tell all the good that God's Word works, Summa, making God's children and heirs of the Kingdom of Heaven all those who hear and believe it? Does not this mean a kingdom, power, might, dominion, glory? Yes, indeed, a comforting kingdom, and the right Chendath of all the Gentiles. And I should desire or accept for such kingdom a bloodthirsty Kochab with the Jews ? Marriage and I would rather be a sow than a man (as I said).

374 All the writings of the prophets rhyme very finely with this understanding, that the nations have fallen to Shiloh (as Jacob says Gen 49:10), both of Jews and Gentiles, after the scepter was taken away from Judah; item, the seventy weeks of Daniel completed; item, the temple of Haggai destroyed, and David's house and throne remained until then, and must remain forever. Again, after the Jews (so God rejected) wanton denial, lying and cursing; none of which can be understood, much less fulfilled.

First of all, speaking of the saying of Jacob, Genesis 49:10, we have heard above how the Jews have invented lazy, unrhymed fables about it, and yet have not hit anything certain. But if we confess our Lord Jesus and let him be the Shiloh or Messiah, he sends, gives, rhymes, and everything meets in the finest and funniest way. For in the days of Herod, when the scepter was taken away from Judah, he was quickly there, and began his regiment of peace, without a sword (as Isaiah and Zachariah prophesy), and all the people fell to him.

Peoples, both Jews and Gentiles, so that even in one day at Jerusalem three thousand souls became believers, and many of the priesthood and princes of the people came, as St. Lucas writes Apost. 2, 41 and 4, 4.

376 And from the time that Jesus rose from the dead, that is, from the eighteenth year of Tiberius the Emperor to the eighteenth year of Hadrian the Emperor, who waged the other and last battle against the Jews, defeated Kochab, and drove the Jews out of their land completely and purely, that is, for more than a hundred years, there have always been bishops in Jerusalem from the tribe of the children of Israel, whom 1) our Eusebius lib. 4, Eccl. hist. cap. 5; see St. James the Apostle and count fifteen of them, all of whom preached the gospel with great diligence, performed miracles, and lived holy lives, so that they converted many thousands of Jews and children of Israel to their promised and manifested Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth; without what is still converted by St. Paul, other apostles, and their disciples outside the country, scattered among the Gentiles, together with the Gentiles. Although the other part, the blind, stubborn, of these present Jewish fathers, raged, raged, shed much blood of their own tribe, both in and out of the country among the Gentiles, as is also said above about the Kochab, without ceasing and without 2) stopping.

377 Since Hadrian had driven the Jews out of the country, bishops had to be taken at Jerusalem from the Gentiles who had become Christians, because no more Jews were found in the country, nor were they suffering, because of Kochab and his rebellious Jews, from whom the Romans could have no peace. So the other pious, converted Jews, scattered among the Gentiles, converted many of the children of Israel, as we see in St. Paul's Epistles and Histories; but besides this, they always suffered persecution from the Kochabites in all places, so that the pious children of Israel had no worse enemies than their own blood friends; as they still have, where they are converted.

1) In the editions: "which they". Jonas: quos.

2) "without" is missing in the Miltenberger.

378 To such pious converted children of Israel also the heathen of all the world smote, and did it with such multitudes and with such earnestness, that they left over not only their idols and their own wisdom, but also wife and child, friends, goods and honor, life and limb; suffered all that the devil and all other heathen, even the raging Jews, could devise. They did not seek the food, nor the gold, the silver, the goods, the dominion, the land or the people, but the eternal, and another than this life; they were gladly poor and miserable, but joyful and confident; not bitter nor revengeful, but kind and merciful; they prayed for their enemies, and did many and great miracles. This has endured from that time to us who are now, and will endure to the end of the world.

Now it is a great and strange thing that the Gentiles of all the world, without sword and compulsion, for no temporal gain, gladly and willingly accepted a poor man of the Jews, whom they themselves, his own people, had crucified, condemned, cursed, persecuted without ceasing, for the right Messiah, so much for his sake and suffered, forsaking all idolatry, only that they might live with him forever. And now this has been granted for 1500 years; no false worship has ever stood so long, nor all the world suffered so much over it, or held so firmly to it. And this is probably one of the greatest signs, that no other God has ever endured such hard resistance as this Messiah, against whom alone all other gods and nations raged, and could well be one among themselves, how diverse and unequal they were. Whom this strange miracle does not move, it serves him right to remain blind or to become a damned Jew.

380 We Christians see that this work is in accordance with the saying of Jacob, Genesis 49: "The nations will obey Shiloh or Messiah (when the scepter of Judah has fallen). The work is there before our eyes, which fulfilled this saying, that the nations, that is, not only the Jews, but also the Gentiles, are together and in one accord obedient to this Shiloh, and one people, that is,

Christians. No other can be given nor conceived, to whom the saying of Jacob rhymes and applies so finely, as this is our dear Lord Jesus. And there must have been one from the time after the scepter, or the Holy Spirit must have lied through the holy patriarch Jacob, and God must have forgotten his promise. This say the devil, and who wants to be a damned Jew.

381 Thus also the saying of the eternal house and throne of David [2 Sam. 7, 13. 16.] rhymes with no one but this our Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth. For after the kings of the tribe of Judah since the time of Herod there is no son of David to be thought of who sat on his throne, and still sits to keep his throne forever; as it should be, and still must be, because God promised it with an oath. But when this son of David had risen from the dead, many, many thousands of the children of Israel, both at Jerusalem and in all the world, fell to him and accepted him as their king and Messiah, as the right seed of Abrahah and her blood; these were, and still are, the house, kingdom and throne of David. For they are the descendants of the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abrahah, over whom David was king.

382 But that they are dead and buried, it is not so; they are yet before him his kingdom and his people. To us and to the world they are dead, but to him they are alive and not dead. Whether the blind Jews know not this, it is right. For he that is blind shall see nothing everywhere. But we Christians know that he says, Joh. 8, 56. Matth. 22, 32.: "God is not God of the dead, but God of the living", that is, Abraham lives; item, Joh. 11, 26.: "He who believes in me, though he die, yet shall he live." So David's house and throne stand firm, and he has a son sitting on it forever, who will never die, nor let die all who are in his kingdom, and accept him as king with true faith. This means the saying is fulfilled: "David's throne shall be forever." Let all the devils and the Jews and the Turks, and those who will not give, give one son of David or more,

On whom this saying of the house of David rhymes so finely and sweetly, is from the time of Herod, so let us praise them.

383 To such a kingdom and throne of David also belong all of us Gentiles, who have accepted such a Messiah and Son of David for a king with the same faith, and still accept him until the end of the world and for eternity. As Jacob's saying, Gen 49:10, says, "The nations will obey him," that is, not one people alone, as the children of Israel are, but what else is also called nations. And before that Gen. 22, 18. "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." In this saying is the word Goyim, which is commonly understood in the Scriptures of the Gentiles, without, where the Jews are also thus called by the prophets almost contemptuously. And the summa is: the blessing of God shall not only remain on his blood descendants through the seed of Abraham, but shall also be spread among all the Gentiles; therefore God himself calls Abraham "father of many Gentiles", Gen. 17, 5. There are many more sayings in the Scriptures.

384 But that the Scripture calls such a kingdom "David's throne," and the king Messiah "Abraham's seed," is the reason that such a kingdom of David and king Messiah did not come from us Gentiles to the children of Abraham and Israel, but from the children of Abraham and Israel to us Gentiles, as the Lord himself says John 4:22: "Salvation came from the Jews. And even though we all come from Adam of the same birth, all other nations are set apart, and only Abraham's seed is chosen, from whom the Messiah should come. After Abraham only Isaac, after Isaac only Jacob, after Jacob only Judah, after Judah only David; the other brothers aside, any time, not chosen to the line, from which Messiah should come. But all and all was done for Messiah's sake. Therefore the whole seed of Abraham, especially those who believed in such Messiah, are highly honored 1) by God, as St. Paul Apost. 13, 17.

says: "God has exalted this people". For it must be a great honor and glory to be able to boast that he is the Messiah's cousin and blood friend; and the closer, the higher.

But so far that such glory does not grow from the reason that Abraham's and his descendants' blood was worthy of such honors, for that would be to spoil it all for the reason, but only from the reason that God, out of pure grace and mercy, chose Abraham's flesh and blood for this, since it would have deserved otherwise, and other flesh would have known how to find its equal. 2) The same is true for us Gentiles. Just as we Gentiles are very highly honored to have been made partakers of the Messiah and Kingdom and to enjoy the blessings promised in Abraham's seed. But if we wanted to boast as if we were worthy of it, and did not want to recognize ourselves as having been blessed by mere grace, so that God alone might have the glory, then all would be spoiled and lost. It is said in 1 Cor. 4:7: "What do you have that you have not received? But if thou hast received it, why dost thou boast? Just as if you were the man who had not received it."

386 Therefore the dear Son of David, Jesus Christ, is also our King and Messiah, and we boast of his kingdom and people as well as David himself and all the children of Israel and Abraham. For we know that he is set over the living and the dead as Lord, King and Judge. "If we live, we live unto him; if we die, we die unto him," that is, we must live even after death, as we have now heard St. Paul preach Rom. 14:8. And look for no bloodthirsty Kochab in him, but the true Messiah, who is able to give life and salvation. That means a son of David, sitting on his throne for eternity, of which the blind Jews and Turks know nothing at all. May God have mercy on them, as He has done and will do for us, amen.

387 Therefore, there can be no Messiah to whom the saying Dan. 9. rhymes,

1) "are" is missing in the Jenaer, in Walch and in the Erlanger.

2) "would have" is missing in the Jenaer, in Walch and in the Erlanger.

For this JEsu of Nazareth alone, and the devil with all For whosoever believeth in him is righteous for ever, and his angels and Jews should become mad and foolish. For all his sins are eternally sealed unto him, made an how foul the lie of the Jews was from the king Cores and atonement for, forgiven him: as the New Testament Agrippa, is heard above. But as the angel Gabriel says abundantly sheweth unto us, especially St. John, St. there, so it came to pass, and so we see the work before Peter, and St. Paul. It is no longer said: "He who offers at our eyes. "Seventy weeks (saith he) are determined upon Jerusalem the trespass offering, the sin offering and other thy people, and upon thy holy city." He does not call the sacrifices, is justified or has atoned for sin; but it is said: city by its name, Jerusalem; but bad: "thy holy city," "He who believes and is baptized is blessed; he who does neither, God's people, but bad: "thy people." For this not believe is condemned" [Marc. 16, 16.], he may not run people's and this city's holiness should now be over, and to Jerusalem, but Jerusalem has come to him, wherever with the seventy weeks have come to an end, but a new he wants in the whole world.

people, a new Jerusalem, and another holiness should come, since one would not have to atone for sin annually by sacrifice, worship and holiness in the temple, and yet could never become righteous or thoroughly holy, because every year atonement had to be repeated and sought through sacrifice.

The Messiah was supposed to bring eternal righteousness, to seal up iniquity, to control transgression, to make atonement for sin, to fulfill the prophecies and visions 2c. Now that sin is eternally gone and eternal righteousness is here, there is no need for sacrifice for sin or for righteousness. Why would one sacrifice for sin when it is no more? Why would one seek righteousness through worship when it is already there? But if sacrifice and worship are no longer necessary, why should the priests and the temple? if priests and temple are no longer necessary, why should such a people and city be served by them? There must become another people and city, which may not have such priests, temples, sacrifices and services; or must the useless temple and services of priests and sacrifices become desolate and futile, as the seventy weeks give the final judgment and last end, with city and temple, together with priests, sacrifices and services.

389. Such a new people and new Jerusalem is now the Christian church, gathered from Jews and Gentiles, who know that through Jesus Christ sin has been purged away, all prophecy fulfilled, eternal righteousness established.

390 David also proclaimed this in Ps. 40:7 ff: "Sacrifices and grain offerings are not pleasing to you, but you have opened my ears (that is, the ears of the world, that they may hear and believe, and thus be saved without sacrifice, temple or priest). You do not want burnt offerings or sin offerings. Then said I, Behold, I come, in the book is written of me; thy will, O GOD, will I gladly do. "2c. Yes, this is the Messiah who brought righteousness by his will and obedience; such is the will of the book of Moses and of all the prophets. So also here Gabriel says that the sacrifices shall not do, and says: Messiah shall be killed, and have nothing. What will he have nothing of? Ask what he is talking about: He speaks with Daniel of his people, and of his holy city; of which he shall have nothing, that with him and in him of that holiness shall be nothing: as Ps. 16:4 saith also, I will not drink their libation with their blood, neither will I put their name in my mouth."

391 Thus says Isaiah 33:24: "The people that shall dwell in the new Jerusalem shall be called, Nesu owon" [xxxxxx] Ievatus peccato, a people of forgiveness of all sins; as also Jeremiah 32:40. promises another new covenant, wherein Moses shall not reign with his covenant; but "I will (saith he) be merciful to their sin, and will never remember it." Yes, this is a covenant of grace, of forgiveness, of remission of all sins forever. This cannot be done by the sword, as the bloodthirsty Kochabites desire; but with true grace through the slain Messiah in the unworthy world, to eternal righteousness and blessedness, as Gabriel says here.

392 But the saying is too rich (as was said above), and the whole New Testament is briefly contained in it; therefore it takes more time and space to cut it out. Now it is enough that we are sure that it is impossible to understand it from another Messiah or king than from our Lord Jesus Christ 1) of Nazareth, because also at the same time in the last week no other Messiah is killed than this one, and Daniel must have a killed Messiah at the same time, as his words stand brightly there.

393 Finally, the saying Haggai does not rhyme with any other. For there is no one to be seen from the time of Haggai, who would be called with the slightest appearance "Chemdath of all the Gentiles", pleasure or comfort, without this Jesus Christ alone. In him the Gentiles have had their comfort, joy and pleasure for 1500 years, as the work is still before our eyes, and the Jews themselves 2) prove with their cursing until now. For why do they curse us? Only because we have not seen this Jesus, the true Messiah, our own.

1) "Christo" is missing in the Wittenberg and the Erlanger.

2) Wittenberger: still himself.

Comfort, joy and pleasure, confess, boast and praise, from whom we will not be torn nor parted, neither love nor sorrow, but live and die in him and over him confidently and willingly. And the more the Jews, Turks, and all enemies blaspheme and revile him, the more firmly we hold to him, and the dearer he has us, as he says, "Blessed are ye when ye are persecuted and reviled for my sake; be ye glad, your reward is great in heaven" [Matt. 5:11, 12.]. To Him be praise and thanksgiving, honor and glory, together with the Father and the Holy Spirit, one, true, right God, amen.

So much writing, dear sir and good friend, you have forced me to do with your booklet, as a Jew proves his art against an absent Christian in conversation. He should not do it to me at present, praise God. So also in this (I hope) a Christian, who otherwise has no desire to become a Jew, has so much that he can not only well ward off the blind poisonous Jews, but must also become hostile to the Jews' malice, lies, cursing, and grasp that their faith is not only false, but that they are certainly possessed with all devils. Christ, our dear Lord, mercifully convert them and keep us firm and immovable in his knowledge, which is eternal life, amen.

52. D. Martin Luther's writing of the Shem Hamphoras and of the lineage of Christ, Matth. 1. *)

March 1543.

Doctor Martinus Luther.

(1) In the next booklet I promised that I would run down what the frenzied, wretched Jews lie and blaspheme about their Shem Hamphorah, as it writes

Purchetus in his book, called Victoria. This is what I want to have done here, in honor of our faith and against the devil's lies of the Jews, so that those who want to become Jews may also see what beautiful articles they have written.

*This writing appeared, about March 1543 (because on March 7 Luther wrote to Justus Jonas that he had finished it), with Georg Rau (Rhaw) in Wittenberg and was printed by him again in the same year. Then in 1544 by Nickel Schirlentz in Wittenberg. In the collections it is found: in the Wittenberger (1556), vol. V, p. 509b; in the Jenaer (1562), vol. VIII, p. 108b; in the Altenburger, vol. VIII, p. 277; in ver Leipziger, vol. XXI, p. 614 and in the Erlanger, vol. 32, p. 275. It is also printed in Georgii Nigrini "Judenfeind", Frankfurt am Main, 1605. The Erlanger gives the text according to the latter original edition by Nickel Schirlentz. We share it with you, comparing the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

must believe and hold with the damned Jews. For as I state in that booklet, my opinion is not to write against the Jews, as if I hoped to convert them, therefore I did not want to call the same book "against the Jews", but, "about the Jews and their lies", that we Germans historically would also like to know what a Jew is, to warn our Christians against them, as against the devils themselves, to strengthen and honor our faith; not to convert the Jews, which is just as possible as to convert the devil.

(2) For as we must teach and write of the devil, hell, death, and sin, what they are and do, not that we would make of the devil an angel, of hell a heaven, of death a life, of sin holiness, which is impossible; but that we would beware of them: so also I write of the Jews. For a Jew or Jewish heart is so hard as a rock, so hard as an iron devil, that [it] cannot be moved in any way. If Moses came with all the prophets, and did all the miraculous works before their eyes, that they should leave their hardness of mind, as Christ and the apostles did before them, it would be in vain. Even if they were punished so horribly that the streets would run with blood, that their deaths would have to be counted not with a hundred thousand, but with ten hundred thousand 1) and counted, as happened in Jerusalem under Vespasiano and in Bitter under Adriano, nevertheless they must be right, even if they should be in misery for another 1500 years beyond these 1500 years, nevertheless God must be a liar, but they must be truthful.

Summa, they are young devils, condemned to hell; but if there is anything human left in them, such a letter may come in handy: of the whole bunch, whoever wants to may hope, I have no hope, I don't know any scripture about it either. If we cannot convert our Christians, the great multitude, we must be content with the small group; how much less is it possible to convert all these devil children! For

The fact that some people draw such a delusion from the epistle to the Romans in chapter 11, as if all Jews should be converted at the end of the world, is nothing; St. Paul means something else.

From the eleventh chapter in the first part of the book Purcheti, translated by D. M. Luther.

1 We will see again how the Jews have always been so hostile to the miraculous deeds of Christ that they ascribe them to Beelzebub, the prince of devils. For he has done as many and as great miracles as no one else has ever done, as he himself says John 15. Nor has it ever been heard that anyone else in his name has made the blind see, the deaf hear, the lame walk, the dumb speak, as Isaiah prophesied earlier on the 35th, v. 4. 5: "God, the Rewarder, will come and help you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped; then shall the lame lick, 2) as the hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall speak praise."

(2) In addition to these four miraculous signs, he did many others, raised the dead, cleansed the lepers, and healed many other sick people, and did such signs that no one but God alone could do; nor did the wickedness of the Jews, who always dealt in evil wiles, dare to blaspheme and defile them with lies, inventing a book against Christ in which they wrote these lies:

It came to pass in the days of Halani, 3) the queen that reigned over all the land of Israel, that Jesus HaNozri came to Jerusalem, and found in the temple of the LORD the stone, whereon the ark of the LORD was set aforetime; on the same stone was written Shem Hamphorah; whosoever learned and understood the letters of the name thereof, could do whatsoever he would.

004 And our wise men were anxious, lest, when the children of Israel should learn such a name, they should turn the world by the power thereof. Therefore they made two dogs of brass, and set them upon two pillars before the

1) In the old editions written: "rechen", which Walch had resolved with "rächen".

2) Written in the old editions: "lick".

3) Afterwards, in § 21, the queen is called "Helena".

Door of the sanctuary. If someone went in and learned the letters of the aforementioned name and went out again, the dogs of brass would attack him so horribly that he would forget the name and the letters he had learned.

005 So Jesus HaNozri came and went into the temple, and learned the letters, and wrote them upon a parchment. Then he tore open the flesh on his leg and put the letters inside. And when he had spoken the name, he was not hurt, but his skin was as it was before: and when he was gone out of the temple, the dogs of brass barked at him, and he forgot the name; and when he was come home, he tore open his leg with a knife, and took out the writing which had the letters of the pretence of Hamphorah, and learned them again.

006 And afterward he gathered unto him 310 young men of Israel, and said unto them, Behold, the wise men say that I am a whore child, because they will reign over Israel: but ye know that all the prophets prophesy of Messiah; the same am I, it is true. And Isaiah prophesied of me, "Behold, Alma is with child, and shall bring forth a son, and shall call his name Emmanuel" [Isa. 7:14]. So also my grandfather David prophesied of me, saying, "The LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee" [Ps. 2:7]. Thus my mother bare me without man's help, by the power of God alone. Therefore not I, but they themselves, are harlot children, as Hosea says: "I will not have mercy on their children, for they are harlot children" [Hos. 2, 4Z].

007 And the young men of Israel answered him, If thou be Messiah, give us a sign. What sign do you want from me? They said: Make a lame man standing, as we are. And he said, Bring one to me. As soon as they brought to him a lame man who had never trodden on his feet, he spoke Shem Hamphorah over him, and at the same hour he arose and stood on his feet. Then they all bowed down before him and said: He is without a doubt Messiah. They also brought to him a leper, and he spoke his name over him and laid his hand on him.

on him, and he was healed as soon as possible. Therefore, many loose people from our nation fell to him.

008 But the wise men, when they saw that Israel began to believe in him, caught him, and brought him to Halani the queen, which at that time held the land of Israel, and said unto her, Madam, this man practiseth sorcery, and deceiveth the world. Jesus Ha Nozri answered, "Madam, the prophets prophesied about me in ancient times; one of them says, "A branch will grow out of the tribe of Jesse" [Isa. 11:1], and I am that branch, but David says of this branch, "Blessed is he who does not walk in the counsel of the wicked" [Ps. 1:1].

009 And she said, Is this written in your law, which this man saith? They answered: Yes, it is in our law, but it is not said of him, but so is it written of him Deut. 13:5: "The prophet shall be put to death, because he hath taught unrighteousness against God," but of Messiah it is thus written [Jer. 23:6]: "In his time Judah shall be helped." Then this wicked man answered and said unto the queen, I am he, for I can raise the dead.

010 And the queen sent with them her most faithful servants, and the wicked made a dead man alive by Shem Hamphorah: and from that time the queen was astonished, and said, Verily this is a great miracle; and she made a great mockery of the wise, that they departed from her in shame: and it grieved them and them of Israel exceedingly. And Jesus Nozri went into upper Galilee.

011 And the wise men went again unto the queen, and said unto her, Madam, this man dealeth with sorcery, and perverteth creatures. And she sent her soldiers to take him: but the men of Galilee would not suffer it, but fought against her. And he said: Ye shall not fight for me: for the power of my Father from heaven, and the signs which he hath given me, shall surely defend me. And the men of Galilee made birds of clay before him, and he spake over them Shem Hamphorah: and the birds flew straightway, and fell on their faces, and worshipped him.

012 And at the same hour he brought a great millstone, and cast it into the sea: and when it was done, the wicked man spake the Shem of Hamphorah, and made the stone lie still upon the sea; and he sat upon it, and said unto the soldiers: Go to your wife and tell her what you have seen. Then he stood up before her eyes and walked on the sea.

013 And the soldiers went and told Halani the queen all that they had seen. The queen was very shocked and called the wise men and said to them: You say that this man Jesus Nozri is a sorcerer, but you should know that the signs he performs prove that he is the true Son of God. But they said: Madam, let him come here, and we will expose his mischievousness. Then the elders of Israel went and let one named Judas Sharioth enter into the temple into the holy of holies, and he learned the letters of Shem Hamphorah in the same way that Jesus Nozri had learned them, and he tore open the flesh of the leg, and all that he had done.

014 So Jesus Nozri came with his company, and the queen called the wise men also to come. And he stood before the queen, and said, David prophesied of me, Dogs have compassed me about, and the assembly of the wicked have compassed me about [Ps. 22:17]. But this is said of me also, Jer. 1:8: "Fear them not, for I am with thee, that I may deliver thee, saith the LORD." But the wise men contradicted him.

015 And he said unto the queen, I will go up to heaven: for so David said of me, Arise, O God, above the heavens; [Ps. 57:12] and lifted up his hands like wings by the name of Shem Hamphorah, and flew between heaven and earth. When the wise men saw this, they told Judah Sharioth to say Shem Hamphorah, and to go up after him. He went up and wrestled with him, so that they both fell down together; and the wicked man broke an arm: this is what the Christians mourn over every year before their Easter.

016 And the same hour the children of Israel took him, and covered him with cloths, and smote him with rods of grenadiers. And they said unto Halani the queen, If he be the son of God, let him tell who smote him: but he could not tell. And the queen said unto the wise men: Behold, he is in your hands; do to him as you please.

017 Then they took him, and led him to the gallows: but what tree or beam they hanged him upon, it brake in twain at once: for he had adjured all the trees and woods by Shem Hamphorah, that they could not receive him. So they went and got a cabbage stalk, which grows not on the tree but on the herb, and they hung it on that. This is not a miracle. For in the sanctuary a stalk grows every year, and a hundred pounds of seed hang on it. Haec ille.

Where are they now, the loose Christians who have become Jews or want to become Jews? Here to kiss, the devil has thrown into the N., and emptied the belly again, that is a right sanctuary, which the Jews, and what wants to be a Jew, should kiss, eat, drink and worship, and again the devil also eat and drink, what such his disciples can spit, throw out above and below. Here the right guests and landlords have come together, have cooked and served it right. Oh how right it has happened to them both! The devil was created a beautiful angel, that he should sing the eternal Te Deum laudamus with his holy angelic mouth together with the other holy angels. He could not stand that, and became a devil, who now eats with his angelic trunk and eats with pleasure what the lower and upper mouths of the Jews spit and spatter, yes, that has become his speech 1) in which he feeds like a sow behind the fence around St. Margaret's Day; right, right, that's how he wanted it.

(19) So it was done to the Jews, O rightly. They were called and chosen to be the mouth of God, as Jeremiah says [Jer. 15:19] and Ps. 81:11: Open wide your mouth, and I will open it.

1) Galrede - jelly. - Margaret's Day is July 13.

But they kept their mouths shut, their eyes, their ears, their noses, their whole hearts, and all their strength. Then the devil came, and they shut his eyes, his throat, his ears, his heart and all his senses, and he poured and splashed them so full that it spilled out of them in all places and washed away the devil's filth; yes, it tasted them in the heart, and they smacked their lips like swine. That is how they want it. Shout now more, crucify him, crucify him! Cry out more, "His blood come upon us and our children" [Matth. 27, 25.]. I mean, it has come and found you.

20. Nevertheless, we want to look at the beautiful articles of the Jewish faith, given in this text, one after the other, so that the desire (to become a Jew) may be atoned for whoever has it. Now, if you want to become a true Jew, listen here and learn the Catechism of the Holy Mixed Faith, not in God's name.

First, you must believe that Helen was queen in the land of Israel or Canaan, where our Lord Jesus Christ lived, taught and performed miracles. If not only the evangelists and apostles resist this, but also the whole Roman empire, as it then stood; in addition to the testimony and misery of the Jews themselves, which began in the time of Vespasiani, 250 years before Helen was born; you must not let yourself be mistaken, but think: The rabbis (masters of this book) cannot err, heaven and earth must err much before God and all angels and creatures. You must believe this if you want to become a true Jew.

22 You must also believe everything that is written here about Queen Helen, how she acted and had acted with Jesus HaNozri 250 years before she was born; for this is part of the catechism who wants to become a Jew. If someone wanted to say against it: The Jews did not exist in the country at the time of Helen, at 200 years, but were scattered all over the world, and Jerusalem had neither temple nor regiment; against it you must sneer against the cursed Goyim, and thus say: Our rabbis write it, therefore it must be so, even if God Himself with all Scripture and creature says otherwise; he must well what the rabbis want.

23 Secondly, you must believe that two dogs of brass were able to bark at that time, even without Hamphorah's Shem; before and now no one can do it anymore; even with their eyes of brass they saw so sharply who had gone out and who had come in, and who had written the letters engraved on the stone: they must have had very sharp eyes, especially because they were made of brass, and could see through such thick walls, doors and curtains. Here, perhaps, you would object that all the living dogs of the world, which can bark naturally, would not believe this if they heard and understood it, much less the iron dogs themselves 2c. But let it not be disputed; what the rabbis say is right, ask no further, if you want to be a pious Jew.

(24) Thou must think that the wise men of Israel in those days were not wiser than to keep the Shem Hamphorah with two barking dogs of brass, so that the accursed goyim might have found other ways than with iron doors, bars, and the like. If it occurs to you that the sages of Israel had much less sense in this than the iron dogs themselves, you must reject such thoughts and think: Dear, what the rabbis say is right and cannot be a lie.

25) Thirdly, you must believe that in the sanctuary of Jerusalem grew annually such 2) large cabbages that they were stronger than any 3) beam on the gallows, and grew at 100 pounds of seed. Here you must believe that 200 years after the destruction there was a sanctuary in Jerusalem, not only that, but that it was a cabbage garden and a sanctuary at the same time. If all the histories, Moses and all the prophets, even God with all the angels, say otherwise, it is a lie, but the faith of the Jews must be right; know this well if you want to become a Jew.

Finally, you must surrender to what a rabbi says, no matter how strange it may be, so you must believe it is right, regardless of whether God Himself commanded and said otherwise.

1) "the" is missing in the Erlanger.

2) "so" is missing in the Erlanger.

3) Instead of "none" it says "so" in the Erlanger.

For so Moses commanded them Deut. 17:8 ff: "If they do Shem Hamphoras did miracles, Judas Sharioth also; as it not understand a matter, they shall go up to the priests said above. If a rabbi were to put thick and thin into the and judges who are in the place which God has chosen bowl in front of your nose and say, "Here is a delicious 2c. They shall pronounce judgment upon thee (saith he); almond paste," you would have to say that you had never according to the law which they teach thee thou shalt do, eaten better paste in your life. Defy thy throat, and say and according to the law which they tell thee thou shalt otherwise. For he who has the power to say that what is keep, that thou depart not from the same, to the right right is left and what is left is right, in spite of God and all hand or to the left." Here it is decided (I would almost his creatures, can also say that his back mouth is his front have said, shitty) that everything the rabbis say, a Jew mouth, and his belly is a broad mouth, and his belly is a should believe and not deviate from it. Therefore they say broad mouth.

now, they must believe their Rabbins, if the same said, 29 If thou hast learned these things, and canst believe the right hand would be the left, and the left would be the them, run quickly, and be hastily circumcised, before the right, as Purchetus writes. Also the three Jews, 1) who dogs of brass see them, and come from Jerusalem, and were with me, did the same to me: when I wanted to force bark out of thee such high understanding of the most holy them to the text, they said that they had to believe their Jewish faith, or before the deceiver HaNozri with his Shem rabbis, but did not want to confess any text to me; Hamphoras beguile thee into believing a Christian. therefore I have to believe Purcheto all the more in this. Because you are a righteous, fine, holy, clever Jew, you according to my own experience. will now be able to be called right, and make the belly a hand should be and be called the right hand, as all angels (30) Well, perhaps one of the merciful saints among and creatures confess. But this may well be the truth, us Christians would think that I have been too rude and until a rabbi comes and says, no, it is not so, but what I unkind 5) to the poor miserable Jews by mocking and call the right hand, that is the right hand. What should scoffing at them. Ah, Lord God, I am much too low to mock God's word and work, together with all angels and such devils; I would gladly do it, but they are too far creatures, be witness against a rabbi who is so far higher superior to me in mocking, they also have a God, who is a master in mocking, and is called the wretched devil and

27) If you want to become a devout, faithful Jew, broad head, so that you have enough to eat with all Jews surrender, as I have said, that you believe what the all your life long, if you already invite all devils as guests. rabbis say, whether it is against God, reason, angels or Thank also such high heavenly rabbis, by whom you are all creatures. For here you hear that a Jew should believe so highly learned and deeply sanctified, that God Himself that the right hand is not the right hand, when a rabbi and all the angels of your holiness must be astonished, the says so. God has indeed said, yes, he has created, cursed Goyim are not worth judging 4) nor hearing ordered and named it by his eternal word, that the right anything about it.

28. so you must believe here that the queen Helena, evil spirit. What I could mock him to his annoyance, that I with her wise men, and Jesus did this thing 200 years should do justly, he would have well deserved it. I want the before she was born; item, that cabbages grow yearly in the sanctuary, thicker than a beam, bearing a hundred pounds of seed; item, that dogs of brass bark; item, that Jesus by

1) Compare § 125 of the previous paper.

2) "nun" is missing in the Erlanger.

3) Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: müssest.

4) Jenaer: richen.

5) unesse - what you can't eat, inedible, disgusting.

show a little (who otherwise would not notice) what an unspeakable mocker he is here.

The arrogant evil spirit mocks three things in this book. First, he mocks God, the Creator of heaven and earth, with His Son Jesus Christ, as you can see for yourself, if you believe as a Christian that Christ is the Son of God. Secondly, he mocks us, the whole of Christendom, for believing in such a Son of God. Thirdly, he also mocks his own Jews, giving them such disgraceful, foolish, foolish things, of dogs of brass and sticks of coal, that all dogs would bark themselves to death, if they understood, at such raging, raving, senseless, raging, mad fools. Is this not a master of mockery, who with a single mockery can perform such great three mockeries? The fourth mockery is that he has mocked himself with this, as we, praise God, will see with joy on that day.

(32) Thus the Jews also mock themselves the most, that they obey the devil, their God, in such mockery and become such raging fools. For they do it not in error, but because they know it well, and also natural reason, given by God, warns them, instructs them and convinces them that such cannot be true; nor do they tickle themselves with it, it does them good, and they do it with pleasure, so that they may hear, learn and preach such tangible shameful lies and blasphemy against us Christians and Jesus HaNozri of the devil. O right, right, master and disciple have come together in the right school.

33 Further. Over such mockery they first of all prove their supernatural mastery, because they say that Jesus HaNozri (that should be called Jesus of Nazareth) has done his miraculous signs through Shem Hamphoras, which should be called "the interpreted name". Here they confess (as they must) that the miraculous signs of Jesus HaNozri were real true signs, and herewith they testify and condemn themselves, like their ancestors in the Gospel, that he raised the dead. He made the lame walk and cleansed the lepers 2c. [Matth. 11, 5.], which are such works, which only the one can do,

The first thing that must be said is that they are the result of the eternal, divine power and are possible; men, even angels, are not able to do them, as little as creatures can create from nothing. All reason must say this.

Now behold the tender little fruits, the circumcised saints; such divine works and miracles they ascribe to 1) the Shem Hamphoras, that is, to the single, dead, wretched letters, which are written in ink in the book, or hover on the tongue, or are carried in the heart, even of the wicked. For the Shem Hamphorah be what he will; so they are, and can be, nothing else, but corrupt, dead, impotent letters, even if it were God's holy Scripture itself (which is all the worse), of which the Jews prattle much, and know not what they prattle. What should letters be able to do, as letters, from their own strength, where nothing more would come to it? What do they help the devil, Turks, Jews and all the wicked, who misuse such letters, even God's name, without ceasing against the other commandment? Satan and all the wicked names and works are also written in holy letters.

(35) But the frenzied Jews give the Shem Hamphorah divine power as a mere, empty letter, without any promise or commandment from God. For they say here that even the wicked and deceivers can do many miracles and divine works through these letters. Where then are they, the circumcised saints, who boast against us Christians that they alone are those who honor the one true God, since the accursed HaNozriim worship three gods? Here they give the divine power and honor to the mere, empty, dead letters in the Shem of Hamphorah so completely that even the godless and deceivers, against God's will and prohibition (in the Ten Commandments), can do divine majesty's own works. O²⁾ these are holy children of God, who make over the one God as many gods as there are letters in the Shem of Hamphorah, which shall be 216, as follows; that is, they worship 216 thousand devils, and not the right God,

1) "to" is missing in the Erlanger.

2) Erlanger "Ob", although the old editions offer "Oh". This is not a misprint in the Erlanger edition, because "O" is given as Walch's variant.

whom they so shamefully blaspheme with the Shem Hamphoras and steal his divine honor, appropriating the same¹⁾ to the wretched letters.

(36) How right it was for the furious Jews! They did not want to accept Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah and Son of God, so that they would remain with the one, true God, as we Christians have remained. For it is impossible that he should or could accept more than one, the right one God, who accepts Jesus Christ for the Messiah with right faith; Again, it is impossible that he should remain with the one right God, who does not accept Jesus Christ for Messiah with right faith, but he must (as the devil wills) accept strange and other more gods, and should they be mere, dead, void letters, or Shem Hamphoras, that is, great sacks full of heaped devils. Yes, such gods the Jews wanted to have for the right God in Jesus Nazarene.

(37) They might say, "If you Christians do this yourselves, speaking words over water, it must be baptism, which washes away all sin and makes newborn men. Item, bread and wine you make body and blood with words; item, you lay your hand on the sinner's head and absolve him of sins with words. Thus your Luther writes: Whoever lifts up a straw in God's word does a better work, neither all monks, nuns, bishops, Pope 2c. Now the words are nothing else but living, bare, poor letters: to which you nevertheless give the works that are proper to divine majesty, as forgiveness of sin, new birth and redemption from death.

38 We Christians have been well and sufficiently taught and told about this, that it is not necessary to act here; but recently we Christians say that water is nothing but water, words are nothing but empty letters, do and help nothing beyond their nature, much less do they work divine works in us; for water and letters do not make baptism. I have often seen a horse or an ox drink up a bucket full of water, and if you

If you speak the words of baptism over it, the horse would not be baptized and would not be born again from it; there is more to it. But baptism is such a thing that all devils must not swallow a drop of it, for it would become a cellar neck for them, which would burn them like hellish fire; but they flee, if they can, where they see baptism, must not come to it, nor stay with it. Why is that? They certainly do not respect water and letters.

39) But because God has commanded and commanded that we should use our hands and tongues, and pour the water over the person to be baptized with the words or letters that He has commanded, He has promised and assured us in the most certain way that He Himself will be present with His divine grace and power and do this work Himself. Here you grasp that we Christians do not give divine power to the water and the letter, nor do we say that [it] is our doing, but confess that it is and remains God's alone, who wants to show and prove in us such a way that has pleased him, namely through the water and the word or the letter. This does not mean that the letters are not alive or just water that the cow drinks, but that God is united in this, so that he will exercise his grace and power on us and through us as his instrument. And so both water and letters in baptism are full and rich in God's grace and power, because He promised and revealed that He Himself would do it. "Go, baptize" (he says), not in your name, but "in the name" 2c. that it is a work of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

40 Therefore we also reject the pope and his whole church, who has filled all the world with the same jugglery, sorcery, idolatry, because he also has his special Shem Hamphoras; there he goes, bewitches the water with loose, mere, empty letters, pretends that it is holy water, which washes away sin, chases away the devil, and others have much virtue; wants to imitate God, like a monkey. Item, likewise enchants the dear wax with empty, single letters, ver-

1) In the editions: the same.

2) Erlanger: "with water".

3) Erlanger: and.

buys it for emperors and kings for holy Agnus Dei, 1) which shall have much, much virtue, thus feeds himself with it, yes, became rich in the world, quite like a blasphemous juggler, magician and idolater. So he also bewitched caps and plates and all the world with mere words or letters, so that they become monks, nuns, priests, say mass and sell, call and celebrate saints, solve indulgences, tread dead men's legs, serve the devil, and by their own works earn heaven, namely heaven, since the devil is abbot and pope inside.

41) That he needs good words of Scripture and God's name for this is all the more annoying; God did not command him, but rather strictly forbade it. It 2) says: "You shall not take God's name in vain"; therefore, his power is not involved, but are empty, mere, impotent letters. But if something happens through it, it is not God's work, but the devil's, to strengthen his lies and sorcery (by God's decree) and to seduce the unbelievers, but to tempt and warn the believers with it; as we see that the milk thieves 3) and other sorceresses often do great harm. The Turks, too, have among themselves such curses, and carry with them in war letters in Arabic, very beautifully written (of which I have seen several), that they want to be safe from weapons and danger by such empty, mere letters, or, as they call them, good holy words. Thus the devil fills the whole world with sorcery, idolatry and incense, as if he had nothing more to do than to create strange appearances of Hamphoras in every place.

Here, I think, it would be time, and the reader should be moved by the desire to know what the Jews Shem Hamphorah is. I know and am certain, as I have said, that it is nothing else, nor may it be, but vain, mere, poor letters. But to expose their foolishness and the devil's wickedness, I will show it here as much as I can and know: may he who has it no other way,

1) Cf. Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XIX, 1018 ff.

2) Erlanger: "he".

3) Compare Luther's Table Talks, Cap. 25, § 5. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 783.

read Antonium Margaritam. It stands 2 Mos. at the 14, 19. 20. 21. a text, which reads thus:

43] "And the angel of God, which went before the host of Israel, rose up, and stood behind them; and the pillar of cloud also departed out of their sight, and stood behind them, and came between the host of Egypt and the host of Israel. And there was a dark cloud, and it lighted up the whole night, so that they could not come together all the night, neither this night nor that night. And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea, and the LORD caused it to pass away with a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry, and the waters were parted from one another."

44 This text has 216 letters in Hebrew, which divide it into three groups 4) or verses, so each verse has seventy-two letters. One could make six good verses out of it, but the rabbis do not want it that way. Now notice the high art of Shem Hamphora. If you write the three rows under each other, so that just one letter is under the other, then do so: Take the foremost letter in the first row, and the rearmost in the other row, and the foremost in the third row, put them together, and you have a word of three letters; in this way do with all the letters in the three rows or rows, and you will find seventy-two words, since each one has three letters.

They can do it finely in the Hebrew alphabet, since all letters are digits or number letters; for they count with letters, like the Greeks. But we have no more than seven number letters, C. D. I. L. M. V. X. But I will try it as a rough example to show us Germans, and put three rows of twelve letters, that the text is this:

L	V	C	I	M		I	L	X	D	I	C	V
L	V	X	L		I	C	V	M	D	V	M	I
I	V	D	I	C	V		D	I	C	L	I	I

46 Here I take the foremost letter L in the first tier, and the rearmost I in the other tier, and the foremost I in the second tier.

4) Squads - rows.

third row, it becomes the word LII. If you do the same with the other letters after that, it becomes the word VMV; if you do the same with the third letters, it becomes the word CVD. If you do the same with the fourth letters, you have the word IDI and so on, as the Jews do with the three verses of Moses, and make seventy-two words out of them, each with three letters. These three literal words, which are made from such art, mean nothing, should also mean nothing, just as you see an example here that the four words LII, VMV, CVD, IDI mean nothing to us Germans. However, the text of Moses stands for itself in its natural interpretation, as it is read.

I would have liked to make my example clearer, but the number letters cannot make it so pure, but help him with a little reflection, because so much should be said:

Luci milks the Ku, Luxli¹) kum du zu mir, Jude kau du die Klien.

48. but because k. a. e. n. 2c. are not number letters, I had to leave them out, and so speak wicked Wendish or Danish German.

49. Now you ask: What then are the seventy-two three-letter words, made from the text of Moses? Then listen to the other piece of great art. They are to be ziphra or number letters, no longer reading letters; not grammatically, as one reads them in the school, but arithmetically, as one reads them in the arithmetic school. So, in my example, you must not read 141, as in school, but as in the retirement or arithmetic school, where one does not read LII, but fifty-two. The other word is not VMV, but thousand and ten. The third word is not CVD, but six hundred and five. The fourth word does not read IDI, but five hundred and two, and 2) so henceforth. So all letters in the text of Mosi must become arithmetic, because grammatically they do not serve to the Shem Hamphorah.

1) The old edition of Walch and the Erlanger: Luxie. 2) "and" is missing in the Erlanger.

50 Further and thirdly you must learn that such three-letter seventy-two words, made from the text of Moses, are names of seventy-two angels (how almost the word devil would have escaped me), as if I spoke in my example the four words LII, VMV, CVD, IDI, that four angels are thus named, that one is called arithmetically fifty-two, the other thousand and ten, the third six hundred and five, the fourth five hundred and two. So there the seventy-two angels are called also with vain number names, the one seventeen, the other twenty-two; item seventy-nine and so on.

What are the seventy-two names of angels, understood arithmetically? Clear your throat, here it will be, here we come to the right main part. You have now heard 3) that the whole text of Moses 2 Mos. 14, 19. 20. 21. has been divided arithmetically or numerically into three times seventy-two angel names. Now you must learn that these same arithmetical letters again become grammatical or reading letters, but nevertheless remain arithmetical; namely: the first angel VII is called arithmetically fifty-two. Now you must go and look for another word or two that also understands fifty-two, but so that it calls God, or says something about God's powers or works. Rather than following my example, "It is God's love." Here you hear an understandable speech, that the love of God does and is able to do everything, and the letters are all grammatical or reading letters; nevertheless, inside you find the angel's VII name arithmetically, that is one L and two I⁴⁾, which are fifty-two. Such examples you may look for yourself more than: "God helps fine", "God gives salvation" 2c. There you hear an understandable speech according to the grammatica or reading letters, and yet at the same time you have inside the arithmetic or number letters LII, which give the first angel's name. So you must

3) Wittenberger: now right.

4) In the issues: II.

with the other names of the seventy-two angels, that is, with the whole text of Genesis 2:14, which is divided into these seventy-two angels' names, as you heard above.

52 Now here you see how God's name, or what is spoken of His doing, is mixed in with the seventy-two angels' names. And so there is an interpreted or spread out name through the whole text of Moses, that is, through all the seventy-two angels' names, that is, Shem Hamphorah, the interpreted 1) name. Such alphabetship is fine in Hebrew, since they can make all letters arithmetic, and give LII, that is fifty-two, with other and other words, which we are not able to do in our ABC, which we have little, that is, only seven arithmetic letters, C. D. I. L. M. V. X. Therefore, although I can write LII with these letters xxxxi, or xl and xij, I cannot make a grammatical word or speech out of it, as they can do in Hebrew. For x is, especially for us Germans, strange in usage, and could well be dispensed with in the German language. Therefore, in this speech: "God's love is complete," we must also borrow more grammatical letters, so that the angel's LII name, the fifty-two, are written arithmetically and yet also grammatically.

53) Whether you want to argue here, one could also make another from the number books, both in Hebrew and Latin or German, namely: "Satan helps fine", "Satan gives salvation. There is also LII, the first angel's name, that is, fifty-two; or thus: "Hans helps fine" 2c. Hie would become Shem Hamphoras also of the devil and man interpreted name, and all that I wanted. But dear Goy, you have heard above, you must believe and do what the rabbis say and want; if not, then the brazen dogs of Jerusalem would come, and bark you to death 2) and, which is even more dangerous, the cabbage stalk of one in the sanctuary with the 100 pounds of seed will fall on you and beat you to death.

54 Finally, to make the Shema of Hamphorah complete, they do the Benedicite or prayer for it, putting a verse from the Psalter to each of the names of the seventy-two angels, so that there are seventy-two verses. With this high devotion (³) pay attention to it), that in each verse the great name of God Jehovah, called Tetragrammaton, is written; but that you do not call the letters, but speak Adonai for it, because it is unpronounceable. Now you have the Shem Hamphoras completely and perfectly, now you are not only a circumcised, right Jew, now you can do all kinds of miraculous signs, as the deceiver, Jesus Nozri, did through it. Now quickly run to Jerusalem, and 4) commanded by the Shem Hamphorah the dogs of brass to beget a hundred thousand young dogs of brass, each barking ten times brighter than the two old ones, so that they may bark the cursed goyim all over the world deaf, blind, foolish, and straight to death, and thus concede the world to the holy children of Israel, even before their Messiah Kochab comes.

How is it that they have not used such art and power of Shem Hamphorah for 1500 years in the misery, especially since they were destroyed by the Romans through Vespasianum (because it was time to do miracles), and afterwards, since they were slain and scattered with their Messiah Kochab under Adriano? The answer of the rabbis is that they are not pious enough now, that they are in the misery and disgrace of God, that they have forgotten the power of the seventy-two angels in such a long time. But how is that possible? They are eternally the noble blood and circumcised saints, God's own people before all the world, the dearest children of Israel, who worship no more than One God. Such cannot be in disgrace (the Scripture would have to be wrong) like the cursed Goyim who worship more than One God and consider Jesus HaNozri as Messiah, they must be in disgrace that no Shem Hamphorah can help them.

3) Erlanger: "I did."

4) "and" is missing in the Erlanger.

1) In the editions in the text: "laid out". The Jena edition has as a conjecture in the margin: "laid out".

2) In the old edition of Walch and in the Erlanger: zu tod.

(56) How could the wise men have been so foolish as to forget the power of the angels in the Shem of Hamphorah, who were so wise as to keep the treasure with two iron dogs, and so powerful as to let Judas Sharioth enter? Rather, they went in themselves when they desired, and became like Judas Sharioth in everything they do, as they still are. Therefore, the great treasure of such art must certainly still be with them, inherited from Judas Sharioth and their ancestors, and cannot be so lost. Otherwise, how could they so surely still write and speak of it?

(57) Thou cursed goyim, for thou art a rough fellow, thou wilt not and canst not learn. Have you not heard above that when a rabbi says the right hand is left, it is left; when he says the left hand is right, it is right? Thus, if a rabbi here says that the art of Shem Hamphora is lost, it is lost; but if he says they still have it, they still have it; if he says they are in disgrace, they are in disgrace; if he says they are the dear chosen people of God alone, they certainly are.

58. Here you will perhaps ask me: Where did the Jews get this high wisdom, that one should divide Mosi's text, the holy innocent letters, into three verses and make arithmetic or counting letters out of them, also call seventy-two angels, and summa, put the whole Shem Hamphorah in this way? Leave me alone, ask the rabbis about it, they will tell you. - Yes, I want to hear your opinion before I become a Jew, because then I know that I must believe the rabbis; but you promised me the Catechismum of the Jews, that also holds.

(59) Well, I don't particularly know where they got it, but close to it I will well advise. Here in Wittenberg, near our parish church, there is a sow carved in stone, and there are young piglets and Jews lying underneath, sucking; behind the sow stands a rabbi, who lifts the sow's right leg, and with his left hand he pulls the pirzel over himself, bends down, and with great diligence peers under the sow's Pirzel in the Talmud, as if he wanted to read and see something sharp and special; there they certainly have their Shem Hamphoras. For there have been many Jews in these lands in the past, as the names of villages, towns, citizens and peasants, which are Hebrew, prove to this day, that a learned, honest man, who was hostile to the dishonest lies of the Jews, has had such an image stated and torn down. For so the Germans speak of one who pretends to great wisdom without reason: Where did he read it? The sow in (roughly out) the butt.

60 To this one would easily draw and turn the word Schem Hamphoras, namely Peres schama, or, as they do, boldly master and make Scham HaPeres, 1) so it reads close together. Just as if a German in hearing or reading understood n  ren for nourish; item, he has finely improved my goodness, yes, watered it. So the wicked spirit of his captive Jews mocks, makes them say Shem Hamphoras, and believe and hope great things within; but he means Scham Haperes, that is, "hie Dreck", not which lies in the street, but comes out of the belly. Shame means "here or there", peres, which is in the intestines of the sow and all animals, as Moses needs it in the third book [Cap. 8, 17.]²⁾ when he commands to burn the sin offering with skin and hair, and with his peres, dung 2c.

(61) For the devil has possessed and imprisoned the Jews, so that they must be of his will (as St. Paul says), to deceive, lie, blaspheme, even to curse God and all that is God's. For this he gives them as a reward his mockery, shame of Haperes, and helps them to believe that this and all their lying and fooling is delicious thing. About such a terrible prison they do not complain and cry, they also do not desire with the slightest sigh to come out of it, but are happy to be inside, consider it a special great freedom, wanted to

1) In the old editions, probably erroneous "Shamha Peres".

2) Here the Erlanger edition has reprinted the wrong Bible quote from Walch'. "3 Mos. 8, 27." In addition, the Erlangen edition has ten other false citations from Walch in this scripture.

They also like to have us Christians inside. But they cry out about the Roman prison, since they are not imprisoned by us, but we are imprisoned by them in our country, money and goods; because they are too comfortable, they deal with us in the same way as the devil deals with them, mocking us to our detriment, as the devil mocks them, to their eternal damnation.

(62) But in order that it may be clear how the foolish Jews deal with incense, they leave the previous text, where God gives must and promises that he shall divide the sea with the rod and lead the children of Israel through it (2c). Yes, this is the right main text that does it, since God promises and gives that it shall be done. But the nonsensical Jews ask nothing about this, take history before them, want to imitate (like monkeys) with mere letters what God has done at that time by His word and commandment, make no distinction between God's power and word, and between their nonsensical, nonsensical hypocrisy.

63 Also, they say that whoever knows the power and virtue of the seventy-two angels can force them to prove their power through the shame of Haperes. First of all, they are right in saying that whoever knows the power of these seventy-two angels can certainly do all miracles through them; just as it is certainly true that whoever has an ass that throws out gold can have florins, but where is such an ass? In the land of the sleeping monkey. So these seventy-two angels of the Jews are nowhere except in the land of the sleeping monkeys, they were never created, and they will never be created again; therefore they say rightly that whoever knows the power of these angels, he also does miracles as much as he wants and when he wants. We will also see that by such angels' power they will wrest their Messiah from God without his thanks and win Jerusalem; how can they fail? . On the other hand, we see how the frenzied, senseless fools would like to charm the angels and force them under themselves with loose, mere letters, and put themselves above God, so that the angels would have to do what they want. These are they, the saints of all saints, who alone worship One God. For worshipping One God means, with them, to be with the Mouths call One God, and with knees or bows show themselves to be against One God, but with the heart also worship mere letters, that is, many thousand lies and devils; for in what a heart relies and trusts, that is its God; Just as we Christians, the great cursed goyim, say that even if the mouth is silent and the knees do not bend, nevertheless, because the heart bends without ceasing, that is, places its confidence, comfort and trust in the one God, it is called without ceasing rightly and finely worshipping the one God.

But this is pure foolishness in these circumcised saints, who can sometimes call One God with their mouths (that is enough), but make angels and gods out of letters, as much as they want, in which they not only trust (which we mad goyim call worshipping), but also charm, for what they want. Should not a goy gladly become a Jew, since such great power is found, that one can make gods and angels of our liking, so we cursed goyim can nothing more than believe that the one God has made us all, and the angels rule us, not we them. Summa, a Jew is as full of idolatry and sorcery as nine cows have hair, that is, innumerable and infinite, as the devil, their god, is full of lies.

66. If they had to use such a way of learning with letters, as children are taught in school to know the letters, that they have to say the Abc in front of them and behind them, move the letters this way and that, so that they learn to make syllables and practice reading, or make pictures and figures with the letters, as some boys are skilled at, and did in the past; It would be to suffer as a merry children's game, as one could do better with Hebrew letters than with other letters; but to give power to the mere, empty, poor letters, and such power that can do wonders, even through the wicked and enemies of God, that is not only "Fie on you" and shame on Haperes, but the wretched, blasphemous devil himself with all his malice out of hell. For with 1) the wise pray

The Jews believe so many devils, yes, so many thousand devils, as much as they lie to angels in their shame of Haperes (as said above). For they build on this and believe it to be the truth, which is a lie. This is what the prophets call idolatry, confidere in mendacio, trusting in lies, which honor belongs to God alone.

Now behold, how fine saints the Jews are; they condemn us cursed goyim for worshipping more than One God, but they, the given fruit of noble blood and circumcised saints, worship only the One God. That is true, if the seventy-two lying angels, that is, seventy-two thousand devils are called one God, then they certainly worship one God. See also what a great new miraculous saint you have become, when you have denied Christ and become a Jew. For you can by shame make Haperes that all devils are one God, which 1) God Himself is not able to do. Therefore, think and be grateful to the rabbis for their almighty shit, ah, shame Haperes I was going to say. Yes, that's how it goes, if you don't want to hear God's word, but blaspheme without stopping, you have to hear all the devils and worship them, as our Lord Christ speaks, Joh. 5, 43: "I have come in my Father's name, and you have not accepted me; another will come in his name, and you will accept him."

(68) Even if they let such falsehood and folly be bad lies, as the jesters or 2) jugglers lie, and confess that it would not be true miraculous signs, what should happen through the shame of Haperes: so one could still hope that they would get tired of the folly with time and once desist from it themselves. Now, however, they hang on to the wicked 3) click that they trust in it as in the truth of God Himself, make a worship and idolatry out of it, do not want to consider it as false miraculous signs, what happens through Shem Hamphoras; it should be serious, and real divine power should work in it, as it

1) Erlanger: because it.

2) Erlanger: "and".

3) Wittenberger and Erlanger: single bare.

In the text above they say that Jesus, the wicked, raised a dead man in front of the servants of Queen Helen; as their ancestors also confessed that Jesus cast out devils rightly, and was no jugglery, but in Beelzebub's name [Luc. 11, 15]. For their Shem Hamphoras shall be able to do everything and anything, righteously.

Lastly, it is a blasphemy beyond measure that they attribute such divine power in the Shem of Hamphorah to perform miraculous signs, even to the wicked, as Judas Sharioth and the deceiver (as they blaspheme) Jesus HaNozri, teaching it knowingly. This piece also moves Lyra, Burgensis and many others, without them not being angry enough about it. I do not know how to speak or write about this. If I say that the Jews are mad, blind, insane (as Moses says of them), full of devils, then it is all too little said by those who want to worship the one God, and are allowed to spit out such blasphemy, and also teach such as a right. Understand, whoever can, what this is said, that the divine, eternal Majesty, our all dear 4) Creator, praised and to be praised forever, is to be scolded by these damned young devils, that he by his miraculous works, which he alone does and can do, Psalm 72:18. He is a witness, a confirmer, a super-helper of all the lies, seduction, error, idolatry, blasphemy, and all the abominations that they lay on our Lord Jesus Christ, or cannot and will not defend himself against the shame of a false prophet, Haperes.

I cannot understand this in any other way than that they make God Himself the devil, yes, the servant of all devils, who helps to do, strengthen, accomplish all evil that the devil wants, who has the desire and love to deceive poor souls, to disgrace Himself with His own miraculous works, and to rage against Himself, summa, worse than all Jews, yes, than all devils. Oh my God, my dear Creator and Father, you will graciously grant me that I must speak so shamefully of your divine eternal majesty against your cursed enemies, devils and Jews. You know that I do it out of

4) Walch and the Erlanger: allerlieber.

Fervor of my faith and in honor of your divine majesty, for it goes through my body and life.

71 But your judgment is right, justus es, Domino.

Yes, so shall the Jews and no one else be punished, who have so long without ceasing despised, mocked, blasphemed and condemned your word and miraculous work, so that they do not have to fall, like other human children, pagans and whoever they are, into sin and death, not up into hell, nor in the middle of hell, but into the abyss of hell, where one cannot fall any lower. For this is also their sin, which cannot be worse, since they not only despise you, the true eternal God, with disobedience and blasphemy of your word, but also want to make you a devil and a servant among all devils, that you with your glorious divine power should be a witness and serve the devil in his lies, blasphemies, murder, and what more devilish works are; right, right are your judgments, heavenly Father, they wanted to blaspheme, they got enough of it.

72. Moses writes, Deut. 18, 20. ff., that God will not let miracles or signs happen on the word of a false prophet, and says: "You should know that if the word of the false prophet does not come, then be sure that the Lord has not spoken such a word. But these devils say that Jesus HaNozri is a deceiver and a false prophet; nevertheless, true miraculous signs are, as raising the dead, walking the lame. Making lepers clean (which no one but God is able to do) have been done by such a deceiver. It would not be surprising that Christians who suffer such blasphemers, cursed by God, would have long since been sunk by God's wrath with hellish fire into the abyss of hell with the Jews, without it having helped us that we did not have to and are therefore innocent of their atrocious deeds. But now watch, dear princes and lords, if Jews protect themselves and suffer what you do, I will be excused. Here is not only Christ our Lord, and the Father in Christ, but God the Father Himself in Himself, that is, reviled in His divine majesty worse than Christ, and made a devil and servant of all devils.

makes. Cry out now more, Jew, cry out now: Crucify him, his blood be upon us and upon our children; it is done that you would have it.

Enough has been said about this; a Christian's heart and ears must want to hear and remember nothing of it, for it is too horrible, terrible and inordinate.

74. against this abomination it is a little less, what they from the name TETRA

GRAMMATON fool and slobber, of which I must also say a little, to reveal their foolishness to us Germans. In the Holy Scriptures God has many names, but in particular they count ten, among which is one they call the great and TETRAGRAMMATON the They keep the most holy name, so that the others are sometimes also given to the angels and other creatures, but this one is always given to God alone. Here they are so holy and spiritual that they do not call the same name with their mouths, but instead of it another, or the four letters of the same name, Jod, He, Vof, He, because it is supposed to be unpronounceable. Therefore St. Jerome says: The Greeks, because they did not know these letters, have read them PJPJ, the He for a P considered.

First of all, I leave out the ten names, as this is not new, but is also indicated by St. Jerome in epistola ad Marcellam, where he counts them thus: El, Elohim, Elohe, Zebaoth, Eljon, Ehje, Adonai, Iah, Jehovah, Schadai. Others do it differently; I don't think anything of it. There are probably more names of God in Scripture than these, as, Ab, Bore, Or, Chai 2c., Father, Creator, Light, Life, Salvation, and the like. And what good thing can be called or be, that must not be assigned to God beforehand, but he who has it in himself, as Christ says: "God alone is good, and we receive from him all that we are and have. But now we will deal with the One Name, called Jehovah, with which the devil and the Jews practice much sorcery and all kinds of abuse and idolatry.

This name Jehovah, according to the Grammatica, comes from the word Haja, or Hava, 1) which means Latin: fuit, in praeterito, 6886; German: wesen 1) or sein; and this can be nota nominis verbalis, like Josaphat, Jesaias, Jeremias and many other names, and is so much, as in Latin ens, in Greek on. We Germans must speak: "he is"; and thus becomes trigrammaton in Latin, dygrammaton in Greek, hexagrammaton in German, or, if we want to take "is" badly, it is also trigrammaton. That they now pretend that the name Jehovah should be unpronounceable, they do not know what they slur; if they mean the letters, it cannot be true, because he is called Jehovah. And if he can be written with feathers and ink, why should he not also be called with the mouth, which is much better than feathers and ink? Or why do they not 2) also call him unwritable, illegible, unthinking? Summa, it is a lazy thing. But if they do it in honor, they should do it in all other names as well, and let them also be unpronounceable. For it is said, "Thou shalt not take God's name in vain," therefore it is also evil. The Scriptures do not say that some of God's names should be unspeakable, otherwise all those who take God's name in vain would be innocent, because they would say that they could not have called His name, let alone take it in vain.

1) In the old editions: "Haio" and "Hauo".

She says that God's essence, power, wisdom, goodness, and what else can be said of God is inexpressible, immeasurable, infinite, incomprehensible, 2c. that not the letters or syllables, but that which is meant by them, is inexpressible. Yes, so one would have to speak of the ineffable name of God. For he has his being from no one, has neither beginning nor end, but is from eternity, in and of himself, so that his being cannot be called "has been" or "will be," for he has never begun, cannot begin to be, has never ceased, cannot cease to be; but it is called with him vain or "being," that is, Jehovah [Ex. 3:14]. Since the creature was created, there is already his essence, and what is yet to come, there he is ready with his essence.

1) "Being" is another form for "to be", which is still in use in Low German.

2) Erlanger: make.

In this way Christ speaks of His divinity, Joh. 8, 58.: "Before Abraham was, I am"; does not say: I was then, as if he would not be afterwards; but: "I am", that is, my being is eternal, has not been, will not be, but is a vain reality.

Therefore, as his Is, Am, or essence is incomprehensible, so it is also inexpressible, for no creature can comprehend that which is eternal. 3. Therefore the angels are eternally blessed, for they cannot see and rejoice in the eternal essence of God, nor comprehend it; and where it could be comprehended, it could not be eternal, would itself also have to have an end or beginning, and no one could give or receive a being, because it would itself be uncertain of its essence. Further, his wisdom, power, goodness 2c. is also eternal and incomprehensible, because it must be nothing else than his divine being itself. Thirdly, which is probably higher, that in the divine essence God is Father, Son, Holy Spirit, three persons in one, eternal, incomprehensible essence. Yes, to say all this about God might be called an incomprehensible, inexpressible name. Who wants to name such a strange being, to think it out, to pronounce it, to write it out? In this way, perhaps, the ancients would have called the name Jehovah unpronounceable, because it means God's essence, according to the Grammatica, which (as heard) is one, from eternity, and is called three persons.

79. With this one should be concerned, and learn to recognize such Jehovah, that is, divine essence, and seek it in the Scriptures, as he has revealed himself, through his word, in this life, and will reveal himself there, without word, in that life. But this is too high for the Jews, yes, nothing at all, but this is what the tender saints do: with their mouths they honor the letters of the name Jehovah, which should and must be unspeakable, but the divine essence, which is signified by the letters, they comprehend and measure it with cubits, pounds and bushels, that it must be as large, long, wide, deep, heavy and full as they want it to be. Note that God had promised them the Messiah, whom He also sent, according to His divine, miraculous, incomprehensible, and unbelievable nature.

3) "can" is missing in the Erlanger.

They go to him and paint him a picture or a form, a It is also worthwhile that they not only do not mention the measure and a concept of his wisdom, how he should name of Jehovah, but also do not have to name, read, send the Messiah, namely, as the Kochab made a way, write, hear, or have a letter in all of Scripture, because not as Jesus of Nazareth; for their Messiah is not to be they need it to disgrace God, to dishonor Scripture, and crucified, but to put to death the Gentiles and make the to condemn themselves.

Jews rulers in the world.

82) And how can it be otherwise, dear brother? if

No other way shall the eternal divine essence and his God's word does not shine on us and show us the way, eternal incomprehensible wisdom find or meet, but in this Ps. 119, 105, and his light 2) does not shine on us in the imagined way let men compel, comprehend and embrace dark place, 2 Petr. 1, 19, then there can be nothing else him; if not, he shall not be their God. For it is they who can but darkness, error, lies that we invent for ourselves. give God purpose, measure, weight, manner and form, Look at our experience, when under the papacy we had not only in his works, but also in his eternal divine being, put his divine word out of our sight and took the doctrine so that he does not have to be three persons in one being. of men for it, what thick darkness, lies and abominations For they stand there with their compasses and angle we worshipped with masses, purgatory, holy service, irons, with cubits and lead, they will not suffer God to be monasticism and our own works 2c. Now the Jews have such an incomprehensible being, and will not let them be no word of God, therefore there must be darkness, much wiser, wiser and more understanding than God because circumcision and Mosi's law is not valid any Himself is. Why is it that the Jews do not name or longer than until Messiah, who should teach them pronounce the literal Name with their mouths, but with another, Deut. 18, 15, as he has done; they did not want their hearts they not only name, pronounce and judge His to accept that, so they have to do it, that they do not do divine essence, the true Jehovah, but also force and what God wants, but God should do what they want. At compel Him into their sheaf? So they must do, is their way the time when Mosiah's law was commanded to them, (as Isaiah prophesies in 29, 13.), with the mouth they they did not want to do it, they killed all the prophets over honor the letters, and with the heart they defile and it; now, when it is no longer commanded, they want to do blaspheme; nor shall God always be fooled, that they thus it, and they kill Messiah and all his Christians over it; devour the kernels, and spit the husks under his eyes. before with the deed, now with the full will, desire and

81. they are given to do nothing righteous, to live nor wish of their heart. The wrath of God has come upon speak, but to lead vainly perverse, blind, furious, them, as they deserved.

senseless beings, as Moses says. It must be a great thing that they do not call the name of Jehovah, because they do not see that they use it in shameful abuse for their From the beginning of the Gospel, as described by St. shame of Haperes, that they adorn, honor and strengthen Matthew and St. Lucas, the question has arisen: Why the their seventy-two invented angels, that is, seventy-two two evangelists tell so unequally (or, as many have lies and devils, with the same holy name of God, and do interpreted it, so contrary to each other) the persons or all kinds of sorcery, incense and idolatry with it. I would, members of the family of our Lord Jesus Christ, and especially that they both lead the line or line of persons in the family and end with Joseph, and not with Mary and Christ?

The other part.

and they would be

1) Erlanger: and.

2) Erlanger: Leucht.

The tribe of David, because it does not come from Joseph, which the evangelists well lead finely, according to the line of the family of David, and suddenly leave the same Joseph, put Mariam instead.

Here they all have to do, especially the Jews, then Julianus the emperor with his pagans; item, many of the old teachers, also the new ones not a little; the latter have to master here, the latter to wonder, as if our Christian faith were wrong, uncertain or completely dark in this. Therefore we also want to speak something about it, but with leave, because we want to let everyone make everything better.

First of all, to answer the Jews, if someone wants to talk to them. After the Jew, who moved me to write about the Jews the next time, also started this piece: it could not be proven that Jesus was of the tribe of Judah, because the evangelist Matthew traced the tribe of Judah to Joseph and not to Mary; therefore he could not be Messiah, of the tribe of Judah and David. 1) The serpents are thorny and poisonous, and they look closely to see if they can make our books false. For they ask not that they might learn of us, and know the truth; but with such questions they flatter and provoke us to scorn and ridicule of our faith, as which we cannot prove.

(86) Therefore one should tread on the head of the poisonous, prickly serpents and answer them in the most blunt and harsh way, in defiance of the devil: "That Mary, the mother of Jesus, is of the tribe of Judah and of the house of David, says not only Matthew the Evangelist, but also Moses, the very first, and after him all the prophets unanimously. And if we Christians had nothing else from the Old Testament, but only Moses, we would have enough and plenty to prove that Mary must be from the tribe of Judah and the house of David, so that all the devils and all the world (not to mention the wretched, raging Jews) should not overthrow this.

87 Thus says Moses, Gen 49:10: "The scepter shall not be taken away from Judah.

until Shiloh comes. Here it is decided that Shiloh or Messiah shall come from the tribe of Judah, just as there is no doubt about the snakes, no matter how poisonous they are. Item, 5 Mos. am 18, 15., he thus speaks, "God will raise up a prophet for you from among your brethren, like me, whom you shall hear." Follows [v. 18. f.], "I will (saith God) raise up unto them a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him: and whatsoever man will not hear him, that will I myself avenge."

Here it is written that Mary is of the tribe of Judah and David, no more proof is needed; the Jews are obligated to obey this shiloh and prophet before others, as Moses commanded here and God Himself commanded. Now this Shiloh and prophet said that his mother Mary was of the tribe of Judah and David, so he commanded his evangelist Matthew to write it. Therefore the prickly Jews herewith have their answer: If they do not believe Mose that he speaks such things of Mary, then it is not necessary, nor are they worthy that they should believe Matthew or hear some Christians nor believe some truth, but Shem Hamphoras, yes, Sham Haperes 2) they should believe. Such faith belongs to such saints.

We Christians know (and no devil nor Jew can deny) that Messiah or Shiloh must come from the tribe of Judah and the house of David. If he now has no father, but only a mother, then the mother must certainly also be David's daughter. There can be no doubt about that, because her son, Messiah, must be from the house of David. Summa, whoever believes that Jesus, born of the virgin Mary, is the right Messiah, has already confessed, sealed and proved that his mother Mary must be of the house of David, as well and certainly as Joseph, her bridegroom, and much more certainly.

90 Yes, here we have a clash with the Jews: they do not want to have Jesus as their Messiah, so they flicker at us with their venomous, blasphemous barbed words about Joseph and his family.

1) "beweiset" is missing in the Wittenberg.

2) In the editions: Hamperes.

Mary; for they care not much whether Mary be of the house of David or not. And if they had seen for themselves that she was born of David, like Solomon and other of his children, yet they would not believe that Jesus, their son, was Messiah. They do not care about the son, they do not want it; they know well, the husks and false mouths, if Jesus is Messiah, that it is no longer necessary to ask whether Mary is of the house of David.

(91) It is about this same son that we Christians are concerned. For if he is not Messiah, we do not ask where his mother Mary comes from, no more than where Sarah (Isaac's mother) or other unknown women come from. But if he is Messiah, God says to the Jews through Moses, "Him you shall hear." And do we Christians believe the evangelists and apostles the high, some, great main piece, that JEsus is Christ or Messiah, why should we not also believe all the other lesser 1) pieces? For he who does not believe nor want to believe that Jesus is Messiah, does not need to know who or where his mother is; indeed, it would be good for him if he had never heard a word from the whole Scripture, even better if he had never been born. For God hath put all things upon the man, hath ordained all things, hath directed all things, hath given all things into his hand: he that hath, the same shall have all things; he that hath not, the same shall have nothing; so it is said.

And how would we do, if Saint Matthew and Saint Lucas had not described such a cord of birth? How many things are undescribed, as St. John speaks at the last. And to landmarks he himself writes much that Matthew, Marcus, Lucas have omitted. Which Christian would not like to know what the Lord did the thirty years before his baptism? St. Paul alone has described Jesus much more gloriously and abundantly, as he is Messiah, than all others; nor does he go through with his mother and gender so briefly, that he only indicates her once, yet without a name, Gal. 4, 4: "He was born of a woman," and Rom. 1, 3: "Who was born of the seed of David, according to the flesh." He knows, the dear

1) Wittenberger: low.

Apostles, if this main thing is that Jesus Messiah is believed, then everything that is the truth must be found, or must not be necessary to find: "For in Him (says He) are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" [Col. 2, 3.], so that the Holy Spirit then does not allow anything false to be taught or believed.

But the Jews, the circumcised saints, are proud, boastful, and stiff-necked against us cursed, wretched Gentiles, thinking that not we, but they alone have the holy Scriptures; therefore, what we teach about baptism, sacrament, keys, and other articles of the New Testament is ridiculous to them, because they do not find it in their book. They think that everything must be in their book alone, or could not be right. So also, because they do not find in their book these words: Mary is David's daughter, or of the house of David, they grumble and reproach themselves against it, as if they were sure that it must be nothing.

94 I will pay them in their own coin and say that they are not Jews either, for there is not a letter in the holy Scriptures about these Jews, and they are not able to prove from their book that they are Jews or Israel's seed; I dare to deny them that. Further I say with right earnestness and on my conscience: If there were nothing more than the Old Testament, I would conclude, and no man shall persuade me otherwise, that these present Jews must be about a basic soup of all loose bad boys, flowed together from all over the world, who have gathered and scattered to and fro in the countries, and scattered to and fro in the countries, like the Tattern or Gypsies and the like, to burden the people with usury, to explore and betray the countries, to poison water, to burn, to steal children, and to do other all kinds of assassinating harm; as brother Richardus writes in the Alcoran, 2) of the assassins who are sent by the Saracens all over the world to cunningly strangle the worldly lords and to murder what they can, whether they have thus

2) This paper is included in No. 56 of this volume.

They are called Ishmaelites, and they are able to take over no doubt also to the blow. But the same prince was much lands that are not their own and without lords. You may too clever for such a smokehouse. But nevertheless, the read about them in the 10th chapter of the Alkoran. boys tried it.

95 Such an opinion should be strengthened for me by (97) Yes, I say, I would consider these Jews to be the histories written about the Jews, which are learned such loose, bad boys, and not true Israelites, if there were more and more every day all over the world, about which nothing more than the Old Testament. For the Old they are often expelled, burned and slain, as is reported Testament tells us about Jews who were in the land of in that book. Thus one sees also how gladly they intrude Canaan and still should be, and if they were led away themselves with the lords and noblemen, give medicine because of their sin, they should have come back home before; item, art with signs and letters against all kinds of long ago, according to the promise of Moses 5 Mos. 4, 31. weapons and iron, so that they have filled Christendom. 3 Mos. 26, 44. But since this did not happen, there is no For even the village priests and sextons with such other way to think, than that they perished in time, and smokehouse circumvented, with which we found in the perished completely (like Moab, Ammon and other visitation many of the books of the name nations), or even changed into another nation, and Tetragrammaton, Ananisapta, and many strange prayers, remained nothing 5) but a lazy bunch of foreign boys or signs, names of angels and devils, which are certainly gypsies, who circumcise themselves and pretend to be Hebrew. So we also learned how they helped the Jews, because they do not keep any part of Moses or the noblewomen from the diseases to the churchyard, that prophets. But that they praise the Old Testament, we they undoubtedly laughed in their fists. have better neither them. That they circumcise

I heard about thirty years ago how a Jew had infiltrated Duke Albrecht of Saxony, who also taught him sign of Jewish kind or blood, but a real pit of murder, full of all kinds of wickedness and malice, to damage and such art against all kinds of weapons that he should not of all kinds of wickedness and malice, to damage and be able to be stabbed, hewn, shot 2c. Oh, these are fine weigh down country and people. Thus one also finds in arts, to lead the lords in such a way that they should perish the "Beggars' Book" that they speak Rothwelsch, since cunningly. But Duke Albrecht was wise, wanted to be sure there is much Hebrew among them, as a sign that they of the art beforehand, rode out into the field with the 1) are with or from the Jews. Jew and said: "Jew, I must try the art on you, go out and 98. but because the New Testament testifies that the stab the Jew, so that he lay there dead, and even his Jews shall be scattered among all the Gentiles, and Shem Hamphoras, Tetragrammaton, and others could not Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the help his smokehouse. That you (said the duke), you times of the Gentiles be fulfilled (that is, until the end of knave, how should you have led me away for my life! Yes, the world), as our Lord saith, Luc. 21:24, for Christ shall he might even have laughed softly in his fist. Now it was sit for ever, and no other Messiah shall come: therefore I better that the duke tried on the Jew, than that the Jew must believe that yet .Some, and very few, of the Jews should have intertwined with the duke. I also have a must remain in the world, but shall not have dominion of their own, but shall sit on an uncertain footing, as the 59th crystal with me, which was Duke Frederick of Saxony's, Psalm v. 11. 12. prophesies, in the spirit and person of which my present most gracious lord, Duke John Christ and his people: "God maketh me to see my air in Frederick 2) has given me, which is with golden Hebrew mine enemies. He- letters and signs,

1) Wittenberg and Erlangen: den.

2) Thus the Wittenberg edition correctly. In the other editions, "Friedrich" is missing.

3) Wittenberger: versuchens.

4) "in" is missing in the Wittenberger and in the Erlanger.

5). Erlanger: "remain".

choke them not, that my people forget not; but scatter them with thy might, O LORD our shield, and thrust them down." And must go to them, as Cain, thy fratricide, Gen. 4, 14.: "Thou shalt be Nogvonod [xxx xx] upon the earth, inactive and fugitive, that we call nowhere home, sitting on the cuckold and scales, having neither certain foot nor room.

99) Nevertheless, because they are so eager to pick up and collect the loose, renegade, defective Christians, in whom they certainly gather nothing good, and have now done so for many years, the Israelite blood will have become quite mixed, impure, watery and savage, who have very soon learned from them to attack and murder the Christians. Again, the Jews did not learn anything good from them, so masters and disciples practiced among themselves, sharpened and improved until they became such a murdering pit and the devil's basic soup; for a renegade Christian becomes a bitter enemy of the Christians.

Let this be said of the pride of the wretched Jews, who boast of their holy Scriptures as if no one else had them; yet they must enjoy our New Testament, where they are supposed to be Jews, and have nothing else to prove it. Neither is there anyone who has less holy scripture than the Jews; let us see.

If the Jews had ears or eyes to hear or see, they would easily be told and shown that there must be more than one book of the holy Scriptures, and not the Old Testament alone, since they have heard and understood Moses and the prophets, and yet do not understand. For they must confess that the Messiah is promised in the holy Scriptures. Now when he comes, he will not be dumb or lame, but will speak and do better than Moses, David, Solomon, or any of the prophets. From such speech and deeds a book will be written. For he shall cause it to be written, even as Moses wrote his preaching and doings, and Isaiah his, and so on. This book of Messiah must now be much better, holier and more glorious than Moses and all the Old Testament.

Testament, because Messiah must not only be holy, like Moses and the prophets, but must be the most holy and prophet above all prophets. Therefore, his book must also be the most holy, above all the holy books in the Bible.

We cursed goyim do not invent such things, but Moses has announced such things clearly to his people, namely that another book of the holy scripture should come, which they should accept. For so he speaks 5 Mos. am 18, 15. (as said): "A prophet from your brothers will God raise up for you, like me, you shall hear him." I hope that the Jews, as poisonous evil worms they are, will not be able to say that we have invented this saying. Now let us hear the words, we want to carry in nothing from own Kops, as they are used to carry into the scripture their raving, insane glosses.

Moses does not speak in that place of his person, as he was born of his father, but of his office, as he was called or raised up by God to be a prophet; that is, as God raised me up from among your brethren to be a prophet, so will he raise up another prophet from among your brethren. This other prophet cannot be Samuel, David, Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah, or any of those who were in the Old Testament; For they were all under Moses, teaching what Moses (as a prophet of God) commanded and promised or proclaimed, namely circumcision, the Ten Commandments, the laws of the priesthood, principality, worship, temple and what was to be taught in the whole state and regiment and to the people and Old Testament, none may teach or promise anything else without what Moses commanded and promised.

If this other prophet is to do with his prophecy as Moses did, he must establish other commandments, laws and rights, other priesthood, principality, worship, temple and government. But if he should teach nothing else than what Moses taught, then it would be Moses himself, or the old prophets who have been under Moses, and would not be like Moses is. What is Moses doing, that he promises with useless words, "God will raise up another prophet like him, whom they shall hear"? So much more would he have said: When that prophet comes, you shall hear me (that is, my prophecy). But now he gives up his mastery, office, and prophetia, and sends them to that prophet, saying, "Him shalt thou hear." For that they should hear Moses and his prophets, he had done before, and all the prophets have done after, to the point of great weariness.

105) The same testifies when he introduces God Himself, who says Deut. 18:18: "I will raise up a prophet for them from among their brethren, like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall preach the things which I will call him" 2c. These words and sermon of the other prophet must be other words and sermon than Moses' word and sermon; for they are to be future words and not yet given, because Moses' word was put into Moses' mouth on Mount Sinai forty years before, and was also written by Moses at that time. Therefore Moses took good care against the naughty Jews, because he announced to them brightly enough that another book, more holy than his, would have to come through the other prophet, and thus also another priesthood, worship, people and law would have to be established.

Accordingly, all the prophets cry out in unison with Moses that Messiah should be a prophet and priest who should preach a different and new message, as Moses preached here. Isa. 2, 3. 4, 2. Many Gentiles will say, "Let us go up to the house of the Lord, that he may teach us his ways; for from Zion shall go forth a law, and from Jerusalem the word of the Lord." Do you hear here that it has not gone out, like Mosi's law and word, but it shall go out in the future, and be a new and different word. Isa. 61, 1: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; therefore hath he anointed me (to the Messiah, or

1) "in" is missing in the Erlanger.

2) Walch and the Erlanger: shouted.

Anointed One), that I should preach the gospel to the wretched, to heal the afflicted hearts" 2c. Ps. 110, 4: "You are a priest forever, after the manner of Melchizedek." Zach. 9, 10.: "He shall preach peace from sea to sea, even to the end of the world." Isa. 9, 6.: "He will be a prince of peace," that is, as Zechariah also says on 9, 10., "putting away horse and chariot," and, Isa. 11, 4., "ruling without sword."

107. If he is to rule without a sword, and yet last and keep peace, he will not have to be a king like David and all other kings (who cannot rule without a sword), nor teach about their worldly law, and thus his kingdom must be far different from another kingdom, neither a worldly kingdom, which is nothing without a sword and its law, and can have no peace. Also, if he is to be a priest, preacher and prophet, who is to rule in peace, how can he maintain such a regime, which must have no peace, and so far right, especially no eternal peace, as yet the prophets say of him? Israel had peace under Solomon, but so far that they themselves cried out about him, 3) that he had overestimated them 4) and sucked them dry; nevertheless it was no eternal peace. Summa, it must be another thing with this other prophet, as it was with Moses, all prophets, kings and all the world, and still is; or Moses must be a liar with all his prophets. He should not be like other prophets or kings, that is what the holy scripture of the Old Testament wants; therefore his book, the New Testament, must also be different and higher than the Old Testament.

108. but no one is so gross and nonsensical as to confirm all these things in Moses and the prophets, as Jeremiah 31:31, who, after all, despises too much these high-souled, shitty (circumcised) saints, and may without leave of all the Talmudists and rabbis (O, that this and that might pass him!) lead out and say, "Behold, the time cometh, saith the LORD, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and Judah." O, Jere-

3) Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: scream.

4) Erlanger: "übersetzt".

mia, drive beautifully, where do you want to go? You don't know how the rabbis will turn your nose after 2000 years with their glosses, which are better than your bright text. Shall a new covenant and testament come? Where will the old one remain? Where will the circumcised saints remain, who do not want to know anything else nor suffer, also with the Christians, the cursed goyim, because only the old one? Shall you be so bold and throw away Moses with the whole holy old scripture, in addition with the Talmudists, and so highly and deeply learned saints, that you may prophesy before their nose of a new book and testament?

And, what is even worse, you insolent heretic may say thus: "Not as the covenant was, which I made with their fathers, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt" 2c. O Lord God! God have mercy on you, poor Jeremiah, how mad you have become that you so purely abolish the old covenant, which surely was made by God Himself, as you yourself confess and say: "which I made with their fathers"; you also mention the time, as if you were not mad, "when I took them by the hand and led them out of Egypt". Well, you can't be helped, you want to be condemned by the circumcised saints; so I won't ask for you, nor interpret your words differently, because the circumcised saints couldn't stand it, might make it worse. 1)

110) But here the learned Jews give us cursed goyim a good haircut, 2) because they write that our Jesus himself said, Matth. 5, 17: "he did not come to abolish the law and the prophets, but to fulfill them, and not one letter nor one tittle should pass away, everything must happen, before heaven and earth pass away" 2c. There you have it, you cursed goyim. Well, which man could have provided more and more that the Jews would have been so highly instructed to teach us Christians also the New Testament? Surely a brazen dog at Jerusalem will make them so wise with barking, or a fresh shame will make them so wise.

1) This proverb otherwise also in the form: "Uebel wird Aergeres. Cf. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. X, 365, § 11.

2) Give hair off - prepare a delicate defeat.

Haperes have filled with great smoke (spirit I would say) that they understand so powerfully what fulfilling the law means.

The wretched Jews have never known all their lives what the least law is, much less what the fulfillment of the law is, and they can never understand it (as long as they are such Jews). Other people belong to this group, as St. Paul, Rom. 3, 21: "God's righteousness is revealed, testified by the law and the prophets", and Joh. 1, 17: "The law was given through Moses, but grace and truth came through Jesus Christ"; St. Peter, Apost. 15, 10, 11.: "This is the burden which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear, but believing, by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, we are saved, even as they were saved." Dear one, tell me how it is possible that the rangers (rabbis, I would say) and the Jews in their school should understand such high words, who have done nothing all their lives, and still do nothing but dig in the shame of Haphre with their rebuke?

I will say something less, how can a Jew understand what is said, Matth. 7, 12: "What you want people to do to you, you also do to them; this is the law and the prophets. Here almost all of Mosi's laws are lost. Item, Matth. 22, 37. ff: "Love your neighbor as yourself; the commandment is equal to the first: You shall love God with all your heart. In these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Moses understood it well, as he says 2 Mos. 34, 6: "Lord, Lord, merciful God, who forgives sin and no one is innocent before you", and David, Ps. 130, 3: "Lord, where you will look upon sin, who can remain before you?" Item, Ps. 51, 8: "Behold, thou lovest the truth in secret, and teachest me the secret wisdom." Jeremiah also says that he will not write the new covenant on tablets of stone, like the covenant that never entered the heart of any fleshly Jew, nor did he understand it, much less keep it; as Jeremiah says, "They did not keep that covenant," but that he will write the new covenant on living tablets, in the hearts, so that there will be living, burning books of the new covenant.

The words shall be, and so may God's will be done.

Now, of such living Scripture written in the heart, it will be necessary to speak outwardly and to write a book, as Moses had to write a book of the Scripture in the tablets of stone; for there will be so little, and much less, that will be done secretly, which this New Testament or Scripture would do in the heart, neither that Testament which is written in tablets of stone and not in the heart. But of this we speak and know, 1) if we are true Christians; for even the pope with his church knows nothing of this, neither does he respect it. The Jews know as much about it as a sow knows about the Psalter.

This certainly proves that a new testament should have come over the old, so that the pride and glory of the Jews is nothing but a peres and fie on you, since they want no testament nor holy scripture to be without the old. But it does not help them; their own Old Testament is against them, condemns them with its glory, because it prophesies so aridly that the old covenant should not do it, Moses' regiment should be over, Messiah should not rule according to it, but the New Testament must do it. Just as Moses gave up his office and gave way to the new prophet. Therefore, the Jews must accept the New Testament, baptism and our faith, or be eternally lost. The Old Testament, Moses himself and all the prophets will not help them, but stand against them and condemn them to hell.

(115) But here comes the question again, whether Messiah is come? If he has come, then Jews, Gentiles and all the world are obliged to accept the New Testament, not only as a holy scripture, but as the most holy scripture above the old holy scripture. Now it is sufficiently proved that Messiah came 1500 years ago; then we Christians, first of all many thousand children of Israel, then we Gentiles, accepted such a New Testament, also 1500 years ago, and will accept it until the end of the world; but the Gentiles, the other Israelites, they would not accept it, spurned them such a small thing. They have thus spoiled the food and mangled the joy, out of great arrogance and stubbornness; after that they wanted to pout and grunt, since 2) they found nothing in their hunger. So it is that those who 3) proudly boast and boast that they alone have the holy Scriptures before all the world, they have not one leaf nor 4) letter of them, as far as the mind is concerned, for the soul's use and good; we do not speak of the body's and the body's use. For that which they seek in the Scriptures they shall never find; it is not in them, neither is it ever found in them, so waveless as in the most vile book that is made upon the earth. Messiah is promised inside, but not the Messiah they want and dream of.

We Christians have both books of the holy scriptures, the old and the holy, and the new and most holy. The old promises the Messiah and says: he shall surely come and be given. The new one calls and says: he shall surely come and be given. Now if the Jews could accept the new book, the most holy scripture, as many did 1400 years ago, they would understand that circumcision and all old holiness should give way to baptism and the new holiness that is above that holiness. 5) For at the time when Messiah and his book were still in the old book, that is, in the promise, there was certainly no holy scripture but the old book, in which promise all the saints were saved who hoped for such promised Messiah. For he is the same Messiah, the one who promised those, but who came and appeared to us, so that no one else could be hoped for, nor could come.

But after the Messiah and his book have come forth and been given to us, there is no longer any promise to wait for. And if the old book is a certain witness to God that the Messiah has come to us, the new book is still much more of a promise.

1) Erlanger: "will". This is not a misprint, because "we" is given as a variant.

2) Erlanger: that.

3) Wittenberger: they.

4) Erlanger: another.

5) "is" is missing in the Erlanger.

sure witness of God that the Messiah has come. So the two cherubim look with their faces towards each other into the mercy seat, that is, Old and New Testament, say that Jesus Christ, the Son of Mary, is the Savior of the world and the right mercy seat before God, against our sin, death, devil and hell. Thus is fulfilled that which is said: "Israel shall dwell safely", which the Gentiles want to have understood from the yeasts of this life.

But now the Jews do not accept these things, they have neither old nor new book, neither God the Promiser, nor Messiah the Messenger, they hover between heaven and earth, and touch nowhere, neither old nor new book, as Zechariah 5:1 shows the flying letter, which he calls maledictio, curse; for their teaching is vain cursing; otherwise they truly know nothing in the Scriptures. For first of all, it is certain that they do not understand the promises of Messiah. Secondly, they do not understand the Ten Commandments, because without Messiah they cannot be understood. Thirdly, they cannot understand what the ceremonies mean. In addition, because the priesthood is fallen, they also do not understand the manner or the form of the ceremonies. Fourth, no Jew understands the noble, exquisite examples or lives of the fathers, Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, David, Summa, the whole people of Israel. For they do not know what right faith and right good works are. This is proven by their blind, stupid, miserable Talmud glosses, Commentary, and finally also their Grammatica. That is why they have nothing left in the Old Testament. It is said: "I am the light" (says Messiah [Joh. 8, 12]), where this is not, what else can there be but vain darkness?

119) Let this be said of the blunt and harsh answer that one should give to the stiff-necked Jews to their prickly poisonous question, namely that Moses 1 Mos. 49, 10. and 5 Mos. 18, 15. testifies powerfully, and with him all the prophets unanimously and abundantly, that Mary is Messiah's mother, and must be from the tribe of Judah and the house of David. If they do not believe Mosi, they believe much less the evangelists. Also we know Chrieven such an answer is good and certain enough, as said, because the son Messiah must come from David, and we believe that his mother is a virgin, then she must of course also be David's flesh and blood and natural daughter: otherwise her son Messiah would not have to be David's, but of another blood, because his mother would be of another blood, especially if she, a virgin, should give birth without man's blood and flesh:

120) Over such testimony of the Old Testament we will now see the New Testament, how abundantly and powerfully it testifies that Mary must be David's daughter. First, St. Matthew begins his book, Matth. 1:1: "This is the book of the birth of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham. Here you hear that Jesus Christ or Messiah is David's son and Abraham's son; so his mother must be David's and Abraham's daughter, because she is a virgin who gave birth without a man, as the evangelist proves afterwards. And if St. Matthew had not written a word more about this than this beginning of his book, this would be enough to prove that Mary must be from the house of David. For the son Messiah proves where the mother is from, not the mother (as the foolish Jews seek), where the son is from, or that he is from the tribe of Judah. Now the evangelist does abundantly well, and counts three times fourteen members of Abraham, that is forty-two members, so that it may be said of any one member, Whose daughter is Mary, and Jesus is his son, as he is David's and Abraham's son; that thus forty-two times Matthew alone in the line of the lineage confesses that Mary is of the tribe of Judah and of the blood of David. And summa, as often as Jesus is called Christ or Messiah in the Old and New Testament, so often Mary, his mother, is proved there to be David's daughter.

(121) But that some are troubled, why the evangelist turns the words in the last parts in such a way, Joseph leaves, puts Mariam, whom he does not lead down in the cord from David, as he leads Joseph: here we should (if we knew nothing else) give glory to the Holy Spirit and think that Matthew is very much in favor of the friendship of Mary.

He knew Joseph, her husband, so well with his friendship, and it is not to be believed that he should bear witness forty-two times alone in the line of the family that Christ is David's son, and yet lead the mother from a foreign tribe, as if he had become mad and foolish in the last generation.

But let us consider the words of the evangelist, whether he could also lead Mariam from David, as well as Joseph. It is certain that St. Matthew leads the cord through Solomon, and St. Lucas through his brother Nathan: these are two cords, but of the same blood as two brothers, from David; but in King Jehoash they come together, and must come together in one cord, because 2 Chron. 22, 9. 10. it says that Athaliah killed all the royal seed except Joash, and as the text says, "There was none left of the house of Ahaziah to be king." Here Solomon's line goes down, that Christ indeed comes from his blood, as according to the line of his brothers and fathers, but not from his body's descendants, but, as Lucas says, from Nathan his brother.

123 Whether the two evangelists then leave each other again with the cord, I leave to act now; they remain in the house of David, that is certain; but in the grandfather of Joseph they are one, both arrive at the same time at Matthan or, as Lucas calls him, Matthes. I respect that he calls Matthan by the name of Matthes.

nach gemeiner Laien Sprache genannt sei, wie wir Deutschen Johannes, Hans, Hänsel, Henno Einen Namen machen. Item, Nicolaus, Nickel, Claus 2c. We Germans pronounce the name Matthes scantily and rightly, as it is written in Hebrew, Matthath, Thaphato, et A puro vel Italico [that is, with an x, provided with Raphe, and with a pure or Italian A].

Let us remember this Matthes, it is because of him that Abraham and David's blood are close to. Messiah, almost in the last Hans. For Messiah has now come down from above to this Matthes' house, and we have him in this house for sure; and from this house alone he must come, putting behind him what is left of brothers or Cousin 1) Houses are none of our business; Matthes' house is where he is. If we now had nothing more than this Matthes, we would have plenty to answer those who are concerned about Mary and Joseph being of one tribe and house. For since Messiah is in Matthes' house, and must come from Matthes' house, the evangelist has thus clearly and brightly enough proved that both Mary and Joseph must not only be of the tribe of Judah and of the house of David, but also of one house of Matthes, the grandfather Joseph; because Messiah must come from Matthes' house. But if Messiah is in Matthes' house, then his mother is certainly also inside, as she, a virgin, shall give birth to Messiah from Matthes', David's, Abraham's house. For in whichever father or house Messiah is, in the same his mother Mary must certainly be beforehand (as said above), which means she is a virgin, has no husband; virginity does, which leads Messiah with his mother through all fathers, except himself.

What was the reason that St. Matthew could not prove to us how Mary and Joseph are of one stock, house and father? It is because we have not noticed in which father the Messiah is, in which his mother should also be, because she is supposed to be a virgin and cannot give her child to anyone but herself and her father. For Jerome, Lyra and others write that Joseph and Mary are therefore of one sex, to prove that he took them in marriage according to the law of Moses, Numbers 36:6, 7, so that the property would not be separated into foreign tribes, this is much too cold and too lazy, also too high up, above David, and yet it helps nothing; as Burgensis also rightly and well refutes. Why did we not look at this Matthes? We would have come closer to it, and so close that [it] cannot be closer.

For since Messiah must come from Matthes' house and nowhere else, let us see what comes from the same Hanse. First, Jacob, his son, comes out, as Matthew writes. From this Jacob's house Messiah did not come out, nor did he come in, but Joseph, his son, came out. Now we must look again at Matthew's house, which comes out the other time. Mary cannot come out yet, nor can she be his daughter, although she is inside with her son Messiah; otherwise Joseph would have taken his father's sister or his grandfather's natural daughter, which God forbade through Moses, Deut. 18:12. Much less can it be another daughter of Matthes who will be the mother of Messiah, which must be Mary alone. For the daughters leave the father's house for other houses, therefore the scripture does not count a woman's cord. So Matthes must have another son (at least), in whom Messiah comes from him, who is Eli, as Lucas writes. This begat a daughter, Maria Jakobi, it is not; and after it a younger daughter, Maria, it is. If he has more sons or daughters, go his way; for Messiah must come from a virgin, Eli's daughter.

Here we have the mother of Messiah, who is a sibling with Joseph, and both are niftel of one grandfather, Matthes. So, I think, it is strong enough to prove that Mary and Joseph are of one stock and blood, because they are of one grandfather's sibling, two brothers' children, and cannot be closer, they would be bodily brothers and sister. But it was permitted by Moses in this people that siblings would marry each other, that is, a grandfather would give his two nieces or two brothers would give their children together in this people, so that the evangelist also calls Joseph Mary's husband and Mary Joseph's bride; as if he wanted to say: Because you hear that Joseph is Mary's husband, you know them 1) well, that they are of one blood and siblings according to the common way.

So the evangelist brought the Messiah, his mother with him, from above, through all the fathers' houses, to Matthew's house, then to Eli's house, and from there to Joseph's house, where he was born and brought up, not from his own body, but from the body of his bride in marriage, or in his married state, and Messiah is his legitimate son, and Joseph his legitimate father, but only from the virgin Mary. Since we now have 2) so much, that Joseph and Mary are niftel of the great father Matthes, we have enough, and it is certain that Mary is of the house of David with Joseph. Whoever now wants to continue to argue about the two brothers Jacob and Eli, whether Jacob took his brother's daughter Mary and gave her to his son Joseph, or whether Eli took his brother's son Joseph and gave him to his daughter Mary, may do so; it is sufficient for us that they, the two fathers of Joseph and Mary, were sons of Matthes.

129) Jerome writes that Jacob is Joseph's natural father according to St. Matthew's text, but Eli, whom he also calls Eliakin and Joakim (for all three should be one name, as with us Nicolaus, Nickel, Claus), is his father according to Lucas' text, that is, his sister-in-law or cousin according to the way in which daughter-husband is also called son, and son-wife is also called daughter, and according to the law in which a brother must allow himself to be called and be the father of his deceased brother's children. That pleases me well, and better than Eusebius with Lyra, who means, Jacob took his brother Eli widow, and with the same Joseph begot. Since Mary (Joakim or Eli daughter) and Joseph would be children of the same mother and natural siblings, Moses does not suffer, 3 Mos. 18, 6.

130 Here falls the old question: Which evangelist among the two, Matthew and Lucas, describes the paternal cord, because it is obvious that Matthew leads the fraternal cord from Solomon down to Ochosias, as is proven above. First of all, Lyram and his part must be let go with their opinion, because they go too far from the path, so that he also holds that Nathan is not David's natural son, but the prophet (who was probably as old as David himself), and is with the other two brothers, Shimea and Shobab, 1 Chron. 3:5, of Uriah and Bethsaba's descent, whom David afterwards chose to be his sons, 3) and only Sa-

1) "they" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) "nun" is missing in the Erlanger.

3) Kōrkinder --- adopted children.

lomo was Bethsaba son of David; there he leads the saying, Proverbs 4, 3: "I was a certain son of my mother" 2c. This is nothing; in this way Christ would be Uriah's son, who was a Hitheus, a Gentile, though more pious than many thousand Israelites.

On the other hand, it is enough for a Christian that both evangelists introduce children of David, whether father or brother, and both remain in the house of David, counting no children of the body or foreign blood. From which then Christ comes, he comes from David. I keep it with those who give Lucas the paternal line, except for Eli; For since the cord from Matthes, the grandfather, 1) points one part to Jacob, the other to Eli, he must probably put Joseph, Eli's son, that is, son-in-law, for the reason, as he himself says, that Joseph is putativus Pater, putative father of Christ, not natural father, as the cord would have demanded, since Mary, his bride, would not have been a virgin mother, and the scriptural way does not suffer him to carry the woman's cord; nor is he putativo, supposed way, One Body with his bride Mary, as he is also supposed Father of Christ. Summa, as said, the great father Matthes makes it all bad, that Mary and Jesus are one house and father's children.

132) It moves those that Matthew always says, genuit, genuit, he has begotten or given birth to; therefore they think that Matthew speaks of the natural cord that follows from birth from father to son for and for; but Lucas speaks of the fraternal or paternal cord, which they call legalem, not adoptivam, as Lyra thinks, but since a brother according to the law (as is said) must adopt his deceased brother's children as if he were their father. This I do not believe. St. Matthew does not believe it himself and thinks nothing of it. For he knowingly leaves three members out among the kings and says: Joram begat Uziah; which is impossible, because Uziah was born in the fourth member of Joram at 100 years after Joram's death, in addition in the brotherly line.

comes from Nathan, not from Solomon, since Joram is the origin. Likewise he does among the princes after the Babylonian prison, since he leaves much outside, counts alone fourteen, so Lucas counts probably twenty-two, and could not be called: Asar begat Zadok, so perhaps in between two or three are omitted; therefore the genuit does nothing Hiezu that Matthew should lead the paternal cord.

He has his way of speaking, genuit, he begat him 2c. So that he does not mean anything else than: he is born from him or from his blood, as we also speak in German: Carolus is of Maximilian origin or born. He shows this also with these words in the title: "This is the book of the birth of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." Christ is not born nor begotten of David; nor is he his son, because he comes from him by blood. So birth here cannot only mean the personal birth of Christ, if he counts forty births of his ancestors. But Lucas leads the paternal cord. For he boasts in the beginning that he has diligently investigated everything and wants to write it properly, which we must believe, because we believe the greater and everything else. For such registers were well known among the Jews, have it all (as their way gewest) diligently written, as there are two examples Chronica [and] Ezra; also Moses, who describes Jacob's and Esau's family diligently.

134 But Matthew freely confesses that he does not want to count everything properly, saying that he wants to count three times. fourteen, from Abraham to Christ. And because he found fourteen patriarchs, he would take no more than fourteen kings and fourteen princes. 2) Although the scribes, through no fault of the evangelist, omitted one king, Jehoiakim, the father of Jechoniah, and there are only thirteen kings, as St. Jerome also shows the lack in the Greek books. Lucas, however, makes four times fourteen, taking them all, even those who were not kings, as Nathan and his descendants. To the same Luca is also by the scribes the fourth member after Noah.

1) "zwieset" ---- splits into two. Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: "zwieset".

2) Erlanger: name.

Kenan, which cannot be, after all. Therefore, I consider it that we compare them as much as we can; there you a futile effort to compare all names against each other, may ask Joseph[us] and Philo. because we do not have the registers. And it is not written I want to set the whole friendship, according to my to us Gentiles in particular (but to the Jews), who knew it idea or concept; whoever does it better, have thanks. well. That is enough.

Levi.

Abraham.

Aaron. |

David.

Zadok. |

| Joas.

Jojada. |

| Zerubabel. | Matthes.

Zacharias. Elisabeth.

Anna.

John Baptista.

Eli. Jacob.

Maria Cleophä. Mary. Joseph. Salome. Zebedee.

1st Jacob. 2. Simon. JEsus. 1. jacobus major.

3. joses.)

2. John Evang.

This Mary, our Lord's mother's sister or his mother's wife, is called in the Gospels Mary Jacobi, from the son; is also called Mary Cleopheh, from the other man, who was still alive on the Easter day of Christ, Luke 24:18. So Judah is also called Jacobi, perhaps that he is Jacobi's brother, from Alphaeo, the first husband of Mary Jacobi. These are called our Lord's brothers because they are children of his mother's sister.

137 The angel Gabriel also says, Luc. 1, 36, that Elizabeth is Mary's mother or friend; this cannot be otherwise than that Mary's mother was Elizabeth's sister, which we will call Anna, as she is called everywhere. But because Elizabeth is from the priestly tribe, as the angel says, from the daughters of Aaron, therefore I place the two sisters, Anna and Elizabeth, in the line of Aaron, so Joachim or Eli 1) takes the one sister from the tribe of David.

Annas, and Zacharias from the priestly tribe the other one, Elizabeth. Thus Mary is Aaron's daughter from the priestly tribe by her mother, and David's daughter from the royal tribe by her father; thus Christ is also of royal and priestly blood. And if Elizabeth is her mother and the Lord's great mother, Mary would be a sibling of John the Baptist, and he would be a near cousin of our Lord Jesus Christ in the third generation.

Now Salome wants to be something special, misses an advantage with the Lord, because she asks him to place her two sons, one on the right and the other on the left in his kingdom [Matth. 20, 21], that I think she must have listened to him very closely. Therefore I set her as Joseph's sister; she thought that Mary Jacobi was her mother's sister, but I am her father's sister; therefore I have the right of way with my children over the mother's sister with her children. Because Joseph is no longer a child

1) "or Eli" is missing in the Erlanger.

*This A indicates the priestly tribe, while the other line indicates the royal tribe. ) In the editions erroneously (just as afterwards in § 144) "Joseph" instead of: Josés.

my two sons are the closest friends of Jesus, and she thinks that Jesus is Joseph's son, as everyone thought at that time [Luc. 3, 23]. Against this the others grumbled, without doubt the children of the mother-sister, and perhaps some more with them, who also wanted to be the greatest, as we read in the Gospel. Hereby Jacobus the Great and John Evangelista also become cousins of the Lord, with the name as close as Jacobus and Simon, Juda and Joseph, but one limb further according to the blood. For Joseph is not the natural father of the Lord, only his mother Mary and Salome are daughters of two brothers 2c.

139 From this it can be seen how the Lord's closest friends have approached him in a human way, and again he presents himself as another human being, Phil. 2:7, and he also holds himself friendly and brotherly to them. And there shines no splendor of majesty, but the utmost servile form.

Some, like Bonaventure, have their devotion here, but with a free conscience, that John Evangelista and Mary Magdalene were bridegroom and bride in the wedding at Cana, as the sequence of St. John Evangelista reads. On the other hand, another one may have his (but free) opinion that Simon or Juda was the bridegroom, and the bride was also a near mermaid in the other or third member; for the Evangelia call Simon of Cana and Juda Zealots, that is, of Cana. And it is well to think that bride and bridegroom must have been close friends of the Mother Mary, because she herself is there and helps to rule. For she would not so lightly mix herself in foreign or far friendship wedding, since probably other closer women would be.

But the final opinion of the evangelists, especially Matthew, with such a cord of sex, is that he wants to teach and strengthen the ignorant weak Jews, but to shut up the stiff-necked ones with these two articles: Jesus is Messiah, and Mary is a virgin. For these articles were very difficult for the pious to believe, but impossible for the stiff-necked to believe; because he was very well attended in Nazareth with father, mother and all his friendship.

He was raised and lived there for thirty years, carpentered with his father Joseph like a journeyman, did not go to school, learned nothing, likewise after his father's death he and his poor mother continued to feed each other in this way, and did not let himself be particularly remembered, but kept himself badly and quietly, like another journeyman of his kind, so that she was quite used to him and could not bear in her heart that the unlearned, coarse, poor carpenter should be taught all his life, let alone become a preacher.

Suddenly, when the thirty years were up, he left the trade, ran away, was baptized with others by St. John, and began to preach, to interpret and teach the Scriptures, and to perform miracles, to the horror of the whole world, because all the priests and teachers were lazy, cold, lumpen preachers against him. 1) This was a strange incomprehensible thing in their eyes and ears. It was even stranger that he should not only be a prophet, but the Messiah himself. O how strangely contemptuous speeches were made about it! Dear, be silent, should Jesus preach, do you think I do not know him? I have lived with him for thirty years, I know who he is and what he can do.

If you had lived, worked, eaten, and drunk with Hans N., the son of a poor citizen, from his youth until thirty years, and you knew him as well as yourself, that he had never known a letter, and that same year he wandered off to another country, where you heard that he preached and was more learned than all the doctors in the world, and that he performed miracles, you would answer the announcer. There you would hear of him that he preached and was more learned than all the doctors in the whole world, and that he performed miracles; then you would answer the announcer, "Are you foolish or are you joking? Do you think I do not know Hans N., with whom I have eaten bread for thirty years? If the clamor were great that some would begin to believe and boast that he was king or Roman emperor, you would say, "Well, he has become foolish, and the world is mad and wants to be mad; I should not be persuaded of this, I know him too well. It is the same for the Nazarenes with Jesus.

144. as he comes home again, about barely

1) Erlanger: been.

After half a year, he goes to school, stands up, takes the book of Isaiah in his hand, reads from it, sits down, and preaches a beautiful sermon, so that they are all amazed; then they all see him themselves, cannot deny that it is Jesus, whom they know very well, and look at him and say, Matth. 13, 54. ff: "Where does this wisdom and power come from? Is he not the son of a carpenter? Is not his mother's name Mary? And his brothers Jacob and Joses, Simon and Judah? and his sisters, are they not all 1) with us? Whence came all this unto him? And were they vexed with all him." Why did they fret? They could not believe that it was full of God what they heard and saw. They knew the person too well, and it was too small; therefore they thought that he had surrendered to the devil, who must do such outrageous things through him. And since the first one touched him with a word, they took him at the same hour, led him out to the city, and wanted to cut off his neck, down the rock, as a harmful person.

For he had let it be known in the lection of Isaiah that he was Messiah, since he said that the same saying was fulfilled in him, Isaiah 61:1: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, therefore the Lord hath anointed me," that is, made me a Messiah, and yet he was a beggar, as they knew him. For this he scolded them, as if they were not worthy of his miraculous deed, as Lucas indicates on the 4th, B. 16. Then they were angry and thought: Away with such a Messiah, he will cause misfortune; we know that he is a beggar and wants to be Messiah. The boy who recently helped to build a house and read shavings with us has suddenly become Messiah, that is, king of kings, and despises us, the holy people of Israel, because he does not want to do what we like 2c.

146. but it is all the more grievous, since he rose from death and ascended into heaven (but they thought that he was now dead, as he deserved to be, as a deceiver), that they should now consider this Jesus, with whom they had played (as they say) the Kötten (2), not only to be the true Messiah, but also

1) "all" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) "To play the Kötten" - to deal with someone according to favor. - The Köhde - the ankle on the horse's foot.

to accept him as Lord of heaven and earth after death; this was an unpleasant and unbearable sermon to them; they were offended by it and fell, the greater multitude, until this day; for their thoughts had to be right, God had to lie and be wrong, as they still do, and so they have lied to and broken down against Jesus, so that it cannot be said nor written.

(147) Yes, this is (as I began) the evangelist's main final work, that he would like to present Jesus to the Jews, so that they would accept him as the Messiah, and that they would let go of all the anger and would not let themselves be hindered, because he had lived so despicably with them for thirty years and had been crucified so shamefully afterwards. For he was the son of Abraham, David, and of all the fathers, counted by the cord, except for the mother Mary, who was attested a virgin by Isaiah and the Holy Spirit; not a bad son of David and of the fathers, as others were, such as Joseph, Simon, Judah, Jacob; but the only, peculiar, miraculous son, in whom the prophecy and promise made to Abraham and David and all the prophets were fulfilled. If they would accept this son, that is, the fulfillment of the prophecy and promise, then they would have grasped the right Messiah, then they would let the old testament go, with circumcision, priesthood, principality, temple, Jerusalem and all laws, which go and belong to it, because they would no longer need it. On the other hand, they would cheerfully accept the New Testament, baptism, sacrament, and all that Messiah has taught and ordained, and also hold it much, much 3) holier than the Old Testament has been, and not dwell on the fact that no holy scripture or book is more than the Old Testament, as they dream. Testament, as they dream.

The evangelist did not work in vain, along with other apostles and evangelists. Many have been converted who have accepted Jesus with great joy, and cannot be sufficiently surprised that God has fulfilled His promise so wonderfully, and yet so sweetly and kindly, before they could understand it. The others kept and still keep the saying of Isa. 53, 2. 3.: "We saw him, but there was no form that we could have desired him. He was the most despised and worthless, full of pain and sickness, so despised that people hid their faces from him: therefore we did not respect him" 2c. But whoever wants to be Kochab or Messiah to the Jews, he does not have to be shaped like that nor to be looked at, they certainly despise him, says Isaiah here:

3) A "much" is missing from Erlanger.

149) That we come to the end, the Jews, as I have said, easily believe that the line which Matthew leads is right from Abraham to Jesus, and so they stand still and listen. For at that time all the men and women of the whole tribe of Judah, of whom there were many thousands, were of Judah, and the greater part of the house of David, as well as Joseph, Mary, and their son Jesus. But when the evangelist hangs on it: "from whom is born Jesus, who is called Messiah," they recoil as if thunder struck them down, there is no more hearing, although the evangelist has introduced so many members into the string, whom he might well have taken less; as he then omits some to indicate that it is not necessary to name all of them (for they were quite happy to hear their family boast), so that this salutary article should also come to them neatly and gently.

150 St. Matthew does not only want to say from his spirit (as he has power, right and command) that Mary, a young woman, has given birth, but also brings in the prophet Isaiah to entice her kindly by her own scripture. But what does it help with the stubborn, gnarled, stiff-necked, damned Jews? They have here many martens in this saying, as they have in all others, and yet they can accomplish nothing without always tinkering with the mallet, and would gladly make one lie true with seven lies. But, as said above, let the Jews go, and ask nothing of what the devil rages through them. If there is a man's heart among them, 1) that will

With the others it is said according to the proverb: Lost like the soul of a Jew. Therefore, to strengthen and adorn our faith, let us see how ridiculous (yet poisonous) the devil acts through them this saying against St. Matthew.

From the word Alma, and the Virgin Mary.

151. first. "Behold (says Isaiah), the virgin is with child" 2c. Here the word Alma is written, of which many others, I also have written, that it is called a virgin or maid, who still walks in hair and in wreath, and has not become a woman. And if a Jew or Hebrew can show me that Alma is called a woman in the Scriptures, he shall have a hundred florins with me, God grant where I find them. For four times, and no more, is the word Alma found in the holy Scriptures. First, Genesis 24:16, about Rebekah, who describes to Moses in many words that she is not indebted to a man. Secondly, Exodus 2:8, about Moses' sister Miriam: "Then Alma went and called her mother" 2c. But Miriam could not have been ten years old at that time, as the Jews themselves must confess. Third, here Isaiah 7:14: "Behold, Alma is with child." In these three places there is an article which means singularitor unam, and no other. To the fourth, Proverbs 30:18 ff: "Three things are too strange for me, and the fourth I know not: the way of the eagle in heaven, the way of the ship in the sea, the way of the serpent upon the rock, and the way of a man upon a maid. So is the way of an adulteress, which swalloweth up and wipeeth her mouth, saying, I have done no evil."

Here, here stands (they say) Alma with a man. I do not ask whether Alma is standing there with a man; for I see it very well myself, praise God, I must not ask a Jew to show it to me. I say that one should prove to me that Alma here is called a woman and not a virgin; I would like to hear the master and admit a hundred guilders. How, if Solomon in the place (as the cursed Goj, Doctor Luther, understands it, and will not let him take it easily, if it's

1) Erlanger "jenen". Should the "jnen" of the old prints have been dissolved in this way?

(not even a hundred guilders) spoke of the vexatious misfortune in the world? since a "giver", that is, a husband, cannot find the wife's bed in God's name, and creeps after a maid or virgin, for instance, in the devil's name. Again "Gebirah" (the woman) cannot find the man's bed, in God's name, and creeps to the servant or other companion, the devil's name, has a clear 1) conscience, swallows adultery like a wolf swallows a mosquito, wipes the mouth afterwards, and no one may call her a whore. Who wants to prove it?

Because such things must be played out in darkness and secretly plotted, there are strange ways, handles and intrigues, which no Solomon nor regent can devise, or forbid, or convince, as little as he can dictate the way to the bird in the air, because the whole sky is its way, and the whole sea is the way of the ship, and goes where the wind wants to go, and the snake on the rock, which also has no cord nor straightedge, it can bend too much. It is a pity of this life that one cannot prevent secret adultery, and that (unfortunately) the husband likes a maid better than the wife, and the wife's servant better than the master; as the poet also says: Quod licet, ingraturum est. Nitimur in vetitum. Lex occasio peccati. This is what Potiphar's whore wanted to do to Joseph. Gen. 39, 7.

Nevertheless, Alma here is called a maid of the virgin, whom the man creeps after; if he brings her down, she is never a maid; if she is firm, she remains an Alma, as I have well heard in the histories that the pious virgins have cunningly brought the horny men to the women, under her name. So the Jews cannot prove that Alma here in Isaiah 7 is called a woman, because the word Alma in all Scripture means a virgin or maid; also in plurali numero, Alamothe, they cannot prove that it is called anything else but virgins or maids. Prove it otherwise, but drive nicely, so that I do not have to lose my hundred guilders so shamefully. And before that, that St. Matthaeus not become a liar; otherwise the Holy Spirit would have to be circumcised himself; that would be a pity for the beautiful feathers, that they should become Jewish.

(155) Secondly, says Isaiah, that such Alma is with child, and this should be a miracle or sign; does not say she will become pregnant, as some ravens would have liked to interpret: they had 2) to be ashamed of their own grammatica, that Hara is called conceptit, est praegnans, she is pregnant, she has conceived. But they want to turn to this, that the Prophet took a young maiden in his old age and made her pregnant; then he starts and says: Behold, Alma is pregnant and will bear a son, so that the opinion is: This is not the sign that Alma is pregnant, that the Prophet has beautifully arranged; he is her husband, but that she bears a son, and not a maiden.

Whom shall we believe now? God says: This is a sign that Alma is pregnant. The Jew says: Oh no, God denies, this is not a sign, because the prophet has made Alma pregnant. So we have here two texts; the text of Isaiah stands bright and clear: God will give you a sign, behold, Alma is with child 2c. But the Jewish text is this: "Behold, Alma has a husband and is with child by the prophet; God will give you a sign that she will bear a son, and not a daughter. You may want to ask where the high art came into the Jews, that they can dice the text and God's word so masterfully, as if they were on a double game, and put the hindmost first; also give Alma a husband, since Isaiah does not write anything about it, but says that Alma is pregnant, does not say that the prophet did it.

157. i cursed goy cannot understand from where they have such high art, without that i must think, since Judas Sharioth had suffered that his intestines were torn, and, as happens to the exalted, the bladder 4) burst: then perhaps the Jews have provided their servants with golden pots and silver

2) Erlanger: must.

3) d. i. fraudulent dice game.

4) Walch and the Erlanger: Bläse.

They had bowls with them, caught the Zudas piss (as it is must stand there alone and without a husband, and hear called) together with the other sanctuary, then ate and that she is pregnant and will bear a son; but it shall be a drank the earth 1) underneath each other, from which they special, a sign and wonder (says God), not the common get such sharp eyes that they see such and such glosses way; yes, it shall be my sign, I will give it and do it, I will in the scriptures, which neither Matthew, nor Isaiah be father and husband, she shall be mother. Now it is well himself, nor all the angels, not to mention us cursed known (it should be known by a cow) that it is not a sign goyim, can see. Or have looked their God, the Sched, in when a young wife is pregnant; what else would or should the butt, and in the same smoke hole found such written. they do, the young women, with their husbands, but to It is not written in the Scriptures, that is certain; so it become pregnant? what else are they made for? It is cannot be taken out. considered neither a sign nor a miracle, but a common

158. Therefore we cursed goyim must leave the most way and example, which is rarely lacking. holy Jews their heavenly 2) wisdom, which they have It is neither a sign nor a miracle that a pregnant found apart from the Scriptures in Judas' piss and in their woman bears and gives birth to a son, because it is the Jews' sweat, so that they alone remain wise, and common way, ordained by God, that they should not bear meanwhile let us be fools with Isaiah and Matthew, that vain daughters; but that the Jews want to make God such we remain in and with the poor, meager, dry text, since no a frivolous fool that he should call it a sign, which they such art is in it, if Judas' piss and the Jews' sweat is out, invent a sign according to their Judaic piss, since the namely, that this Alma is pregnant without man's consent, women themselves and the physicians can easily guess and bears a son without loss of her virginity. For in the whether it is a son or a daughter. But if this sign is that whole of Scripture no woman is given a child unless the Alma is pregnant without a man, then it is already nothing man or father of the child is named; just as it is said that with the Jewish gloss but Jewish piss and Jewish sweat; the child must have a father, except for this Alma, where they feel this well themselves, therefore they contest the no man is mentioned, and yet she is promised a son. first part of the impregnation of Alma. For it is because of

To prevent the evil and dangerous example, that him that the mother is a virgin. virgins and widows could not boast, if they had children If Isaiah were not a prophet, and Matthew not an without men, that they had it, like the woman and the evangelist, whom one is obliged by God to believe, but woman in the Scriptures, who also had no men. For it bad historians, then one should still believe them, as one would be a strange thing if our daughters, virgins, and does Joseph and Philo, and more than the lying, widows should set the house full of children for us, and blasphemous, obdurate Jews, who in the whole of say that they had licked the snow, and had no other father. Scripture now almost at two thousand years have flown Oh no, one does not lick the children at the snow. Moses and practiced to invent one lie after another, that one says, Gen. 1, 27, that a male and a female belong to it; should not believe a word of them. For a lying mouth is God also did not want to give the blessing to the fruit of not believed, even if he saws the truth (as one speaks), the womb until he had created them both and given them even if God gives him a true word, no one believes it. Et together. illud: Si mentiris, etiam, quod verum dicis, 160 But this certain Mary has no husband to whom she can give the child, but mentiris. Christ, our Lord, would not let the devils speak, even though they spoke the truth.

1) Merde - porridge, mixture, dung.

2) Erlanger: clandestine.

the Jews also hold, badly lying like the devils, before where two pious honest men or historici say otherwise; how much more where a prophet and evangelist say otherwise. For it is not good to put the piss of Judaism and the sweat of the Jews over the ointment of the Holy Spirit.

Nor is it Isaiah alone who proclaims the mother of Christ a virgin; God proclaimed it in the beginning of the world after the fall of Adam, when He gave the first promise of the New Testament or Gospel, saying: "I will put enmity between you and a woman, between your seed and her seed; she shall bruise your head, and you shall bruise her heel" 2c. [God the Lord could have spoken so much that He could have said, "A man's seed shall bruise your head," or "Name the man whose seed is the woman." But now He is silent about the man and gives the child or seed to the woman alone; this can be no one but Mary, the mother of Christ, for all children and seed are otherwise attributed to men.

Although all the saints from Adam onward, and we Christians to the end, are also such seed as trample the devil's head, we are not of ourselves, but of the seed of the woman in whom we believe, just as after him we are called Christians and children of God, and are, because we abide in him, that is, in Christ and the Son of God; we must become like him. Through such faith of the promised seed, Adam, Eve, Abel, at the same time, rose again from the serpent's power, and became his head-kickers. What now here some fathers play in this saying with allegories, we leave aside. For one part is of no use at all: that Adam should be portio superior rationis, Eve inferior portio. Such philosophia does not belong here. One part makes the church out of Eve, the Christians her seed. But this is a piece of right understanding, namely, as said, that all saints are also such seed through faith in the one seed of the one woman. And if someone wants to pretend that this does not prove that the woman must be a virgin, she could be a widow:

God did not want to pour it all out at once, but to make it clearer and clearer as time went on; it is enough now that Christ should be the seed of a woman without the seed of a man; virginity is indicated. It all depends on the seed. Afterwards Isaiah shall express it, that [it] is an Alma, a virgin. The New Testament shall freely state that she is called the Virgin Mary of Nazareth, the bride of Joseph and the mother of Christ.

165. this is where (as the grammatici tells us) the Hebrews admonish) the patriarch Jacob with the word Shiloh, Gen. 49, 10.: "The scepter of Judah shall not depart until Shiloh come." For it is very well to reckon that the fathers from Adam have daily and well practiced the promise of the woman's seed, when it was their life and blessedness, after the lamentation and fall of Adam. But Silo comes from Silva or Siljah (as they say), and is called secundinam, 1) since the child is in the womb, or recently born child, continens pro contento, as seems to be the case in Deut. 28, v. 53, since it brings such grief to the Jews that a woman with great hunger will eat her Siljah, which goes out from her womb, that is, her child, recently born, per synecdoche, which figure is common in all languages. As when we say, he can drink out of a barrel, eat out of a pot, when it is not the barrel nor the pot, but what is inside, that is eaten and drunk. Item: "Jerusalem, Jerusalem, you kill the prophets" [Matt. 23:37], when the stones and wood do not do this, but the people inside do. It is a wicked house when wicked men are in it.

166 Therefore Jacob will say: until Shiloh comes, that is, until her (the woman's, not the man's) child comes, which she alone has conceived, carried and born in her womb, of which it was said to our father Adam: a woman's seed 2c., in German, until the virgin's son comes. For he was not to be conceived and born in sins, as other Adam's children; therefore his mother had to be a virgin, whom no man touched.

1) d. i. secundae [partus], the afterbirth.

Nor a widow who had a husband before and served and helped to increase the original sin. Psalm 51:7.

167 And if the devil might have had this cause, that Mary was a widow, he should have made us so many Christos, as a widow would have carried children, that we would not have known which one it was, and thus would have lost the right one among so many sons. Otherwise, it was difficult for us to keep the only one from his rage. For he already began, through his mania, to make another Christ, who would not be Mary's natural son, but would come from her as a ghost. Thus Helvidius, the fool, also wanted to give Mary more sons after Christ, from these words of the evangelist: "and Joseph did not recognize his bride Mary until she gave birth to her first son"; he wanted to understand this as if she had had more sons after the first son; the coarse fool. To this St. Jerome answered finely. Summa, he is hostile to the seed of the woman, and would like to make it null and void, or at least uncertain. Therefore, the evangelists describe the line of the lineage so diligently that the Jews should not be angry and think that there must be another Jesus of whom such great things were said, but this one (whom they knew well), the Son of Mary, could not be. Ah yes (they say), it is the same one, the only JEsus, the son of Mary, the son of David Abraham and of all ancestors.

Therefore it was necessary that his mother should be a virgin, a young virgin, a holy virgin, redeemed from original sin and cleansed by the Holy Spirit, bearing no more than One Son, One Jesus, who could be her Siljah, fruit, her womb seed, without a father, an only Christ for us. But here is not time to strike out such things; for I would have to preach how the seed of the woman must be a blessing, promised to Abraha, that is, how he must be God. I have written and spoken of this elsewhere, so I will leave it at that.

169. that the rabbis would insist on the He and Cholem in the Shiloh, does not concern me, I can well do away with the Cholem: if Shiloh should not read Silah.

feminino genere, yet the fruit of the woman would be alone, because there is no man, and would have to be called the virgins' son of Judah, or of Judah. But Deut. 28, 53, the man stands with the woman who eats her children; here the fruit of the woman alone, Silo, stands without a man. Many fine sermons will be preached and books written, which are forgotten and lost in time; as we now see that a good book or sermon hardly lasts a year, and, as they say, a new song is sung for a year, without which there are few people who keep it for their descendants; the crowd lets it pass, and always waits for a new one; thus the devil keeps the world forever in error, the small crowd stays with the one it has received, John 8:31. 8, 31.

1) So it has happened, so it goes, from the beginning to the end of the world, that great things happen, and yet little is respected; the others let it go and forget it.

(170) Now Isaiah is a fine vocabulary, who, as a master, interpreted to us the word silo, and the seed of the woman, as if to say, "Do you want to know what silo means, what the seed of the woman means? I will tell you: It is a miraculous sign that Messiah shall be the son of a virgin, and his mother shall be an Alma, who conceives in her virginal siljah, or womb, without the help of a man. St. Elisabeth is also fine, when she joyfully received Mariam and said: "Giving is the fruit of your womb" [Luc. 1, 42.], that is Silo, the fruit matricis tuae, your Siljah, or your womb alone, and no man; because my womb child has a father, called Zachariä.

So David also sings Psalm 22:10 in the person of Christ: "You have pulled me out of my mother's womb. Here he calls himself Silo, who was drawn from his mother's womb (not from his father's loins, like all other children). Item v. 11: "Upon you I am drawn from my mother's womb; you are my God from my mother's womb." Such cannot be said of any child of Adam, all of whom were born in wrath and sin, and without God.

1) In the editions "Joh. 2.", which cannot be correct. Other passages that would fit here are: 1 Joh. 2, 27. 28. 2 Tim. 3, 14.

This one alone is God's child and in grace, the moment and the Virgin Mary, his mother, as is right and just. There he is taken from his mother's womb, and yet has to suffer shall be a new thing," he says, "which has not been before such great torture, which is worthy of the grace of God on earth. From the beginning children were born, 2c. regiments were established, evil and good people lived,

Further David says Psalm 110, 3: "Out of the mother, improved and worsened, as it is still going on, and will go out of the dawn comes the dew of your birth. Just as the on until the end of the world: but here the new miracle shall dew falls from the dawn, so your birth comes from the happen, which never happened before, namely a Nekefa mother (mother does not mean the whole person of the [xxxx] a woman, who is not a man, shall surround a man, woman, as in the fourth commandment, but that the that is, Mary shall conceive and give birth to God's Son. women are called mother in her body, matricem or Christ, our Lord, at the moment when Mary gave her full Siljah). Now the dew falls from heaven without the help word to the angel Gabriel and said: "Let it be done to me of all men, Mich. 5, 6. yes, even without clouds, even according to your word", was both God and perfect man in when the sky is bright and the dawn is most beautiful, it one person, as the dear Fathers received in the Concilio falls most sweetly; no one can say from where or where Ephesino against the Nestorium. For if this were not the it begins to fall. So also Christ came out of the mother, case, she could not be called theotocos, God's Mother, who is in the womb of the virgin Mary, that no father knows, indeed no man, nor she herself can tell nor know nor could Christ be called her Son; this has been how it happened that this beautiful dew, Christ, was discussed elsewhere, and is too long to discuss here. Now conceived and born in her mother or womb. It is called: let this be a new strange man, who is both God and man, conceived by the Holy Spirit, from above. in his mother's womb a child, however small it may be. He must have been small, as the Doctors, Damascenus, and Accordingly, all Christians are called "born as the dew from heaven", Mich. 5, 6. Because we believe in Him, we more afterwards, calculate the same. Accordingly, are made like Him and are respected. Joh. 1, 12.: "He Elizabeth calls Mariam the mother of the Lord from the full gave them power to become children of God, born not of spirit, although Mary was perhaps barely a fortnight the flower, but of God." For no one can tell nor know pregnant at that time, at which time no child can live in where a Christian comes from; "for he is born of spirit other women, as is known.

and water," Jn. 3, 5. The water is seen as one feels the dew, but the birth no one sees. So we also are children, thoughts St. Bernard spins out of Moses, Deut. 12, 2. conceived and born of the Holy Spirit, like unto Christ, where he says: "If a woman is inseminated and gives birth to a child, she shall be unclean for seven days" 2c. Here except that we come by grace and for his sake: but he St. Bernard wonders why Moses lets his mouth run over hath it for his own person, lest he, the Son of God, should with such vain words: if a woman is inseminated; why does be born otherwise, being not in the old birth of sins and he not say briefly: "Every woman who bears a child shall be unclean for seven days"? For it is well known that all women must be inseminated if they are to bear children, death, as we prodigals of Adam. and none bears a child that is not inseminated. Then he smelled that Moses had kept his mouth shut and had not 174 To this we add the saying of Jeremiah 31:22: burned himself on the mother of the LORD, whom he had exempted from his commandment. "The Lord shall create a new thing in the earth, and a woman shall compass a man about her. This has been read and understood throughout Christianity by Christ.

Laws, that she should not be unclean like other women; that she might proclaim that the mother would come one day to bear a babe unprocreated, that is, to bear the silo, a mother's child without a father.

All these things I have written this time in honor, praise and thanksgiving to our dear Lord, to strengthen our faith, to scorn and annoy the wretched devil and his circumcised saints. For I know very well how they disgrace and blaspheme these 1) introduced sayings, so that no one may say that I do not know their thing, condemn them unheard, and I would not do such an outrage against them if I knew their mind. No (praise God), I know well what their wisdom is in the Scriptures, I have proved it in that 2) booklet, in the saying of Jacob Gen 49, Haggai 2, Daniel 9, and in the article of circumcision and of the nobility of blood; in this booklet in the shame of Haperes, 3) Isaiah 9, and the like. I did not want to act anything unconscious.

178. their art in the saying Jeremiah 31:22, where they say: "A woman will surround a man" should mean so much: the people of Israel is the woman, God the man, Now Israel has been a whore in idolatry; then she has converted and repented, so that the man, that is, God, again surrounded and reconciled. If now the words could give that, than cannot be, how can such a thing be called a new thing created on earth? Has the people of Israel never been such a whore and been converted again? Then ask the book of the judges. Here it will come that what a rabbi calls new, that is new, what he calls old, that is old, as above the rule gives full of the "left and right hand.

179. but this is still much higher, finer art; in this place they speak that the woman is the whore of Israel to understand; but when they have wedding, they lead the bride three times around the bridegroom, so that they do this saying of Jeremiah enough, a woman surrounds the Man. Here Nekefa, the woman, must be called a virgin, there a whore. Why? Because the rabbis cannot fail to say that a whore is a virgin, and a virgin is a whore, according to the rule that the left hand is right when it is called a raven right. And also before never such new thing must have happened, when a woman or bride is led around the man three times, because Jeremiah speaks: "there shall be a new thing on earth, created by the Lord." But here a rabbi soon helped the matter and said that what he calls new is new, but what he calls old is old, ut supra.

The desperate devil-mongers think that the Holy Scripture is their own, like a piece of paper, from which they can carve little men, little birds, little houses, little cat chairs, as they like; and what they say, both their Jews and we Christians should accept as true.

Therefore, I will again pronounce judgment on the accursed rabbis. First of all: The holy scriptures are not of the Jews, not of the Gentiles, nor of the angels, much less of the devils, but of God alone, who alone spoke and wrote them, who alone shall interpret and interpret them where it is necessary; devils and men shall be pupils and listeners.

182 Secondly, we Christians are forbidden, in case of loss of divine graces and eternal life, to believe the Rabbis' reasoning and glosses in the Scriptures, or to consider them right. We may read it, to see what damned devilish work they do among themselves, to beware of it. For thus says Moses, Deut. 28, 28: "God will strike you with madness, blindness and a raging heart." Moses did not say this about the cursed Goyim, but about his circumcised saints, the noble blood, princes of heaven and earth, who call themselves Israel. Hereby is condemned by God Himself all their understanding, gloss and interpretation in the Scriptures as vain madness, blindness, frenzy, that all what they have worked these 1500 years in the Scriptures, God Himself speaks and judges not only false and lies, but also vain blindness,

1) Erlanger: the.

2) In the book Von den Juden und ihren Lügen, No. 51 in this volume.

3) I.e., in the first part of this book, which deals with the Shem Hamphorah.

4) Erlanger: the.

mad, insane thing. And as such a judgment is found in the work and in the deed, as you have seen above in the saying of Jacob Gen. 49, 10. Hagg. 2, 7. Dan. 9, 24. in the Shema of Hamphorah; Isa. 7, 14. of Alma; Jer. 31, 22. of Nekefa. Summa, they do the same in all sayings that speak of Messiah and right faith. A raging man must rage.

183) This judgment is confirmed by Is 29:13,14: "Therefore this people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me, and they fear me according to the commandment of men, which they teach: so will I deal strangely with this people, most strangely and oddly, that the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. This is not said of us Goyim, but of the people of Israel, who had excellent, wise, prudent men and prophets, and still have books of them; But because they have become a false, hypocritical lying people, who praise God with their mouths and go to the devil with their hearts, they shall also lose and not have the wisdom and understanding of the prophets, but as they pay God with their mouths (that is, with the shells) and serve the devil with their hearts (that is, with the core), so they shall also have the letters (the empty shells) in 1) the Scriptures, but they shall not smell the core, the right understanding.

184 Just before that, in the same chapter, v. 11, he says: "Let the prophecies of all the prophets be to you as the words of a sealed book or letter, which one gives to read [to] one who can read or not; [he] must say, I cannot read it, for it is sealed" 2c. Such is also the work in the blind raving Jews; for they have the book well, but there is no understanding, neither of the Messiah, nor Law of Moses in some verse, that the heathen and poets teach much better thing, neither the Jews, since they are also where best. The sayings are much more in the prophets, conjugation, construction, signification, and what more especially the Psalm 69, 23. f., which St. Paul introduces Rom. 11,9.: "Their table must become a rope before that they may turn into the and them.

become a retribution and a trap. Their face must become dark so that they do not see" 2c.

But 2 Cor. 3, 14. 15. 16. paints St. Paul right, since he speaks of these Jews from the time of Christ (because it cannot be understood by anyone else): "Until this day, when Moses is read, the covering remains over their hearts, because their minds are hardened. But if they turned to the Lord, the covering would be removed." So the Lord Himself also proclaimed to them Matt. 8:12: "The children of the kingdom shall be cast out into darkness"; and John 8:21: "I go, and ye shall seek Me, and die in your sins: for whither I go ye cannot come." And what does St. Paul do in all his epistles, but to call the Jews dogs, cuttings, and all blinded and hardened, from whom one should beware?

(186) Now, if a Christian wants to seek understanding in the Scriptures from the Jews over such a judgment and condemnation of the Jews, what else does he do but seek the face of the blind, the wisdom of the mad, the life of death, the grace and truth of the devil? It serves him right, if he also becomes insane, blind and furious, as his masters are, condemned by God 2). That one learns the language and grammar from them, that is fine and well done, just as they also do, learn from us the German language, from whales the French, and where they are, there they learn the language of the country; but our faith and understanding of the Scriptures they do not learn. So we should also learn the language from them, but avoid their faith and understanding, condemned by God.

187 Therefore, our Hebrew scholars (for which I have also asked them herewith for God's sake) should let this work be commanded to them and be concerned to purify the holy old Bible from the Jews' peres and Judas' slopes, where they could change the points, distinction, conjugation, construction, signification, and what more the grammatica has, and turn it from the Jews' mind, so that it may turn into the and them.

1) "in" is missing in the Erlanger.

2) "of God" is missing in the Erlanger.

with the New Testament, that they would do so confidently and with joy, as St. Paul teaches in Romans 12:7, that prophetia should be analogous to faith. For so they have done to us, that is, to the Bible these 1500 years. Where they have been able to turn the Bible away from our Messiah and faith with points, distinction, conjugation 2c. and make it dissimilar to the New Testament, they have done this with great and furious diligence, as can be seen above in the examples Gen 49:10, Haggai 2:7, Daniel 9:24, Isaiah 7:14 and the like.

188. as, 1) Isaiah 9, 5. as they make the text so, Vajikra Shemo, Pele 2c.: The Wonderful, Council, God, Hero, Eternal Father will call the Messiah Prince of Peace. Here one sees their courage, therefore one should discard their points and construction, and read as we read it, because there is the Grammatica of the letters gladly, so one for Vajikra liefet Vajikare, and all names in the Rominativo can stand. The Hebrewists will probably find more of these, so that the thieves may be given back with honor what they have stolen with shame these 1500 years, perhaps even longer. For the main thing must be true, that the old holy scripture goes and testifies to Messiah and our faith; whoever does not understand it then cannot have it.

For this reason I have said that Moses and the Scriptures are not known among the present Jews, nor is the old true Moses, so shamefully have they defiled him with their Judaic piss. For Moses wants to be a witness of the Messiah, that is certain. But because they disgrace the Messiah so much, it is impossible that they should understand Moses correctly in a pasuk. I would like to see this work charged to my dear lord and friend, M. Bernhard Ziegler at Leipzig, Hebrew professor, so that he would also excel once, as the other Hebrewists (praise to God) have not let themselves be seen without great fruit; for he is especially hostile to the Jewish Judaic piss, and could well do something, if the other Hebrewists were drawn to him, and purified the Hebrew Bible for us. For it shall be pure and good Hebrew again.

Christians who have the mind of Messiah must do so, as Paul says, 1 Cor. 1:24, "We have the mind of Messiah," and Luc. 24:45, "He opened their minds so that they might understand the Scriptures," and Matt. 13:11, "It has been given to you to understand the mystery of the Kingdom of Heaven.

190 Whether one would have to attack and reproach me, who sometimes lacked in interpretation, I will accept with thanks. For how often Jerome has failed! And I see how the two fine men, Sanctes 2) and Müllster have studio incredibili et diligentia inimitabili interpreted the Bible, done much good with it. But the rabbis are about too powerful for them, that they have also lacked the aualogia of faith, the rabbis' glosses too much. For I myself have followed their translation about too much, that I must recant, especially 2 Sam. 23, 3) in verbis novissimis David, as I will soon do.

In this way, the Jews' understanding of the Bible could be finely weakened, and there is the advantage that Moses and the prophets did not write with points that a new man's mind brought up after their time; therefore it is not necessary to keep them as rigid as the Jews would like, especially where they are used contrary to the New Testament. The same should be done with the aequivocatio and distinctio, where they serve against the New Testament. The Jews have a desire to make all their things doubtful and not certain. Therefore, where the aequivocatio occurs in a vocabulo, take the significatio that agrees with the New Testament, and it becomes certain; and the right significatio has a strong witness and support in the New Testament; so the Jews are left with the other significatio, that is, the empty shell and peres, without witness and support.

2) Sanctes Pagninus is mentioned in the "Interpretation of the First Book of Moses", Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. I, 363, § 202 and ibidem, Col. 451, § 46. - Sebastian Münster published the Biblia hebraica with his Latin translation at Basel in 1534. Cf. Lauterbach, p. 47, note Walch, St. Louis edition, vol. XXII, 1704.

3) In the editions: "2 Sam. 22." Luther's interpretation of the last words of David" is found Walch, old edition, vol. III, 2780 ff.

192 Let these things be commanded to the Hebrews. Here I will leave it and have nothing more to do with the Jews, nor write any more about them or against them; they have had enough. To those who want to convert, God grant his grace, that they (yet some) may know and praise with us GOD the Near, our Creator, together with our Lord JESUS CHRIST, and the Holy Spirit forever and ever, Amen.

The writing, which follows in the old edition of Walch here: "D. Luthers Vermahnung Wider die Juden, womit er seine zu Eisleben, kurz vor seinem Abschied aus diesem Leben Anno 1546 gehaltenen vier Predigten beschlossen" (Luther's admonition against the Jews, with which he concluded his four sermons delivered at Eisleben shortly before his departure from this life in 1546), is already included in the St. Louis edition, Vol. VII, 1264 ff. and therefore omitted here.

II Luther's Writings against the Turks, and of the Inextinguishable Hatred against the Christians.

53 D. Mart. Luther's writing about the war against the Turks. *)

The letter of 9 October 1528. Issued in April 1529.

To the Serene Highborn Prince and Lord, Lord Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, Count of Katzenelnbogen, Ziegenhain and Nidda, my gracious Lord. Grace and peace in Christ JESu, our Lord and Savior.

1. noble, highborn prince, gracious lord. Five years ago, some people asked me to write about the war against the Turks and to exhort and incite our people to it; and now, because the Turk is approaching us, my friends are forcing me to complete this, especially because there are some clumsy preachers among us Germans (as I unfortunately hear), who imagine to the people that one should not and must not wage war against the Turks, but some are so foolish that they teach that it is not proper for any Christian, to wield the secular sword or to rule. In addition, as our German people is a wild, savage people, yes, almost half devils, half men are, some of the Turks desire future and regiment.

(2) And such error and wickedness among the people are all blamed on Luther, and must be called the fruit of my gospel. Just as I must also bear the blame for the rebellion, and for all the evil that is now happening in the whole world, if they know otherwise; but contrary to God and His Word, they act as if they knew no other way, and seek cause to blaspheme the Holy Spirit and public, known truth, so that they may well deserve hell, and never ever attain repentance and forgiveness of their sins.

*This writing appeared in many individual editions (the Erlanger lists eight of them); with Hans Weiß in Wittenberg on April 16, 1529 (according to our date; three different editions bear the same date on the title); with Johannes Stüchs in Nuremberg in the same year; in 1542 in Wittenberg by Nickel Schirlentz; in 1543 in Frankfurt am Main by Georg Raben and Wegand Hanen Erben; finally an edition without indication of printer and place in 1529. In the collections: Wittenberger (1551), vol. II, p. 522b; Jenaer (1566), vol. IV, p. 430b; Altenburger, vol. IV, p. 524; Leipziger, vol. XXII, p. 339 and Erlanger, vol. 31, p. 31. The attribution alone is found in De Wette, vol. III, p. 386 and printed from it (as a duplicate) in the Erlanger, vol. 54, p. 46. We give the text according to the Erlanger, which brings an original print, comparing the Wittenberg and the Jena edition.

(3) For this reason it is necessary for me to write about the matter also for my own sake and for the sake of the gospel, to apologize, not to the blasphemers, who should not be good enough for me to apologize against them with one word; for the gospel should stink with them, and "be a stench of death unto death" [2 Cor. 2:16], as they deserve with their wanton blasphemy, but that the innocent consciences may not be further deceived by such blasphemers, and draw suspicion from me or my doctrine, or even be deceived into believing that it is not necessary to fight against the Turks.

However, I considered it good to omit such a booklet under the name of E. F. G., as a famous powerful prince, so that it would gain a better reputation, 1) and would be read more diligently [and so that], if it should ever come about that one would deal with a move against the Turks, the princes and lords would have a common memory. For I am willing to point out several pieces in it that will have to be considered, and that will be in the interest of power. Command hereby our merciful God in His paternal grace and mercy, that He may protect our Lord from all error and cunning of the devil, and enlighten and strengthen him to govern blessedly, amen.

[Den] 9. October 1528.

E. F. G.

willing

Martinus Luther.

1) Pope Leo the Tenth, in his bull, in which he banished me, among other articles, he also condemned this one, that I had said that to fight against the Turk is as much as to resist God, who visits our sin with such a rod. 2) From such an article may have taken those who say of me that I should resist and resist to fight against the Turk. I still freely confess that such an article is mine, and at that time was given by me.

1) Erlanger: win.

2) This article is the thirty-fourth in the bull of Leo X, which he issued against Luther on June 15, 1520. Walch, old edition, vol. XV, 1706. Compare also Luther's writing: "Grund und Ursach aller Artikel" (Reason and Cause of all Articles) 2c.

and defended. And if it stood in the world now, as it stood then, then I would and would have to set and defend the same even now. But it is not good that one has so soon forgotten 3) how things were then in the world, and what was my reason and cause, and nevertheless keeps my words and sends them elsewhere, where there is no such reason and cause. Who with such art could not also 4) make vain lies out of the gospel, or pretend that it is contrary to itself?

But this is how it was then: no one had taught or heard, nor did anyone know anything about the worldly authorities, where they came from, what their office or work was, or how they should serve God. The most learned (I do not want to name them) considered the worldly authority as a pagan, human, ungodly thing, as if it were an annual state of blessedness. Therefore, the priests and monks had persuaded kings and princes to do other things to serve God than to hear mass, to pray, and to establish masses.

Summa, princes and lords (as much as they would have liked to be pious) considered their status and office to be nothing, and for no worship, became right priests and monks (without wearing plates or caps); if they wanted to serve God, they had to go to the 5) churches. All gentlemen who lived at that time and experienced such things must testify to this, for my most gracious lord, Duke Frederick of blessed memory, was so pleased when I first wrote of the secular authorities that he had such a booklet copied, especially bound, and was very fond of it, that he might also see what his standing was before God.

At that time, the pope and the clergy were all in all, above all and through all, like a god in the world, and the secular authorities lay hidden in darkness and unknown. Now the pope nevertheless wanted to be a Christian with his troops, and yet he pretended to fight against the Turks. Above the two pieces, it increased, because I worked at that time in the doctrine, so the Christians and consciences.

3) So the Jenaers. Wittenberg and Erlangen: probably.

4) "also" is missing in the Erlanger.

5) "the" is missing in the Wittenberger.

I myself had not yet written anything about the secular authorities, so that the papists call me a hypocrite of the princes, because I dealt only with the spiritual state, as they should be Christians, and nothing about the secular. Just as they now reproach me seditiously, after I (by God's grace) 1) have written so gloriously and usefully about the secular authorities, as no teacher has ever done since the time of the apostles (unless St. Augustine), of which I can boast with a good conscience and with the testimony of the world.

Among the pieces of Christian doctrine I also dealt with that, where Christ speaks Matth. 5, 39. f.: A Christian should "not resist evil", but suffer everything, "go after the skirt, the cloak" and "let it be taken", also hold out the murderous cheeks. 2c, out of which pieces the pope with his high schools and monasteries had made a free counsel, which would not be commanded nor necessary for a Christian to keep, had thus perverted Christ's word and taught falsely in all the world and deceived the Christians.

Because they wanted to be Christians, yes, the best Christians, and yet fight against the Turk, bear no evil, nor suffer violence or injustice, I countered with this saying of Christ, that Christians should "not resist evil", but suffer everything and let it go; on top of that I put the article that Pope Leo vedammed. And I did this all the more gladly, so that I would take the lid off the Roman evil; for the popes were never serious about wanting to wage war against the Turks, but used the Turkish war as a cover, under which they played, and robbed the money with indulgences from German lands as often as they desired; as all the world well knew, but is now also forgotten.

(7) So they condemned my article not because it resisted the Turkish war, but because it tore down such little cloisters 2) and laid the road to Rome for the money. For where they would have wanted to wage war against the Turks in earnest, the Pope and the Cardinals had probably so much of the 3) Pallis, Annalen, and other unspeakable access that they would not have needed such drudgery and robbery in German lands. Had there been a serious war in the simple opinion, I would have been able to make up my article better and 4) differently.

(8) I did not like that either, that they did so, 5) incited and provoked the Christians and the princes to attack and overrun the Turk, before we ourselves improved and lived as true Christians. Both of these things, and each of them in particular, are sufficient cause to oppose all war. For I will not advise a pagan or a Turk, let alone a Christian, to attack or start a war, which is nothing else than to advise bloodshed and destruction, which in the end is not fortunate, as I have also written in the booklet of warriors 6); so it never works out well if a knave wants to punish all that and not first become pious himself.

(9) But above all, I was moved by the fact that they were planning to fight against the Turks under the Christian name, teaching and inciting, just as if our people should be called an army of Christians against the Turks, as against Christ's enemies, which is strictly against Christ's teaching and name. It is against the doctrine when he says that Christians should "not resist evil" [Matt. 5:39], not quarrel or fight, not avenge or justify. It is against His name that in such an army there are perhaps barely five Christians, and perhaps worse people before God than the Turks, and yet they all want to use the name of Christ, which is the greatest sin that no Turk does, because Christ's name is used and honored for sins and disgrace. This would be especially true if the pope and the bishops were in the war, for they would profane and dishonor the name of Christ too much, since they are called to fight against the devil with God's word and prayer.

3) den" is missing in the Wittenberger.

4) Jenaer: more different.

5) In the old editions: "treib", which the Erlanger erroneously resolved with "treibt".

6) This writing is found in Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. X, 488 ff.

1) "by God's grace" is missing in the Erlanger.

2) In the old editions: "Helekeplin".

They would fight with the sword against flesh and blood, 1 Cor. 14:40]: How much less is the disorder to be which they are not commanded to do, but which they are suffered, that a Christian should leave his office, and take forbidden to do. another man's temporal office, or that a bishop or priest have to do with the sword, war, and kill the bodies, when 13) Ask experience how well we have succeeded so far in the Turkish war, when we fought as Christians and under Christ's name, until we finally lost Rhodus 3) and to kill the people? For His ministry is to act with the gospel, and through His Spirit to save people from sins almost all of Hungary, and much of the German land as well. And so that one might feel and grasp that God is not life. For Joh. 6, 15, he fled and did not want to be "made with us to fight against the Turks, he has never given our a king". Before Pilato he confessed: "My kingdom is not of this world" [Joh. 18, 36.], and also commanded Petrum might have once dealt seriously with the Turkish war, in the garden to "take up his sword", and said: "Whoever although almost many or almost all imperial diets have been proclaimed and held for the sake of such things; takes the sword shall perish by the sword" [Matth. 26, 52. Nowhere does it seem that God mocks our imperial (11) I do not say this because I wanted to teach that worldly authorities should not like Christians, or that a Christian should not want to wield the sword and serve God in worldly authority. If God wanted them all to be destroys Germany without effort and without resistance. Christians, or that no other ruler would have to be, he Why does this happen? Of course, so that my article, would be [a] Christian should stand better than it now which Pope Leo condemned, remains undamned but stands, and the Turk should not be so. I want to distinguish and separate the office and profession, so strong. And because the papists reject it out of courage without Scripture, the Turk must take it up and confirm it that each one should see to what he is appointed by God, with his fist and deed 4). If we do not want to learn it from the Scriptures, the Turk must teach us from the sheath, and follow and fulfill the same office faithfully and heartily, until we learn it with harm, that Christians should not get for God's service, as I have written about it elsewhere, especially in the booklet of warriors and secular nor resist the evil. Fools must be listened to with pistons. authorities 2).

(10) O how gladly should Christ receive me at the last should leave his office, and take a prince's or judge's judgment, if I, when required for the spiritual office (that I office? And again, that a prince should take the office of a should preach and take care of souls), should have left it, bishop and leave his office of prince; as such shameful and for it forfeited myself to war and the temporal sword. disorder still rages and prevails in the whole papacy, And how should Christ come that he or his own should contrary to its own canons and law.

(12) For even in the church, where Christians are to against the Turks in which we have not received great be one and the same, St. Paul does not want to suffer damage, if the bishops and clergy have been present? each one to submit to the ministry of the other, Rom. 12:4 How jam- and 1 Cor. 12:12 ff, but "each member" to his work.

1) In the old editions: Christians" instead of: a Christian. 2) This scripture is found in Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. X, 374 ff.

3) In the old editions: "Rodis".

4) Thus the Wittenbergers and the Jenaers. Erlanger: with the That.

The fine King Lasla 1) of Varna was defeated by the Turk with his bishops, so that the Hungarians themselves blamed Cardinal Juliano for such misfortune, and were therefore astonished. And now, recently, King Louis should perhaps have fought more blissfully if he had not led a priestly army or, as they boast, a Christian army against the Turk.

(15) And if I were emperor, king or prince in the campaign against the Turk, I would admonish my bishops and priests to stay at home, to wait in their office, with praying, fasting, reading, preaching, and poor people, (2) as they are taught and required not only by the holy Scriptures, but also by their own spiritual law. But if they, as the disobedient ones against God and their own right, wanted to be in the war, I wanted to teach them by force to wait for their office, and not let me and my army be put in God's wrath and all the way through their disobedience; For it should be more harmless for me to have three devils in the army than a disobedient, renegade bishop who forgets his office and submits to an unauthorized person, for there can be no happiness with such people who oppose God and their own rights.

(16) I have heard of fine men of war who thought that the king of France, when he was defeated and captured by the emperor before Pavia, had all his misfortune because he had the pope's people, or, as they boast, the church's people with him. For after they came into his camp with a great cry, Ecclesia, Ecclesia! here church, here church! there was no more luck. This is what the men of war say, and perhaps they do not know the reasons why the pope (who wants to be a Christian, yes, the highest and best Christian preacher) does not have the right to lead a church army or Christian army, because the church should not fight, nor fight with the sword, it has other enemies than flesh and blood, which are called the evil devils in the air [Eph. 6, 12]. That is why she has also an-

The people of the land must not mix with the emperor's or ruler's wars, for the Scripture says: there shall be no happiness where one disobeys God.

17 Again, if I were a man of war, and saw a priest's or cross-panel in the field, even if it were a crucifix itself, I would run away as if the devil were chasing me; and even if they won a victory by God's decree, I still did not want to partake of the spoils and pleasures. 4) I had to call on Emperor Maximilian in the end, and let the same Emperor take over the game. If the evil iron-eater, Pope Julius, did not succeed, who was almost half a devil, he finally had to call upon Emperor Maximilian, and let the same rule the game, regardless of whether Julius had more money, weapons and people.

18 Thus I think that this next pope Clement almost succeeded in his wars, who was considered to be a god of war, until he lost Rome with all her goods by few and unarmed warriors. It is decided, Christ will teach them my article, that Christians should not wage war, and the damned article must therefore take revenge, for it is said by Christians, and wants to be undamned, but right and true. Although they do not turn to it, nor believe it, until they become more and more hardened and unrepentant, and go to ruins; then I say amen to them, amen.

(19) It is true that because they have temporal dominion and goods, they shall do and give of them 5) to the emperor and kings or princes what is proper to do and give of other temporal goods; indeed, such goods of the church (as they call it) shall especially serve and help above all other goods for the protection of the poor and 6) salvation of common estates; for to this end they are given, and not for a bishop to forget his office, and to war or fight with it. When Emperor Carl's banner or a prince is in the field, let every man run freshly and cheerfully under his banner, since he is sworn under it, as if he were a bishop.

4) In Walch's old edition and in the Erlanger: wolte.

5) Erlanger: daselbst von.

6) Erlanger: and to.

1) "Lasla" is the king of Hungary Vladislav III, who was defeated by the Turks under Murad II at Varna in 1444 together with the Transylvanian prince John Hunyad.

2) Walch and the Erlanger: wait.

3) In the old editions: "eins unbefohlens".

But if there is a bishop's, cardinal's, or pope's paneer, run away from it and say: I do not know the coin; if it were a prayer book, or the holy scripture preached in the church, I would also run to it 2c.

020 Before I exhort or provoke you to fight against the Turk, listen to me, for God's sake, and I will first teach you with a right conscience. For though I would, if I would let Adam go, be silent and watch the Turk avenge me against the tyrants (who persecute the gospel and do me all harm) and pay them, yet I will not do so, but serve both friends and enemies, that my sun also may rise both on the evil and the good, and rain on the thankful and the unthankful [Matt. 5:45].

24 First of all, since it is certain that the Turk has no right or command to pick a quarrel and attack lands that are not his, his warfare is, of course, pure sacrilege and robbery, by which God punishes the world, just as he sometimes punishes pious people through bad guys. For he does not fight out of necessity, or to protect his country in peace, as a proper ruler does, but he seeks to rob and damage other countries that do or have done nothing to him, like a sea robber or highwayman. He is God's servant and the devil's servant, there is no doubt about it.

22) Secondly, it must be known who the man is who is to wage war against the Turk, so that he may be sure that he has the command of God and is doing right, and is not in any way plotting to avenge himself, or otherwise having a foolish opinion and cause, so that, whether he strikes or is struck, he may be found in a blessed state and 1) divine office. There are two of these men, and they alone shall be two; one is called Christianus, the other Emperor Carolus. 2)

Christianus shall be the first with his army. For since the Turk is our Lord God's angry rod and the raging devil's servant, one must first of all strike the devil himself, his lord.

1) Wittenberger: or.

2) "Carolus" is missing in the Wittenberg.

and take the rod out of the hand of God, so that the Turk will be found in his power alone, without the help of the devil and God's hand. The same shall now be done by Mr. Christianus, that is, the pious, holy, dear Christians. Crowd. These are the people who are prepared for this war and know how to deal with it. For if the Turk's god (that is, the devil) is not defeated first, it is to be feared that the Turk will not be so easily defeated. Now the devil is a spirit that cannot be beaten with armor, guns, horse and man [Job 41,³⁾ 17. 18. ff.], and God's wrath cannot be reconciled with it, as it is written Ps. 147, 10. 11.: "He does not delight in the strength of a horse, nor in anyone's legs. The LORD delighteth in them that fear him, and in them that hope in his goodness." 4) Christian weapons and strength must do it.

24 Here you ask: Who then are the Christians, and where are they to be found? Answer: There are few of them, but they are everywhere, though they are few and far between, both under pious and wicked princes. For Christianity must remain to the end, as the article says: I believe a holy Christian church. But so it must be found: The pastors and preachers are to exhort their people most diligently to repentance and prayer. They are to do penance by denouncing our great innumerable sins and ingratitude, by which we have earned God's wrath and disfavor, so that He has given us into the hands of the devil and the Turk. And so that such preaching will be all the more effective, the examples and sayings of Scripture must be introduced, such as those of the flood, of Sodom and Gomorrah, of the children of Israel, and of how horribly and sometimes God punished the world, the land and the people, and they must emphasize how it is no wonder that we sin more grievously than they, even if we are punished more severely than they.

3) Here, as usual, the Erlangen edition has reprinted Walch's false Bible quotation: "Job 51, 17. 18," moreover, all Walch's other false quotations are reproduced in this writing, six in total.

4) Erlanger: wait.

5) Jenaer: and.

(25) Truly this strife must be begun in repentance, and we must amend our nature, or we shall strive in vain, as the prophet Jeremiah chap. 18:7-11 says: "I will soon speak 1) against a nation, and against a kingdom, to root it out, to destroy it, and to scatter it. But if such a people repents of its wickedness, against which I speak, then I also repent of the evil that I thought to do to it. Again, soon will I speak of a nation and kingdom, that I may plant and build them; but if they do evil in mine sight, and hearken not unto my voice, I shall repent of the good that I have spoken to them to do. Therefore say to those of Judah and to those of Jerusalem, saying, Behold, I am preparing evil for you, and I am thinking against you. Now therefore let every man turn from his evil way, and let your ways and your doings be righteous" 2c. We may truly let this saying be told to us, for God is thinking something evil against us because of our wickedness, and is certainly preparing the Turk against us, as the 7th Psalm, v. 13 f., also says: "If one will not convert, he has sharpened his sword, and strung his bow, and takes aim, and has laid deadly projectile upon it" 2c.

(26) In this connection, one must also refer to the sayings and examples of Scripture, where God allows Himself to be heard, as pleases Him, right repentance or correction, if 2) it is done in faith and trust in His word, as in the Old Testament of the Ninevehites, the kings David, Ahab, Manasseh, and the like; in the New of St. Peter, of the Prosecutor, of the Publican in the Gospel, and so on. And although I know that this teaching of mine will be ridiculous to the scholars and saints who have no need of repentance, as they consider it a bad and mean thing, which they have long since torn by the bootstraps, I have not left it alone for the sake of my poor sinners and mine, who are in great need of repentance and exhortation to repentance every day. Nevertheless, we remain all too lazy and lukewarm, and are not yet with those Ninety-nine righteous [Luc. 15:7] will come over the mountain as far as they think they can.

27 After this, when they have been taught and admonished to confess their sin and amend their ways, they should then be exhorted to prayer with great diligence, showing how God is pleased with such prayer, as He has commanded and promised to answer it, and that no one despises his prayer or doubts it, but is certain of its answer with firm faith; as all this is set forth in many books of ours. For whoever doubts or prays for adventure, it would be better to leave it alone, because such prayer is a vain attempt of God and only makes the matter worse. That is why I would have opposed the procession as a pagan useless way, because it is more a show and appearance than a prayer. In the same way, I speak of saying mass a lot and calling on saints.

28 But it might do some good if, during mass, vespers, or after the sermon, the litany were sung or read in church, especially by the young people, and each one nevertheless sighed at home in his heart to Christ for mercy for a better life and for help against the Turk. I do not say of much long prayer, but of frequent and short sighing, with such one or two words: Oh help us, dear God the Father; have mercy on us, dear Lord Jesus Christ, or the like.

(29) Behold, such preaching shall meet and find Christians, and there shall be Christians who receive it and do it: it is not the matter whether thou knowest it not. The tyrants and bishops may also be admonished to desist from their raging and persecuting against the word of God, and not to hinder our prayer. But if they do not cease, we must not slacken our prayers, and we must hope and dare that they may enjoy our prayers and be preserved together with us, or that we may be rewarded for their raging and be destroyed together with them. For they are so wicked and blinded, if God were to give happiness against the Turk, that they should ascribe it to their holiness and merit and boast against us. Again, if it turned out badly, they should certainly never-

1) The Wittenbergers asked here and in other places of this scripture to quote the words as they are found in the later Bible editions.

2) Erlanger: so the.

3) Wittenberger: I's.

They are not only wicked, manifest, sinful and evil, but they also defend themselves and cannot teach a single thing rightly about how to pray, and they are worse than the Turks. Well, you must let God's judgment come home to you.

30 In such exhortation to prayer, one must also introduce scriptural sayings and examples, in which one finds how strong and powerful the prayer of a man has been at times, as the prayer of Elijah [1 Kings 17:1], of which St. Jacob boasts [Jac 5:17], item, Elisha and other prophets, kings David, Solomon, Asa, Jehoshaphat, Josiah, 1) Ezekias 2c. Item, how God promised Abraham to spare the land of Sodom and Gomorrah for the sake of five righteous people 2c. [Gen. 18, 28.) For "a righteous prayer is able to do much (says St. Jacob in his epistle [Cap. 5, 16.]) if it endures." And here it is to be indicated that they take care, and do not anger God, where they do not want to pray, and do not fall into judgment, Ezech. 13:5, where God says, "You have not set yourselves against Me, nor made yourselves a wall for the house of Israel, to stand against the battle in the day of the Lord. And Cap. 22:30, 31: "I sought a man among them to be a middle wall, to stand against me for the land, that I should not destroy it; but I found none. Therefore I poured out my wrath upon them, and consumed them in the fire of my fury, and paid them according to their deserts, saith the LORD."

31 From this you can see that God wants to have and is fiercely angry with those who do not resist His wrath and defend themselves against it. This means, as I said above, to take the rod from the hand of God. Here one should fast, who wanted to fast there. Here one should kneel, bend down and fall to the ground, since it is serious. For what has been bending down and kneeling in monasteries and convents up to now has had no seriousness, and has been quite a monkey game, as it still is. I admonish not in vain the pastors and preachers that they do and practice such things well among the people, for I see well that it is truly up to the preachers if the people are to improve or pray. Preaching, if Luther is scolded and blasphemed, and repentance along with prayer is not done. But where God's word rings out and is presented to the people purely and faithfully, 2) it is not without fruit. But they must preach as those who preach to the saints, since repentance and faith have been completely unlearned, and talk something higher.

1) "Josias" by us after 2 Kings 22:19, 20, instead of "Jesis" in the Erlangen and "Jesaias" in the Wittenberg and the Jena; because obviously the name of a king must stand here.

The great need should move us to such a prayer against the Turk. For the Turk (as we have said) is a servant of the devil, who not only destroys the land and the people with his sword, which we will hear hereafter, but also devastates the Christian faith and our dear Lord Jesus Christ. For although some praise his rule in that he lets everyone believe what they want, only that he wants to be a worldly lord, such praise is not true. For he truly does not allow Christians to meet publicly, and 3) no one must confess Christ publicly, nor preach or teach against Mahomet. But what kind of freedom of faith is this, since one does not have to preach or confess Christ? Since our salvation stands in the same confession, as Paul says Rom. 10, 9: "To confess with the mouth makes one blessed", and Christ has very harshly commanded to confess and teach his gospel [Matth. 10, 32].

Because the faith must be silent and secret among such a wild and desolate people and in such a harsh and great regime, how can it last or remain, if it takes effort and work, even if one preaches most faithfully and diligently? That is why it goes and must go; what is caught from the Christians in Turkey or otherwise comes in, all falls there and becomes Turkish, so that seldom anyone remains; for they lack the living bread of souls, and see it freely.

2) The words: "und rein und treulich dem Volke vorgetragen wird" are missing in the Jena and Erlangen editions, also in Walch.

3) Wittenberger: it must.

The Turks are carnal creatures and must therefore join them.

(34) How can Christ be more powerfully disturbed than by these two things, namely, by force and by cunning? By force: to resist the preaching and the word; by cunning: to set before the eyes and provoke to oneself evil and dangerous examples daily. So that we do not lose our Lord Christ, His word and faith, we must pray against the Turk no differently than against other enemies of our salvation and all good, as against the devil himself.

35 And here the people should be informed of all the desolate life and conduct that the Turk leads, so that they may feel the need for prayer all the more keenly. I have often been annoyed and disturbed 1) by the fact that neither our great lords nor our scholars have taken the trouble to find out about the Turks in both spiritual and secular spheres, and that they are so close to us, for it is said that they also have monasteries and convents. Some have invented outright lies about the Turks to provoke us Germans against them; but there is nothing to be gained from lies, there is all too much truth. I will tell my dear Christians, as much as I know of the certain truth, some pieces, so that they may be moved and provoked all the more to pray diligently and with earnestness against the enemy of Christ, their Lord.

I have several pieces of Mahomet's Alkoran, which might be called a sermon or textbook in German, as the Pope's Decretal is called; if I have time, I must translate it. 2) so that everyone can see what a rotten, shameful book it is. First of all, he praises 3) Christ and Mary almost very much, as if they alone were without sin; but he thinks nothing more of him than of a holy prophet, like Jeremiah or Jonah, but denies that he is the Son of God and true God. He also does not believe that Christus was the Savior of the world, died for our sins, but preached in his time and directed his ministry before his end, like another prophet.

37 But he praises and exalts himself, and boasts how he has spoken with God and the angels, and how he is commanded to bring the world to his faith, now that Christ's ministry is over as a prophet, and to conquer or punish them with the sword where they are unwilling, and the boasting of the sword is much in it. Therefore the Turks think much higher and greater of their Mahomet than of Christ, because Christ's ministry has come to an end, and Mahomet's ministry is now in its final stage.

38 From this everyone can see that Mahomet is a destroyer of our Lord Christ and his kingdom. For whoever denies the pieces of Christ, that he is the Son of God, and died for us, and still lives and reigns at the right hand of God, what more does he have in Christ? Father, Son, Holy Spirit, baptism, sacrament, gospel, faith, and all Christian doctrine and nature are gone, and in place of Christ there is nothing more than Mahomet with his doctrine of his own works, and especially of the sword. This is the main part of the Turkish faith, in which all abominations, all errors, all devils lie in one heap.

(39) The world is still falling down, as if it were cutting with disciples of the Turkish faith. For it pleases reason out of measure that Christ is not God, as the Jews also believe, and especially the work that one should rule and wield the sword, and hover above in the world; there 4) then the devil shuts up. So it is a faith patched together from the faith of the Jews, Christians and Gentiles. For from the Christians he has that he praises Christ and Mary highly, also the apostles and other saints more. From the Jews they have that they do not drink wine, fast some time of the year, bathe themselves and, like the Nazarene, eat on 5) the earth. And so they continue in such holy works, as our monks do in part, and hope for eternal life on the last day. For they

4) i. e. pushes.

5) Thus the Jenaers. Wittenberg and Erlangen: "und auf".

1) Wittenberger: me still.

2) Marginal gloss of the Jena edition: "As he did afterwards. This refers to the text No. 56 in this volume: "Bruder Richards Verlegung des Alkorans" u. s. w.

3) "wohl" is missing in the Wittenberger.

nevertheless believe the resurrection of the dead, the holy people, which yet few papists believe.

40 What devout Christian heart would not be afraid of such an enemy of Christ? because we see that the Turk leaves no article of our faith without the one of the resurrection of the dead. There Christ is no Redeemer, Savior, King, no forgiveness of sins, no grace nor Holy Spirit. And what shall I say much: in the article it is all disturbed that Christ should be inferior and inferior to Mahomet. Who would not rather be dead than live under such a regime, when he must be silent about his Christ, and see and hear such blasphemy and abominations against him, and yet so mightily he tears down where he gains a land that one also willingly gives himself into it. Therefore pray, whoever can pray, that such an abomination will not become our Lord, and that we will not be punished with such a terrible rod of divine wrath.

41 Secondly, the Turk's Alkoran or faith not only disturbs the Christian faith, but also the entire secular regime. For his Mahomet (as has been said) commands to rule with the sword, and the most and noblest work in his Alkoran is the sword. And so, in truth, the Turk is nothing but a real murderer or highwayman, as the deed proves before one's eyes. St. Augustine also calls other kingdoms great robberies, and the 76th Psalm, v. 5, calls them "mountains of robbery" because an empire rarely arises without robbery, violence and injustice, or is at least taken and possessed by evil people, often with vain injustice, so that the Scriptures, Gen. 10, 9, also call the first prince on earth, Nimrod, a mighty hunter.

(42) But none ever arose with such murder and robbery, and became so powerful, as the Turks, who still murder and rob daily. For it is commanded them in their law, as a good divine work, that they should rob, murder, and devour and destroy, as they do, thinking that they are doing God a service. Therefore, it is not a divine order.

It is not the duty of the authorities, like others, to keep the peace, to protect the pious and to punish the wicked, but, as I have said, a pure wrath of God and punishment on the unbelieving world. And this same work of murdering and robbing is pleasing to the flesh without, so that it floats above and throws everyone's body and goods under itself; how much more must it be pleasing when a commandment is added to it, as if God wanted it that way and was pleased with it. For this reason, the Turks consider those to be the best who work diligently to increase the Turkish empire and continue to rob and murder.

And such a piece must also follow from the first piece. For Christ speaks Joh. 8,44. that the devil is a liar and a murderer. With the lie he kills the souls, with the murder the body. Where he wins with the lie, he does not celebrate and does not fail, he follows with murder. So, since Mahomet was possessed by the lying spirit, and the devil had murdered the souls through his Alkoran, and had disturbed the Christian faith, he had to leave, and also take the sword, and attack the bodies to murder. And so the Turkish faith did not come so far with preaching and miracles, but with the sword and murder, and it truly succeeded through God's wrath, so that, because all the world has a desire for the sword, robbery and murder, one day one would come who would give it enough murder and robbery.

(44) Yes, commonly all the spirits of the rotten ones, when the spirit of lies has possessed them and seduced them from the right faith, they have not been able to refrain from it; after the lie they have also come to murder, and have subjected themselves to the sword, as a sign that they were children of the father of all lies and murder. So we read how the Arians became murderers, that also one of the greatest bishops of Alexandria, called Lucius, drove the orthodox out of the city, and entered the ship, personally holding a mere sword in his hand, until the orthodox had all entered and had to leave. And many other murders they committed, the tender holy orders, already ready at the time, which is now at twelve hundred years.

45 Item, what murderers have been to St. Augustine's times the Donatists, the same holy father shows superfluous in his writings, which is also at eleven hundred years; so even temporally the clergy rose; that makes, they were well with name and larvae bishops among the Christians, but because they fell from the truth, were subject to the lying spirit, they had to go away completely in his service, and become 1) wolves and murderers. And what did Muenzer seek now in our times, but to become a new Turkish emperor? He was possessed by the lying spirit, so there was no stopping him; he had to take up the other work of the devil as well, the sword, murder and rob, as the spirit of murder drove him, and caused such turmoil and misery.

46 And what should I say about the most holy. Father Pope? Is it not because he and his bishops have become world rulers, and have fallen from the Gospel through the lying spirit to their own human doctrine, that they have committed vain murder until this very hour? Read the histories from that time on, and you will find how the popes and bishops have made it their business to set emperors, kings, princes, countries and people on each other, and to wage war themselves, and to help murder and shed blood. Why? Because the lying spirit does nothing else, because after he has made his disciples lie teachers and seducers, he has not rest, he also makes them murderers, robbers and bloodhounds. For who has commanded them to wield the sword, to wage war, to incite and provoke to murder and war, which should wait for preaching and praying?

(47) They reproach me and mine for sedition, but when have I ever sought or provoked the sword, and not rather taught and kept peace and obedience? except that I have instructed and exhorted worldly authorities in their office to administer peace and justice. By the fruits one should know the tree [Matth. 7, 16]. I and mine keep and teach peace; the pope with his own wars, murders, robs, not only his repugnants, but burns, condemns and persecutes even the innocent, the pious, the orthodox, as a true end-Christian. For he does this sitting in the temple of God [2 Thess. 2, 4] as a head of the church, which the Turk does not do. But as the pope is the end-Christ, so the Turk is the devil incarnate. Our and Christianity's prayer goes against both of them. They shall also go down to hell, and should the last day do it, which (I hope) will not be long.

48 Summa, as it is said, where the spirit of lies rules, there the spirit of murder is also with him, he comes to the work, or is prevented. If he is prevented from the work, he laughs, praises and rejoices when the murder takes place, and approves of the worst, because he thinks it is right. But pious Christians do not rejoice in murder, not even in the accidents of their enemies. Since Mahomet's Alkoran is such a great and manifold liar that he leaves nothing to Christian truth, how could it be otherwise than that he would also become a great and powerful murderer, both under the appearance of truth and justice? As null the lie disturbs the spiritual state of faith and truth, so murder disturbs all worldly order, so established by God. For it is not possible, where murder and robbery are in practice, that there is a fine, praiseworthy worldly order, because before war and murder they cannot respect peace nor wait for it, as one can well see with the warriors, therefore also the Turks do not respect building and planting very much.

49 The third part is that Mahomet's Alkoran does not respect the marriage state, but allows everyone to take wives as much as he wants. Hence it is the custom among the Turks for a man to have ten or twenty wives, and to leave and sell them again as he pleases, and when he pleases; for the wives are of no great value and are despised in Turkey, being bought and sold like cattle. Whether now perhaps some few do not need such free law, nevertheless such law applies and goes freely, who wants to do it. But such a being is not a marriage, and cannot be a marriage, because no one takes or has a wife of the opinion to remain with her forever as one.

1) "and" is missing in the Jena.

Body, as God's word says in Gen. 2, 24: "The man shall cleave to his wife, and two shall be one body"; that the marriage of the Turks is almost like the chaste life that warrior servants lead with their free women; for Turks are warriors, they must keep themselves warlike. Mars and Venus, say the poets, want to be with each other.

50 These three pieces I now want to tell, which I am certain from the Alkoran of the Turks. For what else I have heard, I will not bring forth, because I cannot be sure. Let there be some Christians among the Turks; let there be some 1) monks among them; let there be some respectable laymen: but what good can there be in the regiment and in the whole Turkish way and being, because according to their Alkoran these three things reign freely among them, namely, lies, murder, adultery, and everyone must keep silent about Christian truth, that they may neither punish nor correct such three things, but must look on and, as I see to it, at least approve of them with silence. How can a gruesome, dangerous, terrible prison be, but live under such regiment? Lying disturbs (as I said) spiritual status; murder disturbs worldly status; illegitimacy disturbs marital status. Now take away from the world veram religionem, verampolitiam, verum oeconomiam, that is, right spiritual being, right worldly authority, right housekeeping: what remains in the world but vain flesh, world and devil? There is a life, 2) as the life of good fellows, so with harlots' households.

(51) But that it is said how the Turks are faithful and kind to one another, and take care to speak the truth, I will gladly believe, and think that they have more good and fine virtue in them. No man is so bad, he has something good about him. Sometimes a free woman has such a good nature in herself as hardly ten honest matrons have. So the devil also wants to have a cover and be a beautiful angel, as an angel of light [2 Cor. 11:14], therefore he is a good man.

1) Taken by us from the old edition of Walch. In the editions: "jr eigen", which is hardly correct.

2) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer and Erlanger: Da ein Leben ist.

He also applies before some works, as works of light.

Murderers and robbers are much more faithful and friendly among themselves than their neighbors, yes, even more than many Christians. For where the devil receives the three pieces, lies, murder, and adultery, as the right stones and workpieces for the foundation of hell, he may well suffer, yes, help, that carnal love and faithfulness, as precious gems, which are nothing but straw and hay, are built upon them, he knows well that [it] will not remain before the fire in the end. In the same way, where there is right faith, right authority, right marriage, he is opposed to little love and faithfulness appearing there, and also to little being shown, so that he may also disgrace and despise the foundation.

And, what is more, when the Turks go to battle, their slogan and their cry is no other word than Alla, Alla, and they cry out so that heaven and earth resound. But Alla is called God in their Arabic language, from the broken Hebrew Eloha. For they have learned in their Alkoran that they should always praise these words: There is no God but God; which are all the right devil's words. For what is it said: there is no God but God? And yet he singles out no god before others. The devil is also a god, and they honor him with such a voice, there is no doubt about it. Just as the Pabst's warriors shout: Ecclesia, Ecclesia! yes, of course, the devil's Ecclesia. That is why I believe that the Turks do more in war than they do themselves; he gives them courage and cunning, leads their sword and fist, horse and man. How do you think about the holy people, who can call God in battle, when they have destroyed Christ and all God's words and works, as you have heard?

54 To holiness belongs also that he suffers no images, and is even holier than our iconoclasts; for our iconoclasts suffer and like to have images on the florins, pennies, rings and jewels, but the Turk none at all, coins vain letters on his coin. He is also a coiner, because he eradicates all authority and suffers no order in the secular state, as, princes, counts, lords, nobility, and others.

He is not a feudal lord, but is the sole lord of everything in his country, giving only wages and no goods or authority. He is also papist, for he believes to be holy and blessed by works, and considers it no sin to disturb Christ, to destroy authorities, to destroy marriage. Which three things the pope also does, but in a different way, namely with hypocrisy, as the Turk does with violence and sword. Summa, as I said, there is the basic soup of all abominations and errors.

(55) I will tell this to the first man, that is, to the Christian crowd, so that he may know and see what great need there is to pray, and that one must first strike the Turk's alla, that is, his god, the devil, and thus push his power and divinity away from him; otherwise, I am concerned, the sword will do little. For this man should not physically fight with the Turk, as the Pope and his followers teach, nor resist him with his fist, but recognize the Turk for God's ruthlessness and wrath, which the Christians must either suffer, if God visits their sin, or fight against him and chase him away with repentance, weeping and prayer alone. If anyone despises this counsel, let him despise it; I will see what he will do to the Turk.

The other man.

The other man who is due to fight against the Turks is Emperor Carol, 1) or whoever is the emperor; for the Turk attacks his subjects and his emperorship, who is obliged to defend his own, as a proper authority set by God. However, I hereby state that I do not want to provoke or instruct anyone to fight against the Turk, unless the first way is first kept, of which it is said above that one first atones and reconciles with God 2c. If anyone wants to get at this, let him dare his adventure. It behooves me to speak no further than to tell each man his office and to instruct his conscience.

57 I can see that kings and princes are so lax and careless in their attitude against the Turks, that I immediately have a great worry, they despise God and the Turk too highly, or perhaps do not know how powerful a lord the Turk is, that no king of a desolate country, be it which it wants, is alone enough to resist him, unless God wants to do miraculous signs. Now I cannot provide myself with any miraculous signs, nor with special graces of God over Germany, where one does not mend one's ways and honors the word of God differently than has been done so far.

58 Well, enough has been said about that, whoever wants to let him say it. Let us now talk about the emperor.

59) And 2) first, if one wants to wage war against the Turk, that one does so under the emperor's command, banner and name. For then every man can assure his conscience that he will certainly walk in obedience to the divine order, because we know that the emperor is our rightful ruler and head; and whoever is obedient to him in such a case is also obedient to God; but whoever is disobedient to him is also disobedient to God; but if he dies in obedience, he dies in good standing, and where he has otherwise atoned, and believes in Christ, he is saved. I think that everyone will want to know this better than I can teach it, and God would have them know it as well as they think they do. But let us talk about it further.

(60) Secondly, the emperor's banner and obedience should be just and simple, so that the emperor seeks nothing else but the work and duty of his office, to protect his subjects; and those who are under his banner also seek the work and duty of obedience. You should understand this simplicity to mean that one should not fight against the Turk for the reasons for which emperors and princes have been tempted to fight until now, such as to gain great honor, fame and property, to increase land, or out of anger and revenge, and all such things. For therein vain selfishness is sought, and not righteousness or obedience. That is why we have had no luck so far, neither in fighting nor in advising against the Turks.

2) "And" is missing in the Wittenberger.

3) Wittenberger: also God.

1) Wittenberger: "is the Roman Keiser, who nu Keiser is."

61, Therefore, let this incitement and agitation stand, since the emperor and princes have been incited to fight against the Turks, as the head of Christendom, as the protector of the church and protector of the faith, so that he should eradicate the Turkish faith, and have thus based the incitement and exhortation on the Turks' wickedness and evil. Not so, for the emperor is not the head of Christendom, nor the protector of the gospel or the faith. The church and the faith must have another protector than the emperor and kings are; they are commonly the worst enemies of Christianity and the faith, as the 2nd Psalm, v. 2, says, and the church everywhere complains. And with such irritation and exhortation one only makes it worse and angers God the more, because one reaches into his honor and work, and wants to appropriate it to men; which is idolatry and blasphemy.

Even if the emperor should exterminate the infidels and unbelievers, he would have to attack the pope, bishops and clergy, perhaps not sparing ours and his own; for there is enough abominable idolatry in his empire that it is not necessary to deny the Turks because of it. There are too many Turks, Jews, pagans, and unbelievers among us, both with publicly false doctrine and with an annoyingly shameful life. Let the Turk believe and live as he pleases, just as the papacy and other false Christians are allowed to live.

The Emperor's sword has nothing to do with faith, it belongs to physical, worldly matters, so that God will not become angry with us, if we pervert and confuse His order, and He in turn will also pervert and confuse us in all misfortune, as it is written: "You pervert with the perverted" [Ps. 18:27]. As we may well feel and grasp the happiness we have had against the Turks, since they have caused heartache and sorrow with the Cruciata, 2) with indulgences and the giving of the cross, and have thus incited the Christians to the sword and to war against the Turks, who, after all, have been associated with the

1) Wittenberger: den.

2) Cruciata will probably mean the cruise.

Word and prayer should contend against the devil and unbelief.

64 Rather, this is what should be done: to admonish the emperor and princes of their office and duty, that they think diligently and earnestly to handle their subjects in peace and protection against the Turks, God grant that they are Christians for themselves or not, although it would almost be good that they were Christians. But since it is and remains uncertain whether they are Christians, but it is certain that they are emperors and princes, that is, that they are commanded by God to protect their subjects, and that they owe it to Him to do so, one should let go of the uncertainty and play the game of conscience, drive them with diligent preaching and exhortation, and weigh down their consciences to the utmost, as they owe it to God, not to let their subjects be so miserably ruined, and as they do great and excellent sin, not to consider their office in this, and not to appear with help and counsel to the best of their ability to those who are to live under their protection with body and goods and are bound by oaths and debts.

For it seems to me, as much as I have sensed in our imperial assemblies, that neither emperors nor princes themselves believe that they are emperors or princes. For they are acting as if it were at their discretion and pleasure whether they should save and protect their subjects from Turkish violence or not; and the princes do not care about anything, nor do they think that they are highly indebted and obligated before God to be helpful and supportive to the emperor in this with their bodies and goods. Each of them lets it go and pass as if it were none of his business, or had neither commandment nor necessity that compels him to do so, 3) but as if it were in his free will to do or not to do.

66) Just as now, the common man does not think that he owes God and the world, if he has a skilled son, to put him in school and let him study, but everyone thinks that he has free power to raise his son according to his will, that it remains God's word and order where they are.

3) Walch and Erlanger: zwinge. In the old editions: zwünge.

want. Yes, the city councils and almost all authorities do the same, letting the schools dissolve as if they were free of them and had indulgences for it. No one thinks 1) that God earnestly commands and wills to draw the skilled children to His praise and work, which cannot be done without the schools; but for worldly nourishment everyone is now in a hurry and haste 2) with his children, as if God and Christendom had no more pastors, preachers, ministers, and the worldly authorities no more chancellors, councilors, or scribes. But of that another time; the pen must remain empress, or God will let us see another.

This is also what emperors, kings and princes do. They do not consider that God's commandment requires them to protect their subjects; it should be up to them to do so when they feel like it or have a good time to do so. Rather, let us all do so; let no one look at what he is commanded to do and what God commands and requires him to do; but let all our actions and duties be of our own free will, and God will give us happiness and grace, so that both of us, here by the Turk and there by the devil, will be plagued forever.

68 So then a useless launderer (a legate, I would say) should come from Rome, and admonish and incite the estates of the empire against the Turk with reports of how the enemy of the Christian faith has done so much harm to Christianity, and the emperor, as the sovereign of the church and protector of the faith, should do 2c. to this, just as if they themselves were great friends of the Christian faith. But I say to him: They have led your mother to beer for you, you impotent chatterer, for you do nothing with that, as if the emperor should once do a good Christian unbidden work, which is at his discretion, and his conscience is not touched by it, or he is reminded of his necessary office, commanded by God, but put at home to his good will.

69. but so should a legacy on the

1) Wittenberger: commemorates.

2) "Eile" here is noun and "jedermann" the dative. Dietz, Wörterbuch, s. v. "eile".

3) "that" is missing in the Erlanger.

If you want to be emperors and princes, act as emperors and princes, or the Turk will teach you through God's wrath and disfavor. Germany, or the Empire, has been given to you by God and commanded that you should protect, govern, advise and help it, and not only should, but also must, at the loss of your souls' blessedness and divine favors and graces.

70 But now it is clear that you are not in earnest, nor do you believe it, but you consider your office a joke and a disgrace, just as if it were a mummery for carnival. For you let your subjects, who are commanded to you by God, be miserably tormented by the Turk, led away, violated, plundered, strangled and sold. Do you not think that, because God has commanded you such an office and given you money and people for it, you can do it well and carry it out, that he will demand from your hands all your subjects, whom you have so shamefully abandoned, and meanwhile you have danced, bragged, flaunted and played?

For if you seriously believed that you were appointed and ordered by God to be emperors and princes, you would leave off for a while the building and struggling for high seats and other useless splendor and faithfully counsel how you would fulfill your office and God's commandment, and save your conscience from all the blood and sorrow of your subjects, which the Turk commits against them. For how can God or a godly heart think otherwise of you than that you are enemies of your subjects, or that you have a secret alliance with the Turk, or at least that you consider yourselves neither emperors nor princes, but mere dolls and puppets, where children play along? Otherwise it would be impossible for your conscience to leave you alone, since you seriously considered yourselves to be sovereigns set by God, that you should not even speak and counsel about such things in a different way than has been done so far, because you see that you yourselves are Turks.

4) Banketen - Banketiren, holding banquets.

Become without ceasing to your own subjects.

72. Yes, meanwhile take before you Luther's things, and act in the devil's name, whether one may eat meat during fasting, and nuns may take men and the like, of which you are not commanded to act, nor has God given you a single commandment to do so; And meanwhile hang in the smoke this serious, strict commandment of God, so that he has set you as patrons over poor Germany, and meanwhile become murderers, traitors and bloodhounds to your own pious, faithful, obedient subjects, and let, yes, throw them meanwhile 1) into the jaws of the Turk, as a reward, so that they put body and money, goods and honor with you and advance them to you. A good orator can see here what I would like to say if I were skilled in the art of oratory, and what a legate should do and say at the Diet if he wanted to perform his duties faithfully and honestly.

That is why I said above that Carolus, or 2) the emperor, should be the man to fight against the Turk, and under his banner it should go. O! such is so easy that [it] has long since torn at everyone's shoes, and Luther herewith teaches nothing new, but a vain, rotten old thing. Yes, my dear, the emperor should truly look at himself with different eyes than he has done so far, and you should also look at his banner with different eyes. I speak well of the same emperor and panier, since you speak of, but you do not speak of the eyes, since I speak of. God's commandment is to be seen in the banner, which says: Protect the righteous, punish the wicked. Tell me, how many are those who can read such things in Caesar's banner, or believe them in earnest? Don't you think that their conscience would frighten them if they looked at the banner, as they would have to acknowledge themselves highly guilty before God of neglecting to protect and help their faithful subjects? Dear, it is not a bad silk cloth, a banner, there are letters on it, who will read them, the tickling and the panketiren shall well pass away.

74 However, the fact that it has been considered bad up to now

The fact that the princes considered it a silk cloth proves itself, because the emperor would have thrown it up long ago; then the princes would have followed, and the Turk would not have become so powerful. But since the princes called it the emperor's panier with their mouths, and yet were disobedient with their fists, and in fact considered it to be a mere silk cloth, it went as it is now before our eyes. And may God grant that we may not henceforth be too slow, I with my admonition, and the lords with their banner, and may it be done to us as it was done to the children of Israel, who at first would not fight against the Amorites, when God commanded, but afterwards, when they would, they were smitten, for God would not be with them. But 3) Let no one despair; repentance and righteousness always find grace.

After that, when emperors and princes realize that they owe such protection to their subjects out of God's commandment, mail should also admonish them that they should not be presumptuous and do so out of defiance, or rely on their own power or ideas, as one finds many foolish princes who say: I have the right and justification, therefore I will do it. They go there with pride and insistence on their power, but in the end they also win the fight in their necks. For if they did not feel their power, justice would move them little enough, as is proven in other matters, where they do not respect the law.

Therefore, it is not enough for you to know that God has commanded you to do this or that; you must also do it with fear and humility. For God does not command nor command anyone to do anything by his own counsel or power, but he also wants to be in the game and to be feared. Yes, he wants to do it through us and be asked for it, so that we do not presume and forget his help, as the Psalter says, Ps. 147, 11: "The Lord is pleased with those who fear him and wait for his goodness. Otherwise, we should think that we can do it, and that we do not need God's help, and that we do not take advantage of His goodness.

3) Erlanger: Still.

4) "wohl" is missing in the Wittenberger.

5) "not" is missing in the Wittenberger.

1) "dieweil" is missing in the Wittenberg.
2) "Carolus or" is missing in the Wittenberg.

of victory and the honor that is his alone.

Therefore an emperor or a prince should learn the verse in the Psalter, Ps. 44, 7, 8: "I will not rely on my bow, and my sword will not help me. But thou wilt save us from our enemies, and put to shame them that hate us," and what more the same whole Psalm says. And Ps. 60:12, 13, 14: "O Lord God, you do not go out to our army. Help us in our distress, for the help of men is of no avail. With God we will do deeds, he will trample our enemies" 2c. Many kings and great princes, from the beginning to this day, have had to make such and such sayings come true with their own examples, which nevertheless had for themselves God's commandment, justification and right; therefore, let emperors and princes not be a joke.

78. Here read the excellent example, Judges 20:18, 21, 23. 20, 18. 21. 23. that the children of Israel were twice defeated by the Benjamites, despite the fact that God had called them to fight and had the best of rights. But their defiance and presumption overthrew them, as the text there says: fidentes fortitudine et numero. It is true, horse, man, weapons and everything that is necessary for fighting, one should have, if it can be obtained, so that one does not tempt God. But if one has it, 1) one should not defy it, so that one does not forget or despise God, for it is written: "all victory comes from heaven" [1 Macc. 3, 19].

If these two things are there, God's commandment and our humility, then there is no danger or need, as far as the other man, the emperor, is concerned, then we are strong enough for all the world and there must be happiness and salvation. But if there is no good fortune, then there is certainly a lack of both of these, so that either one does not get it out of obedience to divine command, or out of presumption, or the first man of war, the Christian, 2) is not there with his prayer.

(80) And is it not necessary here to admonish that one seek neither honor nor spoil in the dispute; for he who disputes with humility and in obedience to divine command, and alone, be-

If a man, in accordance with his office, simply means to protect and shield his subjects, he will probably forget the honor and the spoils. Yes, it will come to him unsought more abundantly and more gloriously than he may wish.

(81) Here shall someone say, Where shall such pious men of war be found, who will keep such things? Answer: The gospel is preached to all the world, and yet very few believe; nor does Christianity believe and remain the same. So I also write these lessons, not hoping that they will be accepted by all; indeed, the more part shall laugh and mock at me for it. It is enough for me, where I could teach some princes and subjects with this book; even if they are the fewest number, there is no power in my hands, there should still be victory and happiness enough. And if God wanted me to get only the emperor or the one who should get in his name and command, I would be very hopeful. It has happened several times, yes, it happens commonly, that God gives happiness and salvation to a whole country and kingdom through a single man, just as he also brings a whole country into all trouble and misery through a knave at court, as Solomon says in Ecclesiastes: "A single knave does great harm" [Eccl. 9:18].

82. So we read of Naaman, the captain of the king of Syria, that God gave happiness and salvation to the whole country through the same man, 2 Kings 5:1. So He gave great happiness to the kingdom 3) in Egypt through Saint Joseph [Gen. 39:5]. And 2 Kings 3:14, Elisha said to Jehoram king of Israel, "I would not look upon thee, if Jehoshaphat king of Judah were not there." And so, for the same time, the wicked kings of Israel and Edom had to be helped for the sake of a few pious men, who otherwise would have been ruined in all distress. And in the book of Judges one can see what good God did through Ehud, Gideon, Deborah, Samson and such individuals, although the people were not worthy of it [Judges 3, 21. 4, 4. 7, 24. ff. 16, 30.]. Again, what great harm did the Doeg, so to the

1) Erlanger: so shall.

2) In the old editions: the Christians.

3) Wittenberger: Kings.

What did Absalom do against his father David with the help and advice of Ahithophel, 2 Sam. 16, 22. 23!

This is why I speak, so that we should not be frightened nor moved by the fact that the greater number of unbelievers or unbelievers are fighting under the emperor's banner. Again, it must be remembered that a single Abraham is able to do much, Gen. 14:15 ff. and Cap. 18:24 ff. So it is also certain that among the Turks, as the devil's army, there is no one who is a Christian or has a humble and right heart. 1 Sam. 14, 6. The pious Jonathan said: "It is not difficult for God to give the victory by many or by few", and he himself did a great battle against the Philistines, which Saul was not able to do with the whole army 1). Therefore, it does not matter if the group is not good, if only the head and some of the nobles are righteous; although it would be good if they were all righteous, but this is not possible.

Furthermore, I hear that in German lands one finds those who desire the future of the Turk and his regiment, who would rather be under the Turk than under the emperor or prince. With such people it should be a nasty fight against the Turk. I know no better counsel against them than to exhort the pastors and preachers to diligently stand in the pulpit and faithfully instruct such people, to strike out their driving iniquity, how perfectly they are guilty of innumerable sins, and to incriminate themselves before God, where they are found in opinion. For it is a pity enough who must suffer the Turk to be his overlord, and bear his regiment; but willingly submit to it, or desire it, if he neither needs it nor is forced to it, he shall be shown what sin he commits, and how horribly he runs.

First, that such people become unfaithful and perjure themselves against their authorities, to whom they have sworn and obeyed, which is a great sin before God that does not go unpunished. For because of such perjury, the

1) "not" is missing in the Wittenberger.

Even the good king Zedekiah perished miserably because he did not keep the oath he had taken to the pagan emperor in Babylon [2 Kings 24:20, 25:7]. Perhaps such people think, or allow themselves to think, that it is in their power and arbitrariness to move from one lord to another; thus they proceed as if they were free to do and let what they want in this, forgetting and not considering God's commandment and their oath, so that they are tricked and guilty to remain obedient until they are forced out of it by force, or are killed over it. Just as the peasants in the next uprising also assumed, and were beaten over it. 2) For as one shall not strangle himself, but suffer if he be strangled by force by others: so shall no man turn himself out of obedience and oaths, unless he be brought out by others either by force, or by favor and leave.

86) The preachers must do this 3) with such people diligently and well, as they are compelled to do by their preaching ministry, in which they are obligated to warn and protect their parishioners from sin and harm to their souls. For he who willingly turns away from his master and goes to the Turk can never remain under the Turk with a good conscience, but his heart will always say to him and punish him thus: "Behold, you have become unfaithful to your overlord, and have robbed him of the obedience he owes, and have deprived him of his right and authority over you. Now no sin can be forgiven, the stolen goods must be restored; but how wilt thou restore to thy lord, when thou art under the Turk, and canst not restore?

(87) So both of them must go, that you must eternally strive and work, as you come again from the Turk to your overlord, or must eternally have remorse, sorrow and unrest in your conscience (God grant that despair and eternal death do not follow), that you have willingly given yourself under the Turks without need against your oath and duty, and must therefore be there with your body, but with your heart and soul.

2) Marginal gloss of the Wittenberg and Jena editions: Anno 1525."

3) Wittenberger: This.

know you yearn over. What have you won? Why didn't you 1) stay over earlier?

88 Secondly, that such faithless, apostate, perjured people commit a much more heinous sin than all this, namely, that they make themselves partakers of all the abominations and wickedness of the Turks. For whoever willingly gives himself up to the Turks makes himself their companion and accomplice in all their deeds. Now we have heard what kind of a man the Turk is, namely, a destroyer, enemy and blasphemer of our Lord Jesus Christ, and instead of the gospel and faith he sets up his shameful mahomet and all lies; in addition, he devastates all worldly authority and domestic or marital status, and his wars are nothing else but murder and bloodshed, as a true devil's testimony.

Behold, he who joins himself to the Turk must be subject to such terrible abominations, and all the murder, and all the blood that the Turk has ever shed, also all the lies and corruption, so that he disturbs Christ's kingdom and deceives souls, will come upon his head. It is a pity enough if someone has to be under such a bloodhound and devil with violence and unwillingness, see and hear his abominations, as the pious Lot had to do and suffer in Sodom, as St. Peter writes [1 Petr. 2, 7]; it is not necessary to seek or desire such willingly.

(90) How much rather should one die twice as an obedient man under his overlord in war, than that he, like a poor Lot, should be brought by force under such Sodom and Gomorrah; let it not be said that a pious man should desire to give himself willingly to it, in addition with disobedience and against God's commandment and his own duty. That would mean not only making oneself a party to all the wickedness of the Turk and the devil, but also strengthening and promoting it. Just as Judas not only took part in the wickedness of the Jews against Christ, but also strengthened and helped them. Pilate did not act as evil as Judas, as Christ testifies Joh. 19, 11.

1) So the Jenaer. Wittenberg and Erlangen: "bleibst", which by the way is also the imperfectum.

91 Thirdly, this also is to be imagined of such people by the preachers: If they already give themselves up among the Turks, then they have not improved anything for themselves, and their hopes and aspirations will be far lacking. For it is the Turk's way that he does not let all who are or have anything stay where they live, but sends them far away to another country, where they will be sold and have to serve. And go ye after them according to the saying, Run out of the rain, and fall into the water; and: Take up a plate, and break a dish; that evil may become evil. And it hardly serves them right; for the Turk is a true man of war, who knows how to deal with land and people, and how to win and keep both, better than our emperor, kings and princes. He trusts and does not believe such renegade people, and has the insistence that he can do it, and must not do so to the people, as our princes do.

This, I say, is what preachers and pastors must do with such apostate people, with diligent exhortation and deterrence, for it is also the truth and necessity. If there are those who despise such exhortation and do not let all this move them, let them always go to the devil, as St. Paul had to let the Greeks, and St. Peter the Jews, so that nothing shall frighten the others. Yes, I would, if it came to a quarrel, that none of them would be or remain under the emperor's banner, but that all of them would already be with the Turks; they would be beaten the sooner and would be more harmful than useful to the Turks in the quarrel, as they are both in God's, the devil's and the world's disfavor, and as they are certainly condemned to hell. For it is good to fight against such evil people, who are so publicly and certainly condemned by God and the world.

(93) One finds many a desolate, desperate wicked man; but what has some sense will undoubtedly turn to such admonition, and be moved to remain under obedience, and not so brazenly cast their soul into hell to the devil, but will much rather live under their overlord with all wealth and let the Turks strangle them over it.

2) "them" is missing in the Erlanger.

You say again, "If the pope is as evil as the Turk, whom you yourself call the end-Christ, with his clergy and followers; the Turk, on the other hand, is as pious as the pope, for he confesses the four Gospels and Moses along with the prophets; if one were to argue against the Turk, one would have to argue just as well, or much more, against the pope. 2c. Answer: I cannot deny it, the Turk considers the four Gospels divine and right, as well as the prophets, also praises Christ and his mother almost, but he nevertheless believes that his Mahomet is above Christ, and that Christ is no God; as is said above. Just 1) as we Christians also recognize the Old Testament for divine Scripture; but still, now that it is fulfilled and, as St. Peter says, Apost. 15, 10, is too heavy without God's grace, it is annulled by the gospel, so that it no longer binds us.

95 Mahomet does the same with the gospel, claiming that it is right, but that it has long since become obsolete and is too difficult to keep, namely, in those things where Christ teaches that one should leave everything for His sake, and love God with all one's heart, and the like [Matth. 19, 29, 22, 37]. Therefore God had to give another new law, which was not so hard and the world could keep, and that same law was the Alkoran. But if someone asks why he does not perform a miraculous sign to confirm such a new law, he says, "It is not necessary and in vain, for people had many miraculous signs before, when the Law of Moses and the Gospel went out, and yet they did not believe. Therefore his alkoran must not be confirmed by vain miraculous signs, but with the sword, which is more powerful than the miraculous signs. And so it has happened, and still happens, that with the Turks, instead of miraculous signs, the sword performs all things.

96 Again, the pope is not much more pious and looks like Mahomet out of proportion.

1) Here we have deleted "but" because it is too much.

similar, for he also praises with his mouth the Gospels and the whole of the Holy Scriptures, but he thinks that there are many things in them [too difficult and impossible], 2) and the very same things that the Turks and Mahomet consider too difficult and impossible, as Matth. 5, 27. ff. Therefore, he interprets them and makes consilia out of them, that is, counsels that no one is obliged to keep, except those who desire it; as Paris, along with other high schools, monasteries and convents, has taught this unashamedly up to now.

97 Therefore he does not rule with the gospel or the word of God, but has also made a new law and an alchemy, namely his decree, and drives it with the ban, just as the Turk drives his alchemy with the sword; he also calls the ban his spiritual sword, which is and should be called the word of God alone, Eph. 6, 17. 6, 17. Nevertheless, where he can, he also uses the secular sword, or at least invokes it and incites and provokes others to do so. And I am confident that if the pope could wield the secular sword as mightily as the Turk, there would perhaps be less lack of good will than with the Turk, as they have often tried.

98. and God also presses upon them both with the same plague, and strikes them with blindness, so that they are like St. Paul Rom. 1, 28. says about the shameful vice of dumb sins, that God gives them a wrong mind, because they pervert God's word. For both papistry and turkey are so blind and nonsensical that they both impudently commit dumb sins as an honest and praiseworthy thing. And because they do not respect the marriage state, it serves them right that it is a dog's wedding (and God wants it to be a dog's wedding), yes, that it is a French wedding and Florentine brides with them, and they make believe that it is well done.

For I hear horribly about horribly what a public glorious Sodoma Turkey is. Everyone who has looked around a little in Rome and in the French lands knows with what kind of wrath and plague God avenges the forbidden marriage there.

2) The sense requires an addition of the kind we have added here in the brackets.

and punishes that Sodom and Gomorrah, which were sunk with fire and brimstone before [Genesis 19:24], must be a joke and a prelude against these abominations, so that I am also very sorry for this piece of the Turkish regiment, yes, it should be very unpleasant in German lands.

What shall we do now? Shall we also war against the papacy, as well as against the 1) Turk, because one is as pious as the other? Answer: One as well as the other, so no one is wronged; for the same sin shall have the same punishment. This is what I mean, if the pope and his followers wanted to attack the empire with the sword, as the Turk does, then he should be as good as the Turk; as happened to him the other day before Pavia by Emperor Carl's army. For there is God's judgment: "He who takes the sword shall perish by the sword." [For I do not advise you to fight against the Turk or the Pope because of his false faith and life, but because of his murder and destruction.

But the best thing about the papacy is that he [the pope] does not yet have the sword, as the Turk does, otherwise he would certainly also subordinate himself to bring all the world under him, and yet he would bring them nowhere, except to his Alkoran, that is, to his decree faith. For he respects and knows the gospel or Christian faith as little as the Turk, even though he pretends to great Turkish holiness by fasting (which he himself does not keep), and [the papists] are thus worthy of glory, that they are nevertheless like the Turk, even though they are contrary to Christ 2c.

But against the papacy, because of its error and evil nature, the first man, Mr. Christianus, has awakened, and attacks him with prayer and God's word, has also met that they feel it, and rage. But no raging helps them, the axe is laid to the tree, the tree must be uprooted, where they do not bring other fruit. When I see that they have no intention of mending their ways, but become more and more stiff-necked the longer they go on, and want to stick their heads through it and boast: Three or above, bishop or physician. And keep them so pious, before they improve themselves or abandon their shameful behavior (which they themselves and all the world confess is neither good nor bad), that they go to their companion and brother, the holy Turk. Well then, may our heavenly Father also hear their own prayer soon, so that, as they say, they may become bishops or bathers, amen! they want it that way, amen! that be done, and come true, as it pleases God. 2)

You say further: How can the Emperor Carl fight against the Turk at this time, because he has such great obstacles and treachery against him from kings, princes, Venetians, and almost everyone? Answer: What cannot be lifted, let it lie. If we cannot go any further, we must let our Lord Jesus Christ advise and help us through his future, which cannot be far away. For the world has come to an end, the Roman Empire is almost gone and torn apart, and stands just as the kingdom of the Jews stood; when Christ's birth was near, the Jews had almost nothing left of their kingdom, Herod was the last. 4) So it seems to me now, because the Roman Empire is almost gone, that Christ's future is at the door, and the Turk is the last of this empire, as a handover 5) after the Roman Empire. And just as Herod and the Jews were enemies of each other, and yet held together against Christ, so the Turk and the papacy are also enemies of each other, and yet hold together against Christ and his kingdom.

However, whatever the emperor can do for his own against the Turk, he should do, so that, even if he cannot completely control such an abomination, he may, as much as possible, defend and endure to protect and save his subjects. To which protection the emperor should not only be moved by his duty, office and God's commandment, not only by the unchristian and desolate regiment,

2) Wittenberger: Amen.

3) So in all editions; "which" i.e. the day of his future.

4) "Letze" - Farewell. Walch and the Erlanger: "die Letzte.

5) d. i. Addition.

1) "den" is missing in the Erlanger.

that the Turk brings into the country, of which is said above, but also the misery and misery that happens to the subjects; which no doubt they know better than I, how the Turk acts cruelly with those whom he leads away captive, as with cattle, drags, drags, 1) drives away what can go, but what cannot go, quickly stabbed, whether young or old 2c.

(105) All this and the like should move all princes and the whole empire to mercy, so that they forget or leave their own affairs and quarrels for a while, and with all seriousness unitedly help the wretched, so that it does not go completely, as it did with Constantinople and Greece, which also quarreled so lukewarmly with each other and waited for their affairs until the Turk overpowered them all with each other; as he has already almost come close to us in the same matter. But if it is not to be, and our unrepentant life makes us worthless of all grace, counsel and comfort, then we must let it go and suffer under the devil; but with that, those who should help here are inexcusable and do not.

I want to say and testify clearly that I did not call Emperor Carol 2) the man who should fight against the Turk for nothing. Other kings, princes or authorities who despise Emperor Carol, or are not subjects, or do not want to be obedient, I will leave them to their adventures. They shall do nothing on my advice or admonition; I have written this to Emperor Carol and his followers, the others are none of my business; for I know the pride of some kings and princes who would like Emperor Carol to be nothing, and they themselves to be the heroes and champions who have brought honor against the Turk; I almost grant them honor, but if they are beaten over it, they will have it. Why don't they keep to the right head and proper authority with humility? 3) The rebellion in the peasants is punished; should

1) Wittenberger: puts d. i. beats.

2) "Carol" is missing in the Wittenberg, here and in the following passages where "the emperor" is mentioned.

3) From here to the end of the paragraph is missing in the Wittenberg. This omission seems to us to be intentional.

But if the rebellion in the princes and lords is also to be punished, I fear that very few princes and lords should remain. Well, God grant that the Turk may not become a master of such punishment, amen.

In the end, I will advise you kindly and faithfully, if it comes to the point that you want to fight against the Turk, then you should arm yourself and send in such a way that we do not hold the Turk in low esteem, and place ourselves, as we Germans are wont to do, and come armed with twenty or thirty thousand men. And even if we were fortunate enough to win, we would not press on, and would sit down again and have a drink until the need arose again.

108. And although I am unskilled in teaching such things, and they themselves certainly know better, or should ever know better; But because I see that they are so childish about it, I must think that either the princes and our Germans do not know or believe in the power and authority of the Turk, or that they are not serious about fighting against the Turk, but perhaps, just as the pope has robbed money from German lands in the name of the Turkish war and indulgences, so they now want to fool us about money, too, according to the papal example.

For this reason, my advice is that one should not make so little of the armaments and not sacrifice our poor Germans to the flesh bank. 4) It would be much better not to start the conflict at all, and to give the Turks their land and people in time, without bloodshed in vain, than to let them win with such an easy battle and shameful bloodshed, as happened in Hungary with King Ludwigen.

For warring against the Turk is not like warring against the King of France, Venetian, or Pope; he is a different man of war. He has people and money in abundance; he has beaten the soldier twice in a row, and the people have listened to him. Rather, his people sit in the armor every day, that he with three or four hundred thousand men soon

4) Wittenberger: would be sheerly so good.

If you cut off a hundred thousand men from him, he will soon be back with that many men, and yet he will still have the emphasis.

111 Therefore it is nothing to meet him with fifty or sixty thousand men, if there are not so many or more in ambush. For, my dear, count his land; he has all Greece, Asia, Syria, Egypt, Arabia, etc., which is so much land that even if Hispania, France, England, Germany, Welsh, Bohemia, Hungary, Poland, and Denmark are all counted together, they are still not equal to his land. And he is in addition all powerful in excellent ready obedience. And he is also (as I said) in daily armament and exercises of battle, so that he can press on and deliver two, three, four great battles one after the other, as he has proved with the Soldan. There is another majesty with this Gog and Magog than with our kings and princes [Ezek. 38, 2].

I say this because I am afraid that my Germans know it or do not believe it, perhaps they think they are powerful enough on their own and consider the Turk to be a lord like the king of France, whom they easily want to resist. But I will truly be excused, and not have my tongue and pen weighed down with blood, if a king or prince alone opposes the Turk. For it is said that God is tempted when someone of little power sets himself against a more powerful king, as Christ also indicates in the Gospel Luke 14:31. Especially because our kings are not so skillful that divine miracles can be performed on them.

The king of Bohemia is now a powerful prince, but God forbid that he should lie alone against the Turks, but have Emperor Carol as his captain, and press with all his might. Well, if you do not believe it, I will let you learn it from experience. I know well what kind of power the Turk has. The historians and geographers lie to me, 1) in addition to the daily news.

1) Walch and the Erlanger: mir denn.

Experience; which they do not do to me, that I know.

I do not say this to discourage the kings and princes from fighting against the Turks, but to admonish them to prepare themselves wisely and seriously, and not to attack things so childishly and sleepily; for I would like to see bloodshed and lost wars occur in vain, wherever they may be. But this seriousness would be, if our kings and princes would meanwhile wall up their affairs on one clan and here both, head and heart, both, hands and feet, would be united, so that a single body of a mighty group would be, from which, if a battle would be lost, one would have to follow up, and not, as has happened so far, let individual kings and princes go up: Yesterday the king of Hungary, today the king of Poland, tomorrow the king of Bohemia, until the Turk devours them one after the other, and nothing is done with it, except that our people are betrayed and sacrificed to the flesh bank, and useless blood is wasted.

For where our kings and princes unitedly stood by and helped each other, and the Christian man prayed for them, I would be undaunted and of great hope that the Turk would cease his raging and find a man like Emperor Carol who would be a match for him. But if not, but should go and stand as it goes and stands now, that no one wants to be one with the other, nor faithful to each other, each for himself a man, or with a beggar rider service to the field, I must let it happen, will also 2) gladly help pray; But it will be a weak prayer, because I can have little faith that it will be heard, because such a great thing is done so childishly, presumptuously and carelessly, since I know that God is tempted and may have no pleasure in it.

But what do our dear lords do? They think it is a joke; and, although it is true that the Turk is on our neck, even though he did not want to go out against us this year, he is still coming every hour.

2) In the old editions: zwarten.

is equipped and skillfully available to attack us unarmed and do that which he has forbidden you. Yes, the evil and unprepared when he wants. This is how our princes spirit wants to hear you.

act now, as they plague Luther and the gospel; this is the But herewith I want to keep my conscience safe. For Turk, this is where the power lies, this must go. Just as whatever measures and ways I advise for the Turkish they are doing now at Speyer, where the greatest thing is war, this booklet shall be my witness. If anyone else to eat meat and fish, and such foolish things.

May God honor you, you unfaithful heads of your poor goes, I will let him go; God grant that he may win or lose. people. What devil makes you deal so violently with I will not enjoy his victory, and I will not repay his defeat, spiritual, unpleasant matters that concern God and the but I will be excused from all the blood that has been conscience, and so lazily and lazily do the things that God shed in vain. For although I know that with this book I will has commanded you to do and that concern you and your not find a merciful master in the Turk, if it comes before him, I have nevertheless indicated the truth to my poor people, now in the greatest and nearest need, and Germans, as much as I am aware of it, and both, the thereby only hinders all those who sincerely mean well grateful and the ungrateful, want to advise and serve and would gladly do so? Yes, meanwhile sing and listen faithfully. If it helps, it helps; if it does not help, let our to the mass of the Holy Spirit, he has great pleasure in it, dear Lord Jesus Christ help, and come down from heaven with the last judgment, and strike both Turks and and will almost be merciful to you disobedient, unruly Pope to the ground, together with all tyrants and ungodly people, because you leave what he has commanded you, men, and deliver us from all sins and from all evil, amen.

54. Luther's Army Sermon against the Turk. *)

28 October 1529.

A Sermon to the Army against the Turk. Anno 1529.

Although I have given almost sufficient instruction in my booklet on the Turkish War as to the conscience and manner in which the war against the Turks should be conducted, I have the grace with my dear Germans that they neither believe nor listen to me until they wait too long, and faith comes into their hands, and then there is neither help nor counsel.

(2) Just as it happened to the people of Israel when they heard the prophets (as 2 Kings 17:13 ff).

We have been in the same situation now; no one wanted to believe what I wrote about the Turks. The same thing has happened to us 1) now; no one wanted to believe what I wrote about the Turk, until we now experienced it with such 2) great sorrow, and saw so many thousands of people strangled and led away in so few days. That is what we wanted. And if God had not helped us so miraculously and so unawares, we would only have experienced real misery in German lands.

1) "us" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) "so" is missing in the Wittenberger.

*On October 20, 1529, Luther informed Nie. Hausmann that he was working on this writing, on October 28 he wrote to Wenc. Link that the same would be printed (thereafter our time determination), and on January 3, 1530 Luther sent him and the Cordatus copies of the second edition. It was first published by Nickel Schirlentz in Wittenberg in 1529 and was reissued by him in 1530 and 1542. Furthermore, individual editions were published by Joh. Stüchs in Nuremberg in 1530 and by Georg Rau (Rhaw) in Wittenberg, 1541. In the collections: in the Wittenberg (1551), vol. II, 538b; in the Jena (1566), vol. IV, p. 472; in the Altenburg, vol. IV, p. 565; in the Leipziger, vol. XXII, p. 356; and in the Erlanger, vol. 3I, p. 80. We reproduce the text according to the Erlanger, which printed the first original edition, comparing the Wittenberg and Jena editions.

3 And if I know my dear Germans well, the full swine, 5 These things I have said against the unrepentant, then they should, according to their ways, sit down again stubborn enemies and persecutors of the word of Christ. and drink and live in safety with good courage, and not But because there are nevertheless many in the German need such a great mercy, shown, but forget it with all lands who love the word, and Christ doubtless has not a ingratitude and think: Ha! the Turk is now gone and fled, small number of members in them, for their sake this what do we want to worry much and spend useless costs sermon is to go out to comfort and admonish them in on it? he may never come back; so that we may honestly these dreadful and dangerous times. For the devil seeks receive our well-deserved punishment from God. Well, I through his witness, the Turk, not only to destroy the can do no more. When I said that one should not despise worldly rule, but also the kingdom of Christ and its holy the power of the Turk, that was a mocking and vain members from the faith, as Daniel says in chapter 7, v. 8. speech; there were many princes more powerful than he; Therefore I will divide this sermon into two parts. First, to I should not frighten the German princes so much nor instruct the consciences, then to admonish the fists. make them despondent. Let now the same jealousy come (6) To instruct the conscience is a good thing, that we forth, and comfort the princes, and despise the Turk's may know what the Turk is, and what he is to be held for, power. I mean, the Turk has made them liars and my according to the Scriptures. For the Scriptures tell us of words true.

(4) But for the sake of the wicked and blasphemers of Christendom before the latter day. One of them is a Christ they have not begun, neither have they left spiritual tyrant, who uses cunning or false worship and anything for their sake. Kings and princes, bishops and doctrine against the true Christian faith and gospel. Daniel priests have so far driven out and persecuted the gospel, writes in the 11th Cap., V. 36. ff, 4) that he should rise shed much blood and inflicted all plagues and above all gods, and above all worship 2c., whom St. Paul misfortunes on the servants of Christ, and the blasphemy also calls the end-Christ, 2 Thess. 2, 4. This is the Pabst and disgrace against the publicly recognized truth has with his Pabstthum, of which we have written enough. been so disgracefully great, and the people so The other one with the sword, bodily and outwardly, exceedingly wicked and wanton, that I have had to in the most horrible way, of which Daniel prophesies prophesy that Germany would soon have to pay God for mightily in chapter 7, v. 7 f., and Christ Matth. 24, 15. a foolishness; the same now goes forth and begins. God about a tribulation that has not been seen on earth, that help us and be merciful to us, amen. For since they are is the Turk. Therefore, because the end of the world is at so perfectly angry and wicked against Christ, that they hand, the devil must first attack Christianity with both his have wronged His word and His servants, 1) and He must power in the most terrible way and give us the right last suffer and be weak against them, He truly does right, moments before we go to heaven. Whoever then wants according to the saying: "No one was ever 2) so wicked, to be a Christian at this time, let him take heart in Christ, but a more wicked man came upon him" and departs, lets and only do not think of peace and good days from now himself be wicked, but sends to such wicked angry nobles on: the time of such tribulation and prophecy is here; another wicked man, the Turk, who wants to watch, likewise our defiance and consolation for the future of because they want to be wicked, which one will be wicked Christ and our redemption is also not far away, but will over the other. Now be evil who can be evil, now it is a quickly follow, as we will hear.

1) "exceedingly wicked" -- to be exceedingly wicked against, etc., in the following: to surpass in wickedness.

2) Erlanger: ward.

3) Walch and the Erlangeners: applies.

4) Here the Erlangen edition again reprinted Walch's false Bible quote "Dan. 12, 39.", furthermore all Walch's other false quotes in this writing, in total eleven.

(8) Therefore hold fast, and be sure, that the Turk is certainly the last and fiercest wrath of the devil against Christ, that he may drive out the bottom of the barrel, and pour out his fury altogether against Christ's kingdom; and also the greatest punishment of God on earth against the ungrateful and ungodly despisers and persecutors of Christ and his word, and without doubt the forerunner of hell and eternal punishment. For Daniel says that after the Turk judgment and hell shall quickly follow [Dan. 7:10]. And it is clear from the deed how horribly he strangles, impales and chops up people, children, women, young and old, who have done nothing to him, and acts as if he were the angry devil himself in the flesh, for no kingdom has ever raged with murder and rage as he does. Let us hear this from the prophet Daniel.

9 Daniel described four empires that would come on earth before the end of the world, as we read in Dan. 7, [v. 3-12],¹⁾ that he "saw four great beasts coming up out of the sea. The first was like a lioness, and had eagle's wings. The other was like a bear, and had three rows of teeth in its mouth. The third was like a parde, and had four wings and four heads. The fourth was a cruel and strange beast, and very strong, and had great iron teeth, so that it ate and tore about it, and what remained it trampled with its feet, and had ten horns.

(10) I looked at the horns, and behold, between them grew another little horn, before which three of the first horns were cut off; and that horn had eyes like men's eyes, and its mouth spake abominably. I watched until chairs were set and the old man sat down. The court was held, and the books were opened. I watched because of the horrible words the horn spoke, and I saw, that the animal was killed, and its corpse perished, and was thrown into the fire to burn, and the other animals' power was also suspended."

II This is the text of Daniel, told in the shortest possible way, as much as is necessary for us now. Now the interpretation follows in the same chapter [v. 16 to 27], where he speaks:

(12) I came to one who was standing by, and asked him the truth about all this. And he laid it out for me, and taught me thus. These four great beasts are four emperors who shall come on earth; but the saints of the Most High shall possess the kingdom forever.

(13) Then I would have liked to know what the fourth beast was, which was almost cruel, which had iron teeth and paws, and ate and tore, and trampled the rest with its feet, and what the ten horns on its head were. And what the other horn was, before which three horns had fallen, and of the same horn that had eyes, and a mouth, the abominable thing spake, and was greater than the rest. I looked, and behold, the horn fought against the saints, and prevailed against them, until the old man came and held judgment with the saints of the Most High, and the time came for the saints to possess the kingdom.

14] "And he said thus: The fourth beast will be the fourth empire on earth, which will be greater than all kingdoms, and will devour, trample and crush all lands. The ten horns are ten kings who belong to such an empire. And after him shall arise another, mightier than the first, and shall humble three kings. And he shall speak against the Most High, and shall tread down the saints of the Most High, and shall presume to change the order and the law; and they shall be delivered into his hand for a time, and for some time, and for a little time. So the judgment will be held, that the power will be abolished and broken, and finally perish. 2) But the kingdom, Ge-

2) Walch and the Erlangeners: "umkonnt". Jenaer: "Umkomme". Wittenberger: "umbracht werde". The Wittenberg edition closely follows the text of our Bible in the rendering of this entire passage of Daniel. Our redaction is found in the Jena and Erlanger.

1) In the editions of Nickel Schirlentz from 1530 and 1542, a woodcut is inserted here, on which the three parts of the world and the four animals, which Daniel describes, are depicted; likewise in the Wittenberg and Jena editions. The citation that follows is reproduced in the Wittenberg edition with the words of our Bible, Dan. 7, 2-12, with some omissions. Our redaction is found in the Jena and Erlanger.

Let the power and authority that is under the whole heaven be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is eternal, and let all kings serve and obey him.

15 This prophecy of Daniel is interpreted unanimously by all teachers of the four following empires. The first, the empire of Assyria and Babylonia. The other, the empire of Persia and Medes. The third, the Empire of the great Alexander and the Greeks. The fourth, the Roman Empire, which is the greatest, most powerful and cruel, and also the last on earth, as here Daniel clearly shows that after the fourth beast or empire follows judgment, and no other empire, but the kingdom of the saints, which is eternal. 2c.

Since 1) it is certain, and there is no doubt, that on earth the Roman Empire will be the last, as Daniel shows in chapter 2, v. 32, in the great image or pillar, which had a golden head, silver breast, bronze hips and iron thighs, it must follow that the Turk will be in the Roman Empire and must be included in the fourth beast. For this is decided: since the Roman Empire is the last, the Turk will and can never become as powerful as the Roman Empire was, otherwise not four but five empires would come on earth. Therefore, the Turk does not have to become emperor, nor does he have to establish a new or separate empire, as he may well have in mind. But he will and must certainly lack it, or Daniel would become a liar, which is not possible.

(17) Moreover, since the Turk is so great and powerful and is said to be in the Roman Empire, we must look for him in the Roman Empire and find him among the horns of the fourth beast, for it must be such a mighty thing as proclaimed in the Scriptures. Well, "horn" means a kingdom in the Scriptures, as here Daniel himself says that the ten horns are ten kings who belong to the fourth empire. So the Turk cannot be one of the ten, for the same horns are the kingdoms belonging to the Roman Empire.

have belonged, since it stood in its full power, as namely Hispania, France, Italia, Africa, Aegyptus, Syria, Asia, Grácia, Germany 2c. Such countries 2) the Romans have had all in full power, before then the 3) Mahomet or Turk has come.

(18) Daniel says that after the ten horns comes the little horn between the ten horns. Here the Turk comes and is found. For just as the little horn grows up among the ten and pushes away three of them, so a kingdom must come that grows in the aforementioned countries and kingdoms of the fourth beast or empire and gains three of them. All this shows and testifies also the work, and agrees with the text that Mahomet must be the same little horn, because he arose from little beginning. But he has grown in such a way that he has repelled and taken three horns in the Roman Empire, namely Egyptum, Greece and Asiam. For the Soldan 4) and Saracen have long had two of these horns or kingdoms inside, Egypt and Asiam, and have thus remained seated inside, as the Turk also sits inside to this day, and has gained the third horn, Greece, in addition. No one else has done this, and we see it before our eyes that it has happened: this is Mahomet's kingdom, there we have the little horn for sure.

(19) Even though the Turk chased away the soldier and took over such lands and held his court or seat elsewhere than the soldier did, it is not a different or new kingdom, but the same kingdom of Mahomet. For both, soldier and Turk, are of the same and equal faith, namely of⁵⁾ Mahomet. But that one drives out the other has also happened in almost all empires, that one brother has driven out the other, a magistrate has driven out his lord. How did it happen in Persia, since they moved the imperial seat and court from Media to Persia, nevertheless the same empire remained;

2) Wittenberger: "Such land", that is, such land. Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: Such land.

3) "the" is missing in the Wittenberger.

4) In the old editions, the spelling varies, sometimes the word is written "Soldan", sometimes "Soltan".

5) Wittenberger: den.

and the Assyrian Empire was transferred from Nineveh to Babylon, and the Roman Empire from Rome to Constantinople. So also now Mahomet's empire has been moved from Alcayr to Constantinople with the court camp, but nevertheless the same empire of Mahomet has remained. For the person and the court may well change in a kingdom, but the kingdom remains for itself in its manner, rule, faith and all its essence.

(20) Now that we have this same little horn, Mahomet and his kingdom, we can easily and clearly learn from Daniel what the Turk and the Mahometan kingdom are to be considered, and also what he is worth in the sight of God. First of all, he is supposed to be a mighty lord, as he is supposed to win three horns from the Roman Empire, that is, three almost the best kingdoms, as Egypt, Greciam, Asiam, and to keep them, and thus to be mightier than any of the ten horns. This is the clear text, and is thus found in the work; for no king, so gewest under the Romans, as France, Hispania, Welschland, Germany 2c., is so powerful as the Turkish or Mahometan empire, which the Turk now has. And thus sits almost in the middle of the Roman Empire, yes, in the Roman emperor's house, at Constantinople, as the small horn among the ten horns in the fourth animal means.

(21) Secondly, the horn has the eyes of man, which is Mahomet's alchemy or law, so that he rules; in which law there is no divine eye, but only human reason, without God's Word and Spirit. For his law teaches nothing but what human wit and reason can well suffer. And what he found in the Gospel, which was too difficult and high to believe, that he has delivered, especially that Christ is God and has redeemed us with his death 2c. This is what Daniel means when he points to the eye of the horn and says: "He will be subject to change the law and order, hear God's order, as the gospel and Christian doctrine.

22) Thirdly, it has a mouth that speaks abominable things, which are the cruel blasphemies, so that Mahomet not only denies Christ, but also completely abolishes Him, pretending that he is above Christ, much higher.

and more worthy in the sight of God than all angels, all saints, all creatures, and above Christ himself; as is clearly stated in his Alkoran, and the Turks boast daily, and the longer the more abominably they practice such blasphemies. Therefore Daniel speaks here of the same horn, and points to its great mouth: He will speak against the Most High, that is, teach against Christ, blaspheme him and defile him, so that 1) he does not consider him to be the Most High, but a bad and much lesser prophet than himself, and says that Christ's teaching has come to an end, since Mahomet has come.

23 Fourth, that he wages war against the saints of the Most High. This is not to be glossed over; I think we have seen and felt it so far. For the Turk is not so hostile to any people on earth as he is to the Christians, nor does he fight against anyone with such a thirst for blood as he does against the Christians, so that he may fulfill this prophecy of Daniel. Daniel calls the Christians saints of the Most High. For though there be many false Christians among the multitude, yet because the gospel and the sacrament, commanded by Christ, abide in one country, there are certainly many Christians in that same country; and though there be few of them, yet that same country, for their faith, preaching, and gospel, yea, for Christ's sake, which is the name, word, spirit, and sacrament there, is called Christian country, and the true saints of God. Therefore there are still many Christians in Turkey, and perhaps more than in any other country, as they are captives and must serve the Turk who has won them; as Daniel says here, that he should conquer against the saints and rule over them.

(24) As it happened in the days of Elijah the prophet among the people of Israel, when there were so many wicked and so few pious people that Elijah himself thought he was alone, and therefore desired to be dead [1 Kings 2:19, 4, 18], but yet there were found about seven thousand whom God had not forgiven.

1) "that" is missing in the Wittenberg.

2) Here is a striking example of how thoughtlessly the Erlangen edition was published. In Walch's edition, the number of the book was missing and the Erlangen edition printed: "Kings 19:4, 18" without adding the omission.

He had kept them pious and holy, for whose sake the people of Israel were called God's people and God's saints, as his name, word and spirit dwelt with them. As has happened now and up to now under the papacy, since everything has been so corrupted with human teachings and works that almost no Christians have been seen any more; but nevertheless some have had to be there, because Christ's name, baptism, gospel, sacrament, 2c. For the sake of which the whole country is called the land of the Christians, and they are called Christendom or Christ's people and God's saints, because St. Paul says in 2 Thess. 2, 4: The end-Christ, the Pope, should sit in the temple of God; now the temple of God is Christendom or the saints of God, as Daniel speaks.

(25) In this saying of Daniel, we must pay more attention and judge according to the Turk's opinion and will than according to the number of Christians. For the Turk does not take into account here how many or few holy Christians there are among us; he considers us all Christians, just as the name Christ is common to us all. For he is hostile to the Christian name, which the devil would gladly suppress with the sword of Mahomet; just as he also suppresses it with false doctrine among us, and thus wants to take revenge on our Lord Christ. Thus Daniel wants to say that according to the Turk's conscience and opinion all Christians (that is, saints of God) are whom he wars against, and considers that there is no worse nation on earth than the Christians. That is why the Turks call us no other than Paganos, that is, pagans; but they consider themselves the holiest people on earth.

The fifth, that he is fortunate in the wars against the Christians, and generally prevails and retains the victory. The same thing makes the Turks so proud, hardened and secure in their faith that they have no doubt that their faith is right and the Christians' is wrong, since God gives them so much victory and thus abandons the Christians, but they do not know that it is proclaimed here in Daniel that the Christians will be punished here on earth for their sin and that the innocent will be made martyrs. For Christ must have martyrs, that is why 1) he has always let his own succumb bodily and be weak; again, his enemies succumb and be mighty, so that he may sweep and purify his own, after which his enemies, when they have well begun and have come to the highest, will be brought home with hellish fire forever. The blind, senseless people do not know such a judgment and way, and think, because Christ presents himself so weakly, that there is no people on earth more pleasant than they. But they will run away and the game will suddenly turn before they think, as follows.

27) Sixthly, the last day and the kingdom of the saints shall quickly come upon the Turkish kingdom and rages, as Daniel says here, that the horn's wars and victories shall last until the old man comes and sits in judgment. The Turks do not believe that God will redeem us and cast them into hell. But how long this will last, that he is so victorious, no one can know; for Christ says that no one should know about that day, except the Father alone [Matth. 24, 36Z. As Daniel also says here with dark words: "They will be given into his hands for a time, and for some time, and for a little while, and then the judgment will be held [Dan. 7:25].

(28) From which it appears that the kingdom of the Turk shall be overthrown from heaven, and that no king shall come to subdue him and become mightier after him; as Daniel also says here that the body of the fourth beast, after the great 2) blasphemy of the little horn, shall be cast into the fire to be burned. Revelation 20:9 also says that Gog and Magog will be consumed by fire from heaven. The same is written in Ezekiel Cap. 39, 6, that God would rain fire and brimstone on Gog and Magog and on their army. Now there is no doubt that Gog was the Turk who came from the land of Gog, or the Tartars, in Asia, as the Histories prove.

29) Nevertheless Christ has given signs, so that it may be known when the last day is near, and therefore when the last day will come.

1) So the Erlangen. Wittenberg and Jena: had.

2) "large" is missing in the Wittenberger.

Turk will have an end, then we could certainly prophesy that the last day must be at the door. For since Daniel says here that in the fourth beast the little horn shall be the mightiest and last, and we see publicly that in the lands of the Roman Empire there is none mightier than the Turk, and after him shall come no more; so the half of the Turk's scripture is already fulfilled, for he has the three horns gone (as said), and Daniel gives him no more horn. Accordingly, it is to be hoped that the Turk will henceforth gain no more land of the Roman Empire, and what he does in Hungary and the German lands will be the last gossip and scramble that he will have with ours and ours with him, and thus an end; so that he may well pluck Hungary and Germany, but will not possess them quietly, as he possesses Asiam and Egypt. For Daniel gives him three horns, and no more; if he plucks and tears a little from the borders and neighbors, that is his nightcap for a good night.

(30) Therefore the war and victory of Mahomet, of which Daniel says, has happened and been fulfilled most in Asia, Grecia, Egypt, and will come to an end when he is most powerful and best equipped, so that he floats and drives safely, as no one can resist him or resist him, and still intends to gain much land. Just when the same hour will come, when he will still want to do so much, and will be defiant and greedy, then Christ will come upon him with brimstone and fire and ask why he has so horribly persecuted and plagued his saints, who have done him no harm, without any cause. Amen. For the scriptures are all fulfilled, so many signs have happened this time, and so great light of the gospel is present, and such great blasphemy, wantonness, iniquity in the world, as never was, nor could be more grievous, must break down and come to an end. 1)

(31) So far we have seen what the Turk and his Mahometan kingdom are to be considered according to the Scriptures, namely, that he is an enemy of God, and a blasphemer and persecutor of Christ and His saints through

1) In the Jena one is added: Amen.

Sword and war, so that he is immediately directed and instituted to rage with sword and wars against Christ and his own. For although other kings of old have also persecuted Christians with the sword, yet their kingdom and reign were not instituted and directed to blaspheme Christ and wage war against him, but happened by chance, out of an abuse. If one king has persecuted, another king 2) has subsequently been good, and has let it go, so that it is not the kingdoms or regiments themselves that have striven against Christ, but the persons who have had the regiment have sometimes been evil. But Mahomet's sword and kingdom are directed against Christ, as if he had nothing else to do and could not use his sword better than to blaspheme and fight against Christ.

32. From this every man can judge his conscience and assure himself, if he is called upon to fight against the Turk, how he should think and conduct himself, namely, that he should have no doubt who fights against the Turk (if he starts war), that he fights against God's enemy and Christ's blasphemers, yes, against the devil himself, so that he may not worry whether he is slaying a Turk, shedding innocent blood, or slaying a Christian, but is certainly slaying an enemy of God and blasphemer of Christ, whom God Himself has condemned to hellfire by the Scriptures of Daniel for an enemy of Christ and His saints. Therefore, no Christian can be a friend of God in the Turkish army, denying Christ and becoming an enemy of God and His saints, but are all of the devil's own and possessed with the devil, like their master Mahomet and the Turkish emperor himself. For you must well grasp and notice the words of Daniel, when he ascribes to the little horn the blasphemy against God and the strife against the saints of God; which words bear no good, but all evil and wickedness, from the Turk or Mahomet.

33. that is why in the previous booklet

2) "King" is missing in the Wittenberg.

so faithfully that one should not wage war against the Turk as under the name of the Christians, nor should one attack him with war as an enemy of the Christians. For here you hear that the victory against the Christians and the saints has been proclaimed to Mahomet or the Turk, as has happened so far in the three horns that he has pushed off, that is, in Grecia, Asia and Egypt. Christ wants to be weak and suffer on earth with his own, so that he may make fools of the mighty and put them to shame, and he needs their rage to make heaven full of martyrs and saints for him (even though they are ignorant of it), so that his kingdom will be full the sooner, and he 1) will come to judgment and give the tyrants their reward before they have a chance.

34. But I have advised and still advise thus: that every one should be diligent to be a Christian, willing and ready to suffer from the Turk and everyone, but should not fight as a Christian or under a Christian's name, but let your worldly overlord get you, under the same banner and name you should travel, as a worldly subject, according to the body that is sworn to his overlord to be obedient with body and goods; this is what God will have of you, Romans 13:1 ff. 13, 1. ff. Tit. 3, 1. and especially where such a conflict is not done for the sake of gain or honor, but to protect and shield country and people, wife and child, 2c. as this war is against the Turks. Thus we read of the dear holy St. Moritz and his companions and many other saints, that they went into battle, not as Christians, nor against the Christians, but as submissive obedient citizens or knights, demanded and summoned by their emperor, or other of their authorities, whom they were obliged to serve with body and goods, and were not called a Christian army or people, nor a Christian battle, but the emperor's people or army,

35 Behold, then, your conscience is right and fine, and you can be a courageous, joyful man, so that such heart and courage will undoubtedly make your body and horse the stronger. For thou art sure that in thy overlord's obedience, and in

You must not fear that you will meet innocent blood in the Turks' army, because you have heard that they have been sent by God as his enemies to death and hell. You must not worry or fear that you will meet innocent blood in the Turks' army, because you have heard that they are condemned to death and hell by God as his enemies. And it is granted to you by your overlord that you shall execute such judgment on the Turk, and now your fist and spear is and is called God's fist and spear, and thus you are God's, the greatest of all lords, executioner or executioner, against his great damned enemy; how could you argue more honestly and more praiseworthily?

(36) But if he should stab thee, or slay thee, how canst thou die a more righteous death, if thou be otherwise a Christian? For, first of all, Daniel stands there, and makes thee a saint, saying, The Turk fighteth against the saints of God; that on the Turk's and the devil's side there standeth the road, that he, as a murderer, may strike vain innocent and holy blood, and make as many holy martyrs as he slayeth on our side. Just as it is certain that he will strike vain innocent blood, because he attacks those he has no right nor cause to, and carries out such murders without command and necessity. It is also certain that he makes many martyrs (for there must be Christians among them where the Turk fights against the saints, as Daniel says), and so the Turk does to you what Daniel says of him, namely, that he is a murderer of saints and a maker of martyrs.

Secondly, your conscience is well assured that you will be found out and stabbed by God's commandment in your overlord's simple obedience. And if it is to be changed, you should a hundred thousand times rather be a Christian, an obedient citizen or knight, stabbed by the Turk, than have the victory of the Turkish emperor himself with all his goods and honor. For, as I said, you are certainly a saint if you act like a Christian and fight in obedience; heaven is yours, there is no doubt about it. But what is the Turk's victory and honor, even of all the world, against heaven and eternal life?

38) Remember, how would you have done if you had lived in the time of the martyrs, when you had been

2) "of" is missing in the Wittenberg.

1) "he" is missing in the Wittenberger.

would also have strangled the evil emperors and tyrants for the sake of Christ? Or, how would you do now, if the pope, bishops, our emperor or tyrants strangled you for the sake of the gospel, as happens to many? You would still have to 1) believe that they would make you a saint and a martyr, and be sure that you would be found in a right state and obedience. Now what is the Turk but such an evil tyrant who kills God's saints and makes them martyrs? Without the Turk doing this with all his might, without ceasing, and making many more saints before all others; as is fitting at the end of the world, that the devil should give our Lord Christ a good, rich death. Dear, it is an excellent word that Daniel says that the Turk should not torture a few individual saints, as other emperors do, but should attack them with all his might and overcome them. In the battle, however, many more saints must be defeated than there are individual martyrs who are martyred from time to time in addition to the battle.

Thou knowest well that thou must die some day, and that thou shalt not be sure of any day or hour of death. How, then, if such a battle against the Turk should be your hour, and thus ordained by God? Should you not rather, even with joy, surrender yourself to God in such an honest holy death (since you have so many divine causes, commands and orders, and are sure that you will not die in your sins, but in God's command and obedience, perhaps in a moment you will come out of all misery, and go to heaven to seek Christ), than that you should lie on your bed, and long struggle with your sins, with death and the devil, and bite, and fight, and wrestle, in all your travels and troubles, and yet not have such glorious commandments of God? Here you die alone for yourself, and a faint gland or pestilence eats you away; there, says Daniel, many saints die with you, and have divine, holy, lovely companies that ride with you.

40. summa, who can drive all kinds of the

1) Wittenberg and Jena: müssest.

Death, in which we daily float in water, in fire, in the field, at home, in the air, on earth? So many beasts, so many pestilences are around us; one falls from the roof, one from the horse, one falls into his knife; some hang, stab, drown themselves; one otherwise perishes, one so perishes; one is slain for the sake of money, one for the sake of a woman, one for the sake of a word, yes, some for the sake of charity: We have to wait for many such deaths every day, and some of us dare to do so with joy, since there is no just cause nor divine command, and the journey to get there is yearly and difficult, and we should be so lazy or despondent here, since we have certain commands and pleasures from God to obey our authorities with body and soul; and if we are found to be Christians, we will certainly have eternal life with the saints. Would that such death were to be sought at the end of the world, when the hour is at hand. And whoever will not be moved to this, no cheaper curse could be wished for him than that he should fall to the Turk and become a Turk, the servant of the devil, as his master, the Turk, is, condemned by God to death and hell.

41 I speak all this for those who are Christians or would like to be Christians, so that they may know how to judge and comfort themselves at this time, so that they may not be too afraid of the Turk or of the devil, his God. For if the Turk were to devour the Christians all at once (if it were possible), he would gain nothing by it, except that his damnation would be all the greater and would come all the more quickly, and would lead the Christians to heaven all the sooner. Let him be as angry and furious as he always wants to be, with all the devils as well, so he must be servant and servant of the Christians, and just with this help for their good, so that he means to destroy them, because Daniel stands there and says that they are saints whom he strikes and chokes. Thus says St. Peter, "And who is he that can hurt you, if ye pursue good?" [1 Pet. 3, 13.] David also in the 116th Psalm, v. 15. "O how delicious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." And in the 72nd Psalm, v. 14: "And their blood is precious in his sight." Such and such comforting ones,

2) Wittenberger: in.

Glorious sayings make such a judgment that the Turk is a murderer of saints and thus does himself the greatest harm eternally; again, that his anger and murder must serve here temporally and help the Christians to great eternal glory, without his thanks, will and knowledge.

Who is the best at deceiving and murdering the other? The Turk murders the Christians temporally, to eternal life, but in the same he murders himself, to eternal hellish fire with all the devils. For the Christians have too glorious, powerful sayings, as we have heard. And Daniel calls them saints, and the Turk a murderer of saints; he will not gain much, and the Christians will not lose much. But so Mahomet shall be paid with his own, and the Christians shall be avenged on themselves, and receive his reward from themselves. Therefore I do not consider it a masterpiece that the Turk, in order to frighten the Christians, cuts up their children, stabs them and impales them on the fence posts, and what else cannot be done, strangles everything and acts cruelly. It is a great fool's play, even in the sight of the world; for no pious man would be frightened by seeing his child and wife hacked to pieces and impaled, but would rather become angry and bitter, and would dare to put on the stocking and the stalk, and whatever else was left; and even if he were dead, the rest would or should become all the more bitter and angry, and dare to put everything on the devil's limb.

But in the eyes of the Christians, such rage is much less terrible, for they know that such impaled and chopped up wretched little children and pious people are vain saints, and that the Turk could not do them so much good for the hundredth part, if he also made each one a Turkish emperor himself, as he does by acting so cruelly out of the devil's wrath, for he thereby sacrifices them to God in heaven. Nor could the whole world avenge itself on him so richly and gloriously as he avenges such people on himself, for he thrusts himself into the abyss of hell.

(44) Yes, you say, he laughs at it and asks nothing of it with all his people. 2) Well, let him laugh at it, too, and not be worthy to believe or know it. Christ will soon 3) drive away his laughter and teach him all this. For I write this (as I said) to the Christians for comfort, and not to the Turks or Turks to laugh at. Daniel has written enough to him before 4) all of us, proclaiming him an enemy and blasphemer of God, condemned to hellish fire. If Daniel's writing is despised, it does not matter if our writing is also despised; we have the text, which does not teach us, nor does it prove to us, that God's saints are those against whom the Turk contends. If they are saints of God, a Christian does not ask much about how cruelly the Turk or the devil deals with the children and Christians on the outside of their bodies; there must be angels waiting for their souls and carrying them on their hands and bringing them to heaven.

45 For it is written in Ps 91:11, 12: "He hath commanded his angels concerning thee, that they should bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. So also saith Christ Matt. 18:10: "Verily I say unto you, that their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." We read in the books of Kings about the prophet Elisha, how he showed whole mountains full of fiery chariots and horsemen around him to his servant, against the Syrians. 2 Kings 6:17 If there were so many angels around the city for physical protection, how much more do you think that here in such a conflict the angels are there to receive and protect the souls of the Christians, or, as Daniel says, the saints of God? But that the Christians are not always protected bodily by the angels, as in the Old Testament, I have indicated above, that Christ will and must suffer here on earth, be weak and allow himself to be killed, so that his kingdom may be hastily increased and filled. For his

2) After "His", Walch's old edition has a question mark. The Erlanger has reprinted this as well.

3) Wittenberger: probably.

4) In the old editions: "for all of us", i.e. before we all lived. Cf. Dietz, Wörterbuch, p. 739, Col. 2, 2).

5) Wittenberger: such a whole.

1) Stocking - hull.

Kingdom is not bodily on earth, therefore his controversy is strongest when there is much suffering and many become martyrs; as he answers St. Paul 2 Cor. 12, 9. "Be content with my grace, for my power is made perfect in weakness."

46 In this case, Christians do the same, allowing them to enjoy the grace that they are Christians and saints of God through our Lord Christ, as Daniel says. And if it will not be otherwise, they will let the Turks win, boast and brag, but they will remain weak and let themselves be martyred. For they see that just as when they die there are vain angels waiting for their souls, so again in the Turkish army there are vain devils waiting for the Turks' souls and thrust them into the abyss of hell. Not that they should 1) throw away their arms and weapons, and thus let themselves be murdered by the Turks without defense, as the martyrs did and still do and should do, apart from their warlike deeds; But because Christians are subject to temporal authority, body and soul, and they are all called upon and summoned, each by his own authority, to fight against the Turks, let them do so as faithful, obedient subjects (as they certainly do, if they are true Christians) and gladly clench their fists and confidently strike, murder, rob and do harm as much as they can, because they have a vein to stir. For this is what their temporal authorities give them, to whom they owe obedience and such service, and God wants from them even unto death, Rom. 13, 1. Tit. 3, 1.

(47) Just as the holy martyrs of old did (as said above). When they were challenged by the emperor against a tyrant or other enemies, they did not throw down their arms and weapons and let themselves be murdered as the tyrant wished, for in doing so they would not have served their emperor well, indeed, they would have done much harm, but they faithfully clenched their fists and, according to their lord's command, happily stabbed and smashed, when they knew and thought that they would not be able to be considered as a "martyr" at that time.

Christians, but as servants and subjects of the emperor, were required with body and goods to fight, to strangle and to harm the enemies; and those who were slain in this way became vain saints, who were found to be not only true Christians, but also pious, obedient, faithful subjects. Christians should do the same, for the Turk is an enemy and a tyrant, not only against Christ but also against the emperor and our authorities; if the authorities demand it, they should go and throw themselves in like obedient subjects. If they are slain, well then, they have not only been Christians, but also obedient, faithful subjects, who have given body and goods to their overlords in obedience to God; blessed and holy are they forever, like the pious Uriah [2 Sam. 11, 17].

48 But because the Turk is nevertheless God's rod and a plague on sin, both of Christians and unbelievers or false Christians, let no one take such comfort and defiance, as has been said so far, and drive foolhardily and say: I am a Christian, I want it; but first convert and amend his life, and so come to such comfort and defiance with fear and earnest prayer. For I have said above that because Germany is so full of wickedness and blasphemy that it is too great a power and cries out to heaven, it cannot be otherwise if we do not amend ourselves and desist from persecution and blasphemy of the gospel, we must stand our ground and suffer a distemper; if the Turk does not do it, then something else must do it. Unless the last day itself comes. But if distemper or the last day comes, he who is a Christian and has corrected himself can suffer it and will be saved; the others must be punished and lost. I have written enough about this, that one should reform and pray, in a 3) booklet about the Turkish war, that it is not necessary to recover here.

2) "it" is missing in the Erlanger.

3) Thus the Wittenbergers and the Jenaers. Erlanger: that. Meant is the previous writing in this volume. Perhaps: "my" ?

1) Wittenbergers: they the.

The other part of the sermon against the Turk. 1) take all mercy from them and keep war people with it.

That is enough of the first part of this sermon, namely, Quod non tollit Christus, tollit fiscus. So it shall be, if thou to instruct and comfort the consciences. Now let us take wilt not give one florin for peace, to God for love and the other thing before us, also to admonish the fist, that service, give now ten or twenty for strife, to God for is, that one should dare and willingly stretch body and punishment and repentance. If we have received good goods to it; and where the authorities demand an from the LORD (says Job), why will we not suffer evil estimate for this dispute, that one should give the same also? [Job 2:10.]

as one owes, Rom. 13:7. In the same way, where it 51: To every activity there is a season, says demands the person or body, one should also run to it, Solomon, Ecclesiastes 3:1. Hitherto it has been the time because God has commanded obedience. For our noble of peace, now it is the time of strife; hitherto it has been squires have so far splurged, feasted, raced, prided the time of splendor and splendor, now it is the time of themselves, flaunted themselves with all too superfluous sorrow and labor; hitherto it has been the time of usury, food and clothing, thereby pouring all money out of the time of stealing, the time of scratching, now it is the German lands and corrupting themselves in body and time of spending, the time of paying and the time of goods (apart from what is sinful against God). It is time exertion; hitherto eating, drinking, dancing, rejoicing, 2) that they also prove their status and office and let it be laughing time, but now grieving, frightening, fearing, seen with seriousness that they are of nobility. Similarly, weeping time; hitherto resting, 3) sleeping, idling, safe the burghers and merchants have atoned long enough for living time; but now waking, restlessness, creating, their lust with excessive jewelry and innumerable usury weeping time. If we can gladly have that good time, and and avarice; if they have so long disguised, committed or yet thank God nothing for it, nor recognize it, let us now gathered so many hundreds of thousands of florins, they also tolerate this evil time and learn to thank God for that should also once repent of it for the sake of their hope, good time.

for which they have so far had such good quiet peace, and abused it.

50 So also the craftsmen and peasants have for so long deserved a good repentance by transgressing, toiling, stealing and robbing, in addition to other great willfulness and disobedience, especially since the gospel has come to light, through which they have become free and rich, redeemed from all toilers and beggars, so that they think they may no longer give to God nor to all his servants, but only to themselves, and snatch, on the market by transgressing as if they were stealing from the bag. For this they have had great peace, drunk, danced and sung in all security. Well, what they have saved, stolen and collected, what they have deprived their preachers and pastors of, they shall have brought together brother Veiten, the lansquenets, and have no thanks for it. The princes shall have it without

Yes, if God would always give us good times, and let us fill the earth up to heaven with all wickedness and courage, and let us be dear noblemen, we would like to suffer that, and so we are accustomed to good days and peace in all evil. Now we are lazy about the coming of evil times and strife, and we want to look askance and sour, to give treasure or to travel ourselves. Yes, we should be ordered. Why did you disobey before, when God's word was told to you? Now hear the devil in the Turk, who would not hear God in Christ.

(53) But if thou barest thyself, and wilt not give nor travel, well, the Turk shall teach thee, when he cometh into the land, and do unto thee as he hath now done before Vienna, namely, that he shall require of thee neither treasure nor journey, but shall set on thee house and farm, and take thee cattle and fodder, money and goods,

1) This caption is missing in the Erlanger.

2) Walch and the Erlanger: Freuens.

3) "Ruhens" put by us instead of "ringens" in the old editions, which we consider a printing error, instead of: "rugens", i.e. resting. This word is immediately followed by: "unruhe", i.e. restlessness.

stabs you to death (even if you feel well), violates or strangles your wife and daughter before your eyes, chops up your children and impales them on your fence posts. And in addition, which is the worst, you must suffer all this and see it with an evil, despondent conscience, as a damned unchristian who has disobeyed God and his authorities; or take you away with them to Turkey, sell you there like a dog, so that you must serve all your life for a piece of bread and a drink of water, in constant labor day and night, driven with rods and knuckles, and yet earn neither wages nor thanks. And where there is a storm, you must be the home of the lost 1) and do all the work in the army. Above all, hear no gospel, learn nothing of Christ and your soul's salvation.

Then you would gladly give one of two cows to be appraised, you would gladly offer half of your goods yourself, you would gladly travel under your prince yourself, you would gladly feed a preacher yourself who preached to you four times a year, and yet 2) everything will be for nothing. Behold, this is what you want, this is what you are struggling for now. For the Turk is the man who will teach you what good time you have now, and how miserably, ungratefully, wickedly you have spent, missed and misused it against God, His servants and your neighbor. The Turk knows how to discipline and humiliate the nobility, to chastise and make the burghers obedient, to tame the peasants and to atone for their courageousness. Therefore, think and be pious, and pray to God that the Turk does not become your schoolmaster; I advise you to do so, for he has shown all too horribly before Vienna how a fierce, impure disciplinarian he is.

I would wish (since our sins before God have left us so much wit and courage) that all Germans would be so minded that not a speck nor a village could be plundered nor led away by the Turk, but, if it came to such seriousness and yet, that what could defend itself would defend itself. Young and old, man and wife, manservant and maidservant, until they were all strangled, and even burned down house and yard and ruined everything, so that the Turks would find nothing 3) but young children, whom they would spear and hack to pieces without that, if they took us away alive, and we could not help them. And that this should be done with prior prayer to God, in which they commanded everything to His grace, and as in obedience to the authorities, as said above. It would be better to leave the Turk an empty country than a full one. And who knows what such a Thurst would create among the Turks? If we are led away, it is much worse for us than if we are strangled, as we heard above. And it is a great risk that we would fall from the Christian faith to the Turkish faith in Turkey, to the devil in hell.

56 The Romans themselves wrote of the German women that they had fought and fought in battle in the past, just as the men had. And which maid or virgin has not strangled an enemy, must remain a virgin as punishment. Thus the new histories write of the Turks, when they invaded Lemno in Greece and stabbed the gatekeeper, the gatekeeper's daughter, seeing her father dead, took up his defense, 4) and fought the Turks in the gate until the citizens came and drove the Turks away. The Turks themselves also do this, that they prefer to be strangled rather than captured, and do not accept any prisoners again, even though they would like to return home.

For I do not respect such a small house, where one would want to defend oneself from it, the enemies would have to leave hair over it. But the men of war know all this better than I, who know nothing about such opportunities and runs, but I speak of this because in such a case it must be risky, and no mercy can be hoped for from the Turk when he leads us away, but must suffer all misfortune, mockery and ridicule in body, and in addition in spiritual peril of the souls, be deprived of the word and their annoying Mahometan life.

3) In the old editions: "fünden." Walch and the Erlangeners: find.

4) Wittenberger: accepted.

1) "Der Verlorne Haufe" - the troop. Compare Tischreden, Cap. 62, § 1. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XXII, 1438. Also "die erste Angriffscolonne," Seidemann, Münzer, p. 84.

2) "doch" is missing in the Erlanger.

I thought it would be best to command God and, out of duty and obedience to the authorities, to resist as long as and in whatever way one could, and not to let oneself be captured, but to choke, shoot and stab the Turks until we were lying there. For the fact that you 1) thought to keep your life for the sake of the young children is nothing, because you have heard that the Turks stab, chop and spear all such children and what they may not carry with them, so that you can neither help nor save them 2) but would only have to see greater misery and wretchedness in them. 3)

(58) Though they carry away the children with thee, hope not that they will leave them with thee: nothing shall be done. In Turkey the Christians who are taken captive are sold like cattle and like sows; they pay no attention to who is father, mother, child or wife here; the woman is sold there, the man here. So it is with parents and children, that neither is left with the other, as the buyers and sellers wish. That it would be better everywhere to defend oneself at home and let oneself be strangled, in obedience to God's will and the authorities, than to give oneself up to such a dangerous, shameful prison. This is my good wish, but I think it will remain a wish. For I say this for the benefit of my dear Christian Germans, who would like to be informed; the others do not need it, they themselves are full of conceit, sackcloth and barrel. But if we want to fight and defend ourselves against the Turk, we will have to think differently and in a new way, and we will have to get used to it in a different way, both with heart and hand, than we have been used to so far.

(59) Here I must also admonish and comfort the Germans who are already captives in Turkey, or who may yet be captives. Like the example of the holy prophet Jeremiah [Cap. 29, 5. ff.], who also wrote a letter to Babylon, admonishing his captive Jews to be patient in prison and to remain steadfast in their faith until the end.

1) "du" is missing in the Erlanger.

2) Wittenberger: rathen.

3) Erlanger: must.

the time of their redemption, that they should not be offended at the faith and worship of the Babylonians, which was great and had a good appearance, so that many Jews fell away. As I then hear and read, that also the Christians fall away very much and accept the Turk's or Mahomet's faith willingly and uncereemoniously for the sake of the great appearance they have in their faith. Therefore, my dear brother, be warned and admonished that you remain in the right Christian faith and do not deny or forget your dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who died for your sin.

60. Now therefore, since you still have room and place, learn the Ten Commandments, your Lord's Prayer, the faith, and learn them well, especially this article, where we say: "And in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered 4) under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died and was buried, descended into hell, rose from the dead on the third day, ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. "2c. For it is by this article that we are called Christians, and by this article that we are called, baptized, counted, and accepted into Christianity by the gospel, and by this article that we receive the Holy Spirit and the forgiveness of sins, and the resurrection from the dead, and eternal life. For this article makes us God's children and Christ's brethren, that we may become like Him forever and joint heirs.

(61) And by this article our faith is set apart from all other faiths on earth. For the Jews do not have it, nor the Turks, nor the Saracens, nor any pope, nor any false Christian, nor any other unbeliever, but only the true Christians. Therefore, where you come to Turkey, where you cannot have preachers or books, recite to yourself, whether in bed or at work, whether in word or thought, your Lord's Prayer, the faith, and the Ten Commandments. Ulld if you look at this article

4) "hat" is missing in the Wittenberger.

Press your thumb on one of your fingers, or otherwise give yourself a sign with your hand or foot, so that you may well imagine this article and make it clear to yourself, and especially where you may see a Turkish anger or have a challenge, and pray with the Lord's Prayer that God will keep you from anger, and keep you pure and firm in this article, for your life and blessedness lie in this article. In nowhere to be found. For there the women are in a special the same way, St. Jeremiah admonishes his Jews in Babylon that when they see the idols of gold and silver, even our imprisoned brothers in Turkey complain about they should remember their God in Jerusalem and say to themselves: O LORD, thee only shall 2) be worshipped quietly, orderly and spiritually adorn themselves and 2c. [So do thou also here, when thou shalt see among the Turks a great appearance of holiness, be not moved, but thought into thy heart, and say, Verily, Christians do not say, Though thou be an angel, yet art thou not Jesus Christ; O Lord JESU, in thee only do I believe, help me 2c.

Among the other annoyances of the Turks, the most distinguished is that their priests or clergy lead such a serious, brave, strict life that one might consider them angels and not men, that it is a joke against them with all our clergy and monks in the papacy. They are often enraptured, even over the table with the people, so that they sit as if they were dead; they also sometimes perform great miraculous signs. Who should not be annoyed and moved by such things? But you, if such things happen to you, know and remember that they neither know nor think anything of your article, or of your Lord Jesus Christ, therefore it must be false. For the devil also can be serious, see sourly, fast much, do false wonders, 3) and holiness [Cap. 18, 14], and said against the beautiful, 5) delight his own; but JESUM CHRISTUM he may not suffer nor hear. Therefore, know that such Turkish saints are the devil's saints, who by their own great works want to become godly and blessed, and help others, without and apart from the one Savior JESUS CHRIST; and thus deceive both themselves and all others who do not receive this article from JESUS CHRIST.

4) Our monks want to help us to heaven with their own holiness. 63 Secondly, you will also find that they often come together in their churches for prayer, and pray with such discipline, silence and beautiful outward gestures, that with us in our churches such discipline and silence is article, for your life and blessedness lie in this article. In nowhere to be found. For there the women are in a special the same way, St. Jeremiah admonishes his Jews in Babylon that when they see the idols of gold and silver, even our imprisoned brothers in Turkey complain about they should remember their God in Jerusalem and say to themselves: O LORD, thee only shall 2) be worshipped quietly, orderly and spiritually adorn themselves and 2c. [So do thou also here, when thou shalt see among the Turks a great appearance of holiness, be not moved, but thought into thy heart, and say, Verily, Christians do not say, Though thou be an angel, yet art thou not Jesus Christ; O Lord JESU, in thee only do I believe, help me 2c. 64 Then press with the thumb on one finger, and think on Jesus Christ, whom they neither have nor regard. For Christ judges in the Gospel, Luc. 7, 44, that the poor sinner would be more pious with few offerings than Simon the leper with all his splendor. And the poor sinner, the tax collector, had to be better without fasting and celebrations than the arrogant Pharisee with his fasting and all his serious, see sourly, fast much, do false wonders, 3) and holiness [Cap. 18, 14], and said against the beautiful, 5) delight his own; but JESUM CHRISTUM he may not suffer nor hear. Therefore, know that such Turkish saints are the devil's saints, who by their own great works want to become godly and blessed, and help others, without and apart from the one Savior JESUS CHRIST; and thus deceive both themselves and all others who do not receive this article from JESUS CHRIST. 65 Thirdly, you will also find pilgrimages to the Turkish saints there, who did not die in the Christian faith but in Mahomet's faith, as they confess and boast; there the Turks pledge themselves, run and call upon them, as well as

1) Wittenberger: den.

2) So the Bible. In the editions: solle.

3) Wittenberger: Miraculous Signs.

4) "us" is missing in the Wittenberger.

5) Instead of "hübschen" in the Wittenberg: "schön gleißenden".

6) "which after all were holy to look upon" is missing in the Erlanger.

We went to our pilgrimages and called on our saints. Many are also helped, and many great signs happen, just as they have happened with us. We have written often and much about such false miraculous signs, which happen with us from the saints (as we are meant) and during the pilgrimages, that also some dead people have been raised, blind people have received their sight, lame people have walked, and the like; as Christ proclaimed Matth. 24, 24, that "the false Christs and false prophets should do such miracles, that even the elect might be deceived", the same as St. Paul proclaims in 2 Thess. 2, 9. For it is a small thing for the devil to afflict a man, so that he and everyone do not think otherwise 1) than that he is blind, lame, dead. After that, when he has made his idolatry, and has driven people away from Christ, for example, to call on the Holy One (that is, himself), then he ceases to afflict, so that man believes that his Holy One has helped him. He can also do so much art that he can sometimes drive away real sickness and heal real damage. For he is a doctor above all doctors in medicine, and a prince of the world. See what wonders he does with and through his magicians, how strangely he helps them to do incomprehensible things.

66. what he did to the holy man Job, what thunder and tempest he made in the air, and burned him all his goods, and slew him his children. In addition, he smote his own body with terrible and wicked sores [Job 1:14, 15, Cap. 2:7]. Behold, how he led our Lord Christ himself in the air to the temple, and from the temple to the high mountain, as if he were his God, and showed him all the kingdoms of the earth in a moment [Matt. 4:5, 8]. Can he now make weather, create pox, lead in the air, and thus play with the saints, as well as with Christ himself: what should he not be able to do with his ungodly and unbelievers? Therefore be warned, if thou shalt see or hear signs in Turkey, that thou remember thyself, saying, And if thou shalt raise up all the dead, and all the signs, that thou shalt not be able to do them.

1) Erlanger: wähnet.

If you deny and blaspheme Christ, or do not want to know Him, the devil will believe you instead of me; I would much rather stay with my weak Christ without signs and wonders than fall to your strong and mighty miracle-worker.

67) And in Turkey the advantage is that one can easily know such false miracles and beware of them, because they are not done in Christ's name, but against Christ's name, in the name of Mahomet. For, as I said, they think nothing of Christ, but rather mock and blaspheme the Christians with the name of Christ, as with an unfit holy name, which forsakes its own and does not help them against Mahomet. But with us under the papacy, such false signs are much more dangerous and difficult to recognize, because they happen with us, as with the Christians, and under the name of Christ, as from his Christian saints. Then he has his devilish game, to lead people away from Christ under the name of Christ in the fastest and most nimble way, as Christ says, that such false Christs would also deceive the elect [Matth. 24, 24].

68 Fourthly, you will see that the Turks, according to their outward appearance, are brave, strict and respectable. They do not drink wine, do not drink and eat as we Germans do, do not dress so frivolously and deliciously, do not build so splendidly, do not flaunt so, do not swear and curse so, have great, excellent obedience, discipline and honor to their emperor and lord, and have their regiment outwardly composed and pregnant, as we would like to have it in German lands. And although their law permits that a man may have twelve wives, and maids or concubines, as much as he likes, and yet all children are equal heirs, yet they keep all such wives in great constraint and obedience, so that even the man seldom speaks to his wives before the people, or sits lightly with her or jokes. For although the man entrusts such wives to him through the priests, he still keeps them.

2) Wittenberger: one.

3) "Germans" is missing in the Erlanger.

But they have the right and the power to let her go whichever way she wants, according to whether she deserves it or whether he 1) is fond of her or resents her. Hereby they force their wives violently. And even though such a marriage is not a marriage before God, but more of a sham than a marriage, they still keep their wives in such restraint and beautiful deeds that there is no such arrogance, lasciviousness, frivolity, and other superfluous adornment, food, and splendor among their wives as there is among us.

69 Now such an appearance is as great an annoyance to an unrepentant and weak Christian as there was no image of gold to the Jews in Babylon, and no Carthusian monastery is with us, because with us there is no order so holy that does not drink wine, and no woman or virgin must live in such restraint. Therefore, look ahead and press your finger with your thumb, for you will not find your Christ in this piece either. What good is such a beautiful thing if it is apart from and against Christ? Then you may well say the saying: It is beautiful evil, 2) but with us Alber is solid. For it is better to drink wine in moderation in Christ and to be merry, than to pretend to such an excellent sour thing apart from Christ, which neither prophets nor apostles nor Christ himself pretended. For Christ ate and drank both with men 3) and women, both with Pharisees and publicans. But the Turks must do it higher and better than God and His own Son, whom they blaspheme and persecute, as our clergy and gospel teachers do with us. Know therefore that Christ's kingdom does not stand in food or drink, nor in outward deeds, but in the faith of the heart, Luc. 17:20. And do not let such glitter challenge you [Rom. 14:23].

70. over this annoyance now beats the

It is a great fortune that the Turks have become so powerful, have so much victory, have so often defeated the Christians (as they think), and have so far increased so magnificently that no reason can interpret it otherwise than that their holiness deserves it, and that their faith and nature are so pleasing to God. They become so stubborn, hard and obdurate that one thinks it is impossible to convert a Turk.

71 Again, they hold that there is no nation more wicked than the Christians, and no faith more shameful than the Christian faith. And therefore they fall into such exuberant pride, to blaspheme and disgrace Christ and his Christians, that they praise and mock one another, saying: the Christians are women, but the Turks are their men; as if they alone were vain heroes and giants, and we Christians vain women and sissies, but do not know how sour it will end with them. The proud Babylonians were also men, and the Jews had to be women, but the same women remained both man and master in the end, since the Babylonians kept neither skin nor hair.

72. Behold, under this holy appearance of the Turks lie hidden, yes, unconcealed, so many monstrous, terrible abominations; Not only do they deny Christ, but they also blaspheme and defile him with his blood, death, resurrection, and with all the good he has done the world, and set their mahomet over him, so that they also blaspheme God the Father, and honor the devil in God's stead, after which they are also such bloodhounds, shedding so much blood and committing murder in so many countries as has never been heard of on earth. In addition, they practice such wicked and sodomitic unchastity that it is not to be said in front of chaste people, without what that is, that they respect marriage so little. They are also the greatest robbers and corrupters of all countries and people.

73 And who will tell all such abominations, of which they consider none to be sin, but all vain virtue? This means blindness over all blindness, and all such things are adorned with outward appearances (as said), so that many Christians fall away and return to their faith, and to such abominable, ugly things.

1) "he" is missing in the Jena.

2) In the church postilla, Walch, St. Louis edition, vol. XI, 20, § 48 at the end, there is another version of this saying: "It is already evil", but there should also be read as here: "It is beautifully evil", which all editions offer here. Also there is like here the sense: Everything what has a beautiful appearance is evil. The opinion of the opposite word: "It is Alber solid", is this: What is foolish in the sight of the world has firmness. Cf. 1 Cor. 1, 21. 27.

3) Wittenberger: Mannen. Jenaer: Man.

beautiful devils willingly give themselves. 1) Indeed, where there is such false holiness, there must be all vices in one heap; as we well see in our clergy that their blasphemy, arrogance, murder, avarice, fornication and all vices are without measure.

74 But they comfort themselves with this saying: "Do you think that God should let so many people err and be condemned for so long? just as our end-Christ comforts himself; which saying or thought can also push a dilapidated Christian and strengthen a stiff-necked boy. Just as the Jews of old sat down against the holy prophets and said: God is not so angry, he will not do so evil, as Micah writes [Cap. 3, 5] and the others. But one must put this saying and thought out of sight, and not judge of God's work or judgment according to man's work or judgment. For it does not depend on whether many or few people believe or do not believe, are condemned or saved, but on what God has commanded or forbidden, on what is his word or not his word: then one should look and think, and not pay attention to the whole world, even if they all lead to the devil. For God and His word remain, though heaven and earth pass away [Matt. 24:35]. Therefore hold fast, hold fast, I say, to your Christ, that you may be safe from such arrows and storms of the devil and remain a Christian, and you will be saved. Let the Turks and all the wicked, if they will not do otherwise, go to the devil. This is the exhortation to the prisoners, that they may stand firm in the faith against all troubles and temptations.

Now let us also comfort them, that they may be patient in their prison, and willingly suffer and bear all their miseries for God's sake. Now then, if God decrees that you be captured by the Turk, led away and sold, and that you must live at their will and be a servant, think that you will patiently and willingly accept such misery and service, sent by God, and suffer for God's sake, and most faithfully and diligently serve your Lord, to whom you are bound.

serve, regardless of the fact that you are a Christian and your master is a pagan or a Turk, therefore he 2) should not be worthy that you should be his servant. And by all means do not run away, as some do 3) and think they are doing right and well. Some also drown themselves, or otherwise strangle. Not so, dear brother, you must think that you have lost your freedom and have become your own, from which you cannot work yourself without sin and disobedience, without the will and knowledge of your Lord. For you are robbing and stealing from your master your body, which he has bought or otherwise brought to himself, so that henceforth it is not your property but his, like cattle or other property.

For now is the time to obey and keep the sayings of St. Peter and Paul, which teach that servants or bondsmen should be obedient, faithful, humble, honorable, and diligent to their physical masters, not otherwise than as serving Christ the Lord Himself, even though the masters are unbelievers or wicked; as you may read 1 Cor. 7, 21. f. Eph. 6, 5. 6. and Col. 3, 22.: "Ye servants, be obedient in all things unto your fleshly masters, not with service before your eyes, as to please men, but with singleness of heart and godliness. "2c. Also 1 Petr. 2, 18. For where you are otherwise a right Christian, such service and misery do you no harm. Yes, where you can be Christian and patient, it is good for you and useful for your salvation, as your cross, in which your faith is practiced and proven.

Remember the examples of all the saints. See how the archfather Jacob served the mischievous and wicked Laban, his brother-in-law, for Rachel, and faithfully endured his service, Gen. 29:20, 21. And after that his son Joseph, how he, stolen from his father and sold by his own brothers, served his pagan master so faithfully in Egypt, and was imprisoned for it, but finally came out gloriously and became a lord of the land, Gen. 39:4.

2) "he" is missing in the Wittenberger.

3) We have deleted the brackets around the words: "as some do".

1) Wittenberger: to give.

Egypt, 2 Mos. 1, 13. f., and yet none ran from his service, however unsleeping or pagan and wicked their masters were.

78] After this: Was not this a hard service, when the kingdom of Israel was led into Assyria, and afterward the kingdom of Judah into Babylon? King, queen, princes, priests, prophets, and many holier people than thou, had to serve and be servants, like Daniel and his companions (Daniel 1:4) under the cruel king, since they had to wait daily for much danger to body and soul, and also had to endure, with all shame and mockery, as the 137th Psalm well indicates: Super flumina BabyIonis etc.. Admittedly, there were also impatient Jews who cried, lamented, cursed and murmured, and some fell from Judaism and became Gentiles. But it still had to be; the pious had patience, did not run away, but served with all faithfulness and diligence, like Daniel and his companions, and remained in the right faith; therefore they were also exalted, 1) and graciously and miraculously redeemed by God.

And coming to the New Testament, did not Christ have to let the Jews and the Gentiles 2) Pilatum and Herodem do with them what they wanted? Did not St. Paul have to be imprisoned, and almost all the apostles, some cast out into misery and banished, as St. John in Patmos, and afterwards many holy martyrs from Rome and other cities, driven from house and home, wife and child, to distant, desolate islands, and there work in quarries, and other hard labor, like the donkeys? Why would you have it better than your Lord Christ Himself, with all His saints in the Old and New Testaments? The disciple should not have it better than his master (says Christ), then he is righteous when he is like his master, Luc. 6, 40.

80 Thou doest no more with displeasure and impatience, than to vex thy lord, whose servant thou hast become, and to make him the more wicked, and to profane the doctrine and the name.

Christ, as if Christians were such wicked, unfaithful, false people, who would not serve, but would run away and steal for themselves, as the peelers and thieves, and thereby become harder and more hardened in their faith. Again, if you served faithfully and diligently, you would adorn and praise the gospel and the name of Christ, so that your master and perhaps many others, however wicked they were, would have to say: Well, now the Christians are a faithful, obedient, pious, humble, diligent people; and in addition you would put the Turks' faith to shame and perhaps convert many, if they saw that the Christians so far surpass the Turks in humility, patience, diligence, faithfulness and such virtues. 3) This is what St. Paul means when he says in Titus 3:8 that servants should adorn the doctrine of our Lord in all things.

For how wicked can it be to serve a Turk or a heathen, if you are and remain a believer and a Christian? Many a man here must serve a knave, a tyrant, or a wicked lord. Yes, how we must do under the papacy, since our tyrants catch us, force us, chase us away, drive us out, burn us, behead us, drown us, and do worse to us than the Turks do to you! We still have to yield, endure, suffer, serve, help, counsel, pray, lift and carry; all of which you would have to dare and wait for with us, if you wanted to be a Christian with us and confess Christ; for the pope is much worse than the Turk in this respect.

The Turk does not force anyone to deny Christ and adhere to his faith; and even if he rages to the utmost with the physical murder of Christians, he does nothing with it (as much as there is in him), except that he makes heaven full of saints. For his blasphemy against Christ and his outward appearance of holiness do not compel, but tempt and entice. But the pope, precisely because he does not want to be an enemy or a Turk, but the dear father, yes, the most holy father and the most faithful shepherd, he fills hell with vain Christians (as much as there is in him). For he tears the noble souls from Christ through his blasphemous

1) Wittenberger: heard.

2) In Walch and in the Erlanger there is a comma after "Heiden".

3) Walch and the Erlangeners: surpassed.

This is true spiritual murder, and almost as good as Mahomet's or the Turk's doctrine and blasphemy. But where he is not allowed such infernal devilish seductions, he also takes on the Turk's way and also murders in the flesh; if he could do it, without a doubt, he would probably commit greater murder and bloodshed than the Turk, as they have so far proven with so many wars, agitations and irritations under emperors and kings.

Summa, wherever we go, there is the right host, the devil, at home. If we come to the Turk, we go to the devil; if we stay under the pope, we fall into hell. Vain devils on both sides and everywhere. Unfortunately, this is the way things are in the world now, and the sayings of Christ and Saint Paul are in full swing, that in the last days there will be a dangerous and cruel time [2 Tim. 3:1], when the devil, having been loosed, will deceive all the world and cause such misery and distress, 1) that no man will be saved unless God shortens those days for the sake of His elect [Matth. 24:22]. It must therefore come to pass that the devil will attack Christianity with all his might on all sides, both physically and spiritually, and try his best and highest on it; thus an end.

Therefore let us watch and be courageous in firm faith in Christ, and let every man keep himself obedient under his authority, and wait what God will do, and let go what goes, let it go as it goes, for there is no hope of any more good; the pots are broken and the soup is spilled, we may dare to pick up the pieces and, as much as possible, be of good cheer, as Christ teaches us and says of this evil time Luc. 21, 28: "When ye see these things coming to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads: for your redemption cometh, and is at hand."

85 But lest I forget, when thou art under the Turk, and must serve as it is said, thou shalt not do such service.

You must neither understand nor interpret it further, for as far as it is useful to your master for his goods. But if he wanted to force you to fight against the Christians, you should not be obedient, but rather suffer everything he can do to you, yes, much rather die. For you hear here that Daniel writes of the Turk that his quarrel is against the saints of God, who have done him no harm, and spills innocent blood. You must beware lest you make yourself a party to this, just as you must not fall prey to his blasphemous idol and Mahomet, even though you must serve under him.

86) The pious Naaman, 2 Kings 5:17 ff, remained in the service of his lord the king and also worshipped with him in his temple, but still he did not worship his idol. And the dear holy martyrs, St. Moritz and his companions, when the emperor called them to fight against the Christians, they did not want to do it, threw away their weapons and said: if he wanted to fight against the Christians, he should not look for others, they themselves, as Christian men, would be ready to suffer what he wanted. In the same way, you should also serve the Turks, so that you do not strive against the Christians or against God, but only help his house and goods for the best.

(87) I have also said and advised 2) all those who live under our emperor, pope and princes that they should not be used to fight against the gospel or against Christians or to persecute them. For in so doing they will bring innocent blood upon themselves, and be no better 3) than the Turks. "One must be more obedient to God than to men" [Acts 5:29]. God has not given any lord authority or subjected people to such an extent that he should strive or fight against God and His word. And in such a case, no subject owes or is related to his authorities a hair's breadth. Indeed, there is then no longer any authority where this happens, but the subjects are obliged to serve the authority physically for the best,

1) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: anrichten.

2) "I" is missing in Walch and in the Erlanger.

3) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer, Walch and the Erlanger: bessers.

that peace may be preserved on earth, and that this bodily life may be the more secure 1) and prosperous.

88. But may God, the Father of all grace and wisdom, graciously forgive us this time.

1) "his" is missing in the Wittenberger.

and prepare us with wisdom and strength, so that we may walk wisely and manfully, and await the future of our dear Lord Jesus Christ with joy, and blessedly depart from this valley of tears. To him be praise and thanksgiving, honor and glory forever and ever, amen.

55. M. Luther's exhortation to prayer against the Turk.)

About the end of August 1541.

One says: He who cannot be advised cannot be helped. We Germans have heard the dear word of God many years ago, through which God, the Father of all mercy, enlightened us and called us from the horrible abominations of the papal darkness and idolatry into his holy light and kingdom. But how gratefully and sincerely we have accepted and kept this is terrible enough to see even today. For, just as if the former sins were too few, since we have angered God to the utmost (though unknowingly) with masses, purgatory, the service of saints, and other works and righteousness of our own, and have filled all corners with such great idolatries, and thought to serve God especially in them, we go over them and persecute the dear Word, which calls us to repentance from such abominations, and knowingly and wantonly defend such idolatry with fire, water, rope, sword, cursing and blasphemy, so that it would be no wonder if God had not only let Turks, but also vain devils flood over Germany, or had let them flood long ago.

For how can he suffer the length? He must handle and protect truth and justice at last, punish evil and the evil poisonous blasphemers and tyrants, otherwise he would lose his divinity, and Finally, no one can be taken for a God, where everyone should do for and for what he desires, and despise God with His word and commandment as surely and shamefully as if He were a fool or a rascal, 2) who would not be serious about His. He is not serious about his commandments. Therefore he must make it so that one must grasp it, it is serious and not joking.

(3) Above this, we who have accepted the gospel and boast of the word also fulfill the saying Rom. 2:24: "God's name is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you. For, except for a few who take it seriously and gratefully accept it, the rest are so ungrateful, so wanton, so insolent, and live no differently than if God had given us his word for this reason and delivered us from the pabst with his devilish prison, so that we might freely do what we desire, and so that his word might serve not for his glory and our salvation, but for our will, when it cost the blood and death of his dear Son Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, that such things should be so abundantly preached to us.

2) Göckelmännle'm - Gaukelmännlein, Närrchen.

*This writing is probably caused by the request of the Elector Johann Friedrich, which he sent to Luther and Bugenhagen at the beginning of August 1541 (it is found in Burkhardt, Briefwechsel, p. 392), to exhort the people to pray against the Turks. It can be assumed that Luther complied with this request without delay, and that the document probably went out in August. It was first published by Nickel Schirlentz in Wittenberg in 1541 and was reprinted by him in the following year. In addition, there are other editions from 1541, without indication of place and printer. In the collections: in the Wittenberg (1551), vol. II, p. 553 k; in the Jena (1568), vol. VII, p. 433b; in the Altenburg, vol. VII, p. 473; in the Leipzig, vol. XXII, p. 390, and in the Erlangen, vol. 32, p. 74. We give the text according to the Erlangen, which brings the first original print, comparing the Wittenberg and the Jena.

(4) For, to begin with, what desperately wicked sects and heresies have arisen, such as coining men, dissenters, Anabaptists, and many more, all under the name and pretense of the gospel, who, being freed by the gospel from the pope's ban and tyranny, were safe to teach and do what they pleased; which, however, should not have hissed in the time when the pope was God and Lord. Then came the great god Mammon or avarice; how he possessed not only peasants and burghers, but quite rudely nobles, counts, princes and lords, so that one can hardly read of the like in all histories. The nobility wants to have everything that peasants and burghers have, yes, they want to be princes; the peasants increase grain, barley and everything besides the nobility, and make muthwillige theuring, since otherwise God has let grow enough. The citizen also values in his craft what and how he wants.

(5) Thus it is known beforehand what kind of wickedness the servants and maids practice in houses, what kind of stealing, unfaithfulness and all kinds of wickedness they do, so that all the fathers of the house complain and cry out about the servants. So also the stealing, one neighbor to the other, is no measure. Item, the workers or workmen, how they are masters! They take enough money, work what they want, how they want and when they want. Even if they spoil it and ruin it, no one can say a word against them. And, that I do not forget the lawyers, it has come to the point with the right that nobody likes to go into the right, if he has such a bright good thing, as the sun is clear in the bright middle day. I do not want to be hypocritical, but to tell the truth; the Imperial Court of Appeal, behold, what a devil's whore rules there, if it should be, as a divine jewel in German lands, some comfort to all those who suffer injustice. But see how they play along with those in Goslar, Minden and others, and help the desperate boy, Heinz Mordbrenner, in all evil matters, if they are not judges, nor can they understand, nor are they part of things concerning the gospel or the church.

So Germany is ripe and full of all kinds of sins against God, wants to defend it, and defies with God that I am unfortunately an all-too

I have often said that either the Turk or we ourselves must punish each other. I have forgotten the usurer; oh, how surely he lives and rages, as if he himself were god and lord in all lands; no one may oppose him. And when I wrote against him, the holy usurers laughed at me and said: Luther does not know what usury is; he may read his Matthaum and Psalter. Well then, if I am a preacher of Christ, and my word is the word of God, as I have no doubt, then either the Turk or another wrath of God shall teach you, accursed usurer, that Luther well understood and knew what usury is; that is worth a good guilder.

(7) However, these horrible pieces could still be borne for a while, but it has come to this that it cannot go on, that now some nobles, towns, even small dirty towns and villages are approaching, and want to defend their pastors and preachers, so that they should not punish sin and vice in the pulpit, or want to chase them away and starve them; in addition, whoever can take from them is holy. If they complain to the officials, they must be called stingy, whom no one can satisfy. They say, "In the past, a priest had thirty guilders and was well satisfied; now they want ninety and a hundred. But that they, the ministers, are stingy, thieving, robbing, and unfaithful to lords, that is Christian holiness.

8 Item, no one considers that whoever came before with thirty guilders can now hardly come with a hundred guilders. Why? Before, a bushel of grain was worth two, three pennies, an almond egg three pennies, and so on in all pieces; now the grain must be worth nine, ten, eleven, twelve pennies, an almond egg eighteen pennies. After that they say that the priests are stingy when they have increased the market and have taken sixty guilders from the poor man; he must be called stingy when he has ninety guilders, of which they have taken sixty from him. O right, right, that you miser should not be called miserly, but he who is maltreated by your miserliness should be called miserly;

so, so, so one must beat the Turk, if God, previously enraged in all ways, cannot give us happiness because of such outrageous willfulness and wickedness. What is a priest? Is good! But a Turk is a Turk, a devil is a devil, you may wait for them. If the priests, that is, God's servants and preachers, will not be, you will no longer be lord, peasant, nor citizen "Christian"; and if you will not respect the book and the teachers, nor honor them (for they are God's servants, and he who despises them despises God who sent them), your sword and shield will be less than paper and pen. You will and you shall know it.

(9) I am a certain prophet, so that I am sorry for myself, and I would like it to be a lie (as Micheas also wishes). I have often preached against avarice and wantonness, and said: Gather, gather, gather, dear peasants, burghers, nobles! Gather confidently, and give it freely enough; brother Vitus will come and find what you have gathered. You shall not keep it, which you so wantonly strive for (that is, steal and rob); you shall gather it for another, who will stab you to death for it, or at the very least beat your skin full and mock at it. Cause you to steal from the poor and needy, who cry out to heaven and do not let God rest until He hears them and punishes you miserly people, as Habakkuk 3:6 says: "Woe to him who increases his goods with other people's goods. Summa, it is almost like before the flood, Gen. 6, 12: "God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt: for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." I am sure that if the world does not improve, but continues to increase in all kinds of evil, it must break the last break; and I have no other consolation or hope in such a being than that the last day is at the door, because it is getting too much that God will no longer be able to tolerate it.

10 Here you say: What shall we do then? Shall we despair, let go hands and feet, and give everything to the Turks without any resistance or opposition? No, by all means, I have no objection to that.

especially not that one should despair or despair. For just as God cannot tolerate the insolent iniquity and willfulness of which I have spoken above, so also He does not want one to despair or despair. He wants the middle road, and neither to the right nor to the left, as the Psalter says: "God is well pleased with those who fear Him and trust in His goodness" [Ps. 147, 11.]. Without any doubt, He is angry and displeased with those who despise or do not fear Him and His word, and with those who do not trust but doubt and despair.

(11) Therefore, there is still good advice for those who would only listen to it and let it be advised, namely, to begin to fear God and to trust in His goodness. If this were to happen, we know very well that neither the Turk nor the devil could have anything to do with us, for if God were with us, who would be against us? But who wants to and can bring people to such fear of God? The holy prophets have never been able to do this among the people of Israel, or even among a few of them, until the king of Babylon came and taught them, when he left no stone unturned, strangled everything or carried it away and devastated the land [2 Kings 25], so that they learned to fear God and to call upon Him. Thus one must listen to the fools with pistons, as Isaiah says: Vexatio fst intellevtum aufitui [Is. 28, 19.]. So the Turk is also our schoolmaster, and must prod us and teach us to fear God and pray, otherwise we will rot completely in sins and all security, as has happened until now.

If we now wish to be helped and advised, let us repent and amend the evil things mentioned above. Princes and lords are to establish justice in the land, control usury, prevent the avarice of the nobility, burghers and peasants, above all honor God's word, provide for, protect and promote schools, churches and their servants. Likewise, the nobility, burghers and peasants must be obedient in this respect, exercise discipline and respectability in towns and countries, and not allow craftsmen, workers and servants to exercise such great courage, but punish them freshly. Summa, one has the Catechismum German, clear, bright enough; one knows well (praise God) what every state and person should do and not do, which we unfortunately did not know before and would have liked to do, then God will hear our prayer and certainly help us, as all the prophets and all the Scriptures promise us.

(13) But if we do not do this, and will not be advised, we cannot be helped. And it will be in vain for us to cry out that the Turk is a cruel tyrant, for it is of no use for a wicked child to cry out about a sharp rod; if it were pious, the rod would not be sharp, indeed it would not be a rod at all. It does not do (that is short) to be wicked and to want to be unruly; there must be both, one with the other, or both must cease at the same time. You pastors should preach this to the people with diligence, whether God might give them grace to listen and give them counsel, as God said to Jeremiah. And whether they would follow the example of the Ninivites, to whom their Turk was much closer than our Turk is to us, for they had only forty days until their destruction, Jonah 3:4, and yet they remained through their repentance, and when they gave them counsel, they were helped.

14) But if the people are hardened, and the evil has eaten so deeply that no repentance can be hoped for (as Ezekiel says about his brass pot, which had become so rusty that it could not be scoured nor cleaned, but had to be melted down again ¹⁾ and poured by the king of Babylon [Ezk 24:12]), what can we other innocent people do? Traun, here it will be said: If God wills it so; one neighbor owes the other a fire damage, then we must (as Ezekiel and Daniel did) with our people, kings, lords and churches, priests, prophets, everything over a pile. How would we have done if we had been in Jerusalem and had had to go with the same dear saints, prophets, kings and queens (as many other holy, pious people did at that time) to Babylon under the great tyrants from our fatherland? We would not lose God for that, nor go to the devil over it. For Daniel and his companions also found God more abundantly at Babylon than they had found at Jerusalem; for God is omnipotent everywhere, and as Saint Peter says, Apost. 10, 35: "He who fears God, wherever he may be in all lands, is well pleasing to God; otherwise the Christians who now live and die under the Turk would all be condemned; but now they are his judges for that day, so now they must be his footstools.

15 Since we do not know that God wants us to do this (for we do not have Jeremiah or Ezekiel to tell us again by God or to command us to yield to the Turk, as the Jews had to yield to the king of Babylon by God's command), it behooves each one of us to defend himself according to his former calling and to do what he can, to the last breath. For we cannot, with a clear conscience, leave our profession until we are forced out of it by force, or are demanded anew by God through prophets or miraculous signs. Therefore we divide this matter into two parts: The bloody blasphemous papists we admonish to stop blaspheming God, and to be prepared differently against God's wrath; the ungrateful, wanton people we admonish to mend their ways, honor God's word, and call upon God. But if the 2) first part does not want to leave, but drags us with it into the distemper, then let us, namely the other part, the small group, not yet despair of God.

16. and although it is difficult for us to bear the burden of those sins, and to ask God not to repay us for them (for they are among us, and we are mixed with them, and either they must enjoy our prayers, or we must repay their sin), we nevertheless owe it to God to honor and believe Him, who tells us to wait for our calling and to do our part, and also tells and teaches us to pray, as He says Matth. 7, 7: "Ask and you shall receive, seek and you shall find, knock and it shall be opened to you", and Joh. 16, 23: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask in my name,

1) In the editions: melted.

2) Wittenberger and Erlanger: this.

he will give it to you," and John 14:14: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, 1) that will I do;" and Psalm 50:15: "Call upon me in trouble, and I will help thee; and thou shalt thank and praise me."

(17) It is true that we are not Joshua, 2) who made the sun stand still in the sky by his prayer [Jos. 10:12], nor Moses, who cut apart the Red Sea by his heartfelt prayer [Ex. 14:16, 21. Nor Elijah, who scattered fire from heaven by his prayer [2 Kings 1:10], but we are nevertheless the same people to whom God has commanded His word, and through His Spirit has made it preach to us; yes, we are also such people as Moses, Joshua, Elijah and all the other saints. For we of the same God's Word and Spirit that they had, and we of the same God's preachers, servants and ministers that they were, though they were more glorious than we, yet had no higher, better God than we, nor better flesh and blood than we: for they were men like us, and the very creature of God that we are. I am speaking now of us poor sinners who nevertheless love Christ and seek His kingdom, not of the papists and false Christians.

(18) And God must (that I speak thus) hear our prayer as well as His prayer, for we are members of His church, that is, His dear Son's bride, whom He cannot despise when she cries out earnestly. Therefore it is not a great thing for God to do as great or greater works through us than He has done through them, as we have seen and experienced so far, that He has helped us mightily and wonderfully against the devil of the pope, who is somewhat greater than the devil of the Turk, if we could mean it or believe it. For thus he says John 14:12: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go to the Father.

19 Therefore, it is incumbent upon us preachers, as we are obligated to do, first to bring the people to repentance.

1) The words: "so wird er's - name" are missing in the Jena.

2) The Wittenberg and Erlangen editions have that concerning Moses first, Joshua second.

with diligence, as those (where the Turk should continue) are certain to die, and must miserably lose everything, body, goods, honor, wife, child, and (which is probably worse) the soul as well; for it is terrible to die in impenitent life (that is, to be eternally damned). Therefore, from the pulpit we should confidently shout and punish vice and sin, as Isaiah 58:1 says: "Preach confidently, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and proclaim to my people their wickedness, and to the house of Jacob their sin" 2c. And St. Paul 2 Tim. 4, 2. 3: 3) "Preach the word, persevere, whether in season or out of season, chastise, rebuke, exhort with all patience and doctrine; for there will be a time when they will not suffer sound doctrine."

20) Now if there are some who do not want to suffer such punishment in God's name, they may stay out of the church or go out in 4) the devil's name. Who holds the others here? They will do us no good nor help, but rather harm in such troubles, who will not hear God's word; but we cannot keep God's word silent for their sake; let them go to the devil and die like sows and dogs, without sacrament and grace, always buried on the shingle. For if we want to have a merciful God, we must truly suffer from Him that He punishes and reproves us as sinners and bad boys, and also confess that He does right, since 5) He reproves us sinners and bad boys, as David says: "Against You alone have I sinned, that You might be just in Your words" [Ps. 51:6]. True Christians like to hear that they are scolded and punished with God's word.

(21) But these, wishing to be unpunished, freely confess that they are the right desperate wretches, who thereby also sin against the Holy Spirit, as not wishing to suffer Him to punish them by His preaching ministry; or, have they fallen so far as to take our preaching and word for ours, that is, for man's?

3) Here the Erlangen edition has reprinted from Walch 2 Tim. 4, 23. besides two other wrong Bible citations of Walch in this writing.

4) "in" is missing in the Jena.

5) Erlanger: that.

If they do not want to keep the Christian word and therefore do not want to suffer, then they have long since fallen from the Christian faith, well worth and deserved that they hear Mahomet, the Turk, the Pope, the devil and his mother in place of God, amen, if they want it that way. But let them not be in our army; or, if they must be, let them not be in it, lest we everywhere rely on their help, but take care and pray that God will not make us pay for their wickedness, because we do not like it that they, as enemies of God, should despise his word, from which we desire help.

22 And especially the army preachers should admonish, beg, implore, and promise the warriors, including the wild, savage, and crude brother Vitus, 1) who is capable of much torture and wounding, 2) who is capable of suffering from the diseases of Francis, Pestilence, Sanct Veltens, Sanct Antonius, Sanct Quirinus, and 2c. that they will refrain from such blasphemies, and pray the Lord's Prayer and the faith instead. For they should know that we do not fight against flesh and blood, but against the devils in hell, and that the Turk remains undefeated with cursing and blasphemy. As that captain said to a warrior who could curse the enemy very much, "Do you hear, I do not have you in the army to curse Alexandro, but to fight against Alexander. Perhaps some will be admonished and will follow, first those who intend to be saved, but the others are not concerned, they will be better or worse. For for their sake nothing is and will be done in such troubles and great things, and God will not look at them but at the others, as Psalm 34, v. 16, says: "The eyes of the Lord look at those who fear him and wait for his goodness.

23 Thus it is recorded in Roman history that an emperor had a Christian band among other pagans, who knelt down in the field and prayed (as is proper for Christians) before the battle; then a storm came and struck the enemies from heaven. This was the emperor (though pagans) a dear people of war, and called them χεραυνοβόλους, that is, thunder-

1) i.e. the warrior servants.

2) Erlanger: "Wundersn". This reading is wrong, because here is aimed at the curse frequent with war servants: "God's wounds".

than those who could be struck with thunderbolts. In the same way, we could still do well if we would earnestly improve ourselves and pray heartily. For what God does and gives to the whole world, to the Gentiles and the Turks, to the evil and the good, He does all this through and for the sake of His dear children, that is, for the sake of Christians who fear Him, who recognize themselves as sinners, who gladly allow themselves to be punished, and who nevertheless cordially trust in Him, pray and call upon Him in all their needs; this is certainly true. Let this be said of the first work of our preaching ministry; he who has ears to hear, let him hear; he who has not, let him remain back there without an ear, earless, deaf and deafened, as long as he will or can, we must go.

(24) The other work is that we then turn to God with right prayer; for these are the two priestly offices, to turn to the people and teach them what is right and good, and then to turn to God and pray that we may do this and also obtain happiness and victory. As Samuel, 1 Sam. 12, 23, 24, says: "Far be it from me to sin against the Lord in this way, that I should cease to pray for you, and to teach you the good and right way; only fear the Lord, and serve him faithfully with all your heart." Here we hear that it is sin against God if we preachers do not teach the people rightly and pray for them, so it is also sin if the people do not obey nor fear God, who teaches them through our preaching ministry.

(25) The people are to be admonished about this, that they also pray; for the Lord's Prayer and all prayers are common to all Christians, whether they be preachers or hearers, but especially to the preacher, as he who is to lead the word, and to stand and walk at the head. But how one should pray has been abundantly taught in many books, namely, that one should not doubt in prayer [Jac. 1:6]. For whoever doubts whether he will be heard by God, let him stand in line and not be sworn to God and prayer. For he cannot and will not suffer to be doubted, that is, he cannot and will not have us call him a liar or an unfaithful God; but he who doubts does as much as if he said, "Lord God, I do not believe it, I do not know it.

Nor whether it be true that thou sayest, Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, 1) that will I do"; and the like many other sayings.

26 Therefore, where you want to pray, think that you kneel or step boldly and unashamedly (if you have recognized yourself as a sinner and want to be corrected, as said above) and speak to God like this: Lord God, heavenly Father, I ask, and I will have it without fail, that it should and must be Yes and Amen, that and no other, otherwise I will not pray nor ask; not that I am right, or worthy, I know well and confess that I do not deserve, yea, have deserved the infernal fire and thy eternal wrath with many great sins, but that I may be a little obedient in this, since 2) thou dost command and compel me to pray in the name of thy dear Son, our Lord JESu Christ; upon this defiance and consolation of thy causeless goodness, not upon my righteousness, I kneel or come before thee and pray for N. N. 2c.

27 Secondly, it is also sufficiently taught that one should not tempt God in prayer, that is, not set him the time, measure, goal, way, or person, how, when, where, or by what means he must hear us, but rather humbly send it all home to him, who, according to his divine incomprehensible wisdom, will certainly find it. But do not doubt (if it could be seen otherwise) that the prayer was certainly answered, as the angel Gabriel, Dan. 9, 23, says: "When you began to pray, the command went out" 2c. and was answered far higher and more than Daniel had asked. Such things, I say, are sufficiently taught beforehand in the Catechismo, and otherwise in many writings. Therefore, even in the present emergency against the Turk, we should keep it this way, and everyone should pray to himself.

In order that the people may be stirred to devotion and earnestness by public prayer in the church, I would be pleased, where it pleases the pastors and churches, that on feast days, after the sermon (whether in the morning or in the evening, or around each other), the 79th Psalm: "Lord, there are Gentiles fallen into your inheritance, sing one choir after the other, as usual. After that, a well-tuned boy steps in front of the lectern in their choir, and sings alone the antiphon or tract: Domino, non secundum [Ps. 103, 10.]; after that, another boy sings the other tract: Domino, no womineris [Ps. 79, 8.]; and on it the whole choir kneeling: Adjuva nos Dous [Ps. 79, 9.]; allerdinge, wie man in der Fasten im Pabstthum gesang; denn es sehr devächtig lautet und siehet 2c., and the words rhyme well against the Turk, where one directs them with the heart. On it (where one wants) the layman may sing: Keep us, O Lord, in thy word, 3) Grant us peace, or the German Vater-Unser. The 79th [Psalm] should be alternated with the 20th Psalm, which prays for the authorities and those who work in conflict. If, however, such a song would be too long after the sermon, it could be sung instead of the Introit, or even under the Communion. This would be enough for public prayer (besides the Litania) ceremonies in this case. But if someone wants to pray in church or at home, and does not know a better word or way, he should take the Lord's Prayer before him and, if he pleases, stimulate his devotion with these or similar words:

(29) Heavenly Father, we deserve to be punished by you, but punish us according to your mercy and not according to your wrath. It is better for us to be delivered into thy hands than into the hands of men, or into the hands of the enemy; as David also asked [2 Sam. 24:14]. For great is thy mercy; we have sinned against thee, and have not kept thy commandments 2c. But you know, Almighty God the Father, that we have not sinned against the devil, the pope, the Turk, nor do they have any right or power to punish us, but you can and may use them as your fierce rod against us, who have sinned against you and deserved all misfortune.

(30) Yes, dear God, Heavenly Father, we have not committed any sin against them, so that they would have the right to punish us; but they would much rather have us go to heaven together with them.

1) The words: "in my name" are missing in the Jena.

2) Erlanger: that.

3) "Preservation - word" is missing in the Jena.

sinned most abominably against thee. For they inquire not whether we have disobeyed thee, blasphemed thee, committed all manner of idolatry, as they do, dealt in false doctrine, faith, and lies, committed adultery, fornication, murder, theft, robbery, sorcery, and all manner of evil against thee, they inquire not. But this is our sin against them, that we preach, believe, and confess thee, O God the Father, the only true God, and thy dear Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit, an everlasting God; yea, this is the sin which we do against them. But if we denied you, the devil, the world, the pope and the Turk would leave us satisfied, as your dear Son says: "If you were of the world, the world would love yours" 2c. [John 15:19.]

(31) Behold now, thou merciful Father over us, and grave judge of our enemies, for they are thine enemies more than our enemies, and when they persecute and smite us, they themselves persecute and smite thee; for the word which we preach, believe, and confess is thine, not 1) ours, all the work of thy Holy Spirit in us. The devil does not want to suffer this, but wants to be our god instead of you, to create lies in us instead of your word. The Turk wants to put his Mahomet in the place of your dear Son Jesus Christ, because he blasphemes him and says that he is not a true God, that his Mahomet is higher and better than he is. If then it is sinful for us to hold, confess and praise you, the Father and your Son and the Holy Spirit, as the true, unified God, then you yourself are the sinner who works such things in us, and is called such things, and wants to have them. Therefore, when they hate, beat and punish us because of such things, they hate, beat and punish you themselves. Therefore wake up, dear Lord God, and sanctify your name, which they desecrate; strengthen your kingdom, which they destroy in us, and create your will, which they want to dampen in us, and do not let yourself be trampled underfoot for the sake of our sin by those who do not want to punish our sin in us, but want to erase your holy word, name and work in us, so that you do not become a god.

and have no people to preach, believe and confess you. 2)

See, such thoughts give you the words in the Lord's Prayer, if you look at them right: "Hallowed be your name, your kingdom come, your will be done" 2c. Therefore, you should also put such thoughts into your Lord's Prayer; as we see that all the prophets pray that God will spare their sins for the sake of His name, so that the Gentiles (who want to take the right name of God and not their sins) do not boast: Where is now their God? [Ps. 79, 10.] They rather care for the name of God, and that the enemies do not devastate God's word (which is the highest wrath), because they are punished for their sin. Therefore they confess their sin and ask for mercy, so that for their sake God and His name will not be destroyed; thus they turn and turn away God's wrath on the enemies, as they are enemies of His people, not for their sin, but for the sake of God, who has His name, word and kingdom in them.

33. Such and such prayer is, as said, of all prophets; as you see in Isaiah, Jeremiah and Psalms, who always confess their sin to God, but yet boast themselves innocent, yes, pious, righteous and holy against their enemies, not because of their work or sin, but that they have, worship, call upon and confess the right God, which God works in them, and thus must themselves be a sinner to the devil, Turk, pope, world, flesh, be wrong, be condemned, blasphemed and punished. Which he must suffer (or rather suffer unwillingly) for the sake of our sin, as St. Paul Rom. 2:24 says: "God's name is blasphemed for your sake among the Gentiles." Therefore, if we want to be God's people, we should be holy and pious, so that God does not have to suffer for our sins 4) or He will punish us terribly and make us suffer ourselves. And just as we do not want to take him for a god, so we will not take him for a god.

2) This entire prayer has been translated into Latin and included in the 7th volume of the Latin Wittenberg edition (toi. 1556), but there provided with a conclusion formed by a foreign hand.

3) "itself" is missing in the Erlanger.

4) "Sin" is missing in the Jena.

1) Erlanger: and not.

If he does not take us for his people, whom he wants to save and help, he will not take us for his people.

34 Let this be said of what we, who are in the spiritual ministry, should and can do. For even though I myself am often troubled that our sin and wickedness is too great, the unrepentant raving of the papists and the ingratitude of our part is overwhelming, that I would doubt our prayer, I am also moved by the example when God forbade the prophet Jeremiah not to pray or complain for his people, "for I will not hear you," Jeremiah 7:16, and again Jeremiah 15:1: "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet have I no heart. 15, 1: "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet have I no heart for this people; drive them away from me," and Ezek. 14, 14. If the three men, Noah, Daniel, Job, were among this people, they would save nothing but their own souls"; for truly it is far too horrible that we Germans, having spent the previous horrible life under the idolatries of the papists, now also, when God graciously visits us with the light of His unspeakable grace, blaspheme and profane the same, and exercise all courage against His servants and our neighbor. 2c.:

(35) But because I have not the new commandment which Jeremiah had, that I should not pray, though there be some right devout hearts, though few, yet doubtless many more than a Moses, or a Samuel, or a Noah, Daniel, Job, it will not be done in good conscience that we should despair and cease to pray of our own thirst and nobleness, but must keep the common and ancient commandment, "Pray, seek, knock. 7, 7], so that we will not be scolded as God scolds the prophets Ezek. 13, 5: "O Israel, thy prophets are as the foxes in the wilderness; they tread not before the gaps, nor make themselves a barrier about the house of Israel, nor stand in contention in the day of the LORD"; and Cap. 22:30: "I sought among them if there were any that would turn away wrath from me, that I might not destroy the land: but I found none. Therefore I poured out my wrath upon them, and with the fire of my fury I consumed them, and so gave them their merit on their head" (says the Lord); thus also Isaiah, Cap. 64, 7. complains: "No one calls on your name" 2c.

Therefore, we must pray that whatever God wills may come to pass. If we do not get it this time, and what we would like to have now, nevertheless our prayer is certainly heard and pleasant (we know that), and much greater and better things must follow, neither we have asked; as St. Paul says Eph. 3, 20: "Who is abundant and mighty over all that we ask or understand. And, O blessed would we be, if we had to miss the Turks with this prayer this time, and yet would have acquired the last day for it soon after, which cannot be far away, and the Turk also (like the Pope) must be at his end, of that I have no doubt.

(37) And beware of the Turkish Epicurean faith, where some pretend: What shall I do? What is the use of praying? What good is much worrying? If it is done, it must be done. For thus the Turks believe and say: No one can die unless his hour comes; therefore they are so foolish and foolhardy and think they are doing well and doing right. Yes, it is true that what is done is done; but I am not commanded, but rather forbidden, to know what is done. Therefore, because I do not know what is done, God tempts those who go in for such ignorance and pervert; I am commanded to know what is to be done. And therefore his word is given unto us, that we should know what we ought to do, and not do that which we know not, but commit the same unto God, and keep our commandment, our profession, our office; God will and will alone know what is done, thou shalt not know it.

38) Joab, the captain of David's army, having enemies in the rear and in the front, did not say to Abishai his brother, "Wait, let us see what is done, and we will do it;" but he said, "Fight against Ammon. Ammon, I will fight against the Syrians. If the Syrians are too strong for me, come to my aid; if Ammon is too strong for you, I will come to your aid; be of good cheer, and let us be strong for our people, and for the cities of our God; but let the Lord do what pleases him." So we also should judge ourselves in our offices, not according to the disposition, since we have no word, light, or science of it; but do it out of our eyes, heart, and all our senses, let it remain hidden in darkness and secret, and do what we know and are commanded to do by his word and imagined light. Then the misguided will probably find themselves and unsought, which otherwise cannot be found, and become vain epicureans, Turks, impudent stupid fools, or despondent and desperate miserable people. The devil rides such people to make them think they are clever and wise, and they do not see that it is the apple on which Adam and Eve, together with all their descendants, ate eternal death; they also wanted to know God's secret counsel and providence about what they were commanded, tempted God with it and transgressed His holy commandment.

After this work of ours, the clergy, think, you secular classes, also on your work, let yourselves be told and advised, listen to God's word and pray with us; establish justice in the country, punish usury and other more vices. Moderate the ugly, shameful drinking, gambling and expenses; send yourselves also 1) to the sacrament, and do not oppose it, as the others do, as if it were poison, or as if it were a disgrace to their status, to humble themselves therefore. If we want to confess the word, we must also truly receive the sacrament, which is instituted for confession, or (as Christ himself speaks) for remembrance; otherwise such contempt, that some may not go there for many years, cannot please God, and certainly there will be no good conscience nor earnestness toward God's word.

40 And when ye go against the Turk, be sure, and doubt not, that ye fight not against flesh and blood, that is, against men, lest I be your prophet, that a Turk shall smite many Christians: but be sure that ye fight against a great host of devils; for the host of the Turk is the host of devils. Therefore leave

Do not rely on your spear, sword, guns, power or quantity, for there the devils do not inquire; as we are well informed by experience so far, that the Turk has had vain victory and luck against us, and will have further, where we as men will war against men. Just as the pope and his devils could not be defeated without God's word, even though the emperors Friederici, Henrici 2) 2c. were powerful enough, but he trampled them all under his feet, because the devil was with him. We must learn to sing with the 44th Psalm, v. 7. "I do not rely on my bow, and my sword cannot help me" 2c. We must have angels with us against the devils, which will happen if we humble ourselves, pray and trust God in His Word.

41 When we have done our part, whether we prepare ourselves with prayer or defend ourselves, let us then say with Joab [2 Sam. 10:12], Let us go freshly, let God's will be done, as he has ordained and as it pleases him, to life or death. If he will have us punished and beaten, then we will die and suffer in our profession and his command, and for his name's sake, and thus become his martyrs; we have the advantage over that, that we will be judges and lords of the Turk, the Pope, the world and all devils forever, with Christ and all the angels. And what can the Turk and all devils do to us Christians? and how evil can he do it? He can neither give us nor take away our fiefdom. For life was taken from us long ago, in the beginning of the world, in paradise, through Adam's sin, in which we are already dead and dead all who are born of him, Rom. 5:12 (the Turk as well as we). On the other hand, Christ our Savior has long since restored and given it to us through His resurrection to all who believe and call upon Him and desire Him; but not to the Turks and unbelievers, nor to the devils, for they remain in death.

(42) This he may well do, that he may shorten the time of us mortals, that we may sooner be buried, and rot, and come to death.

2) This refers to Emperor Frederick Barbarossa and Henry IV. Cf. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIX, 1964.

1) "also" is missing in the Erlanger.

He is not able to do anything more for us. As Christ himself comforts us Matth. 10, 28: "Do not be afraid of those who kill the body", and after that they have nothing that they can do to you. Vide, si placet, meas .ibidem annotationes. 1) And 1 Petr. 3:13, 14, 15: "And who is he that can hurt you, if ye follow that which is good? Even if you suffer for righteousness' sake, you will be blessed. Do not be afraid of their defiance, and do not be dismayed, but sanctify God the Lord in your hearts." For we do not fight to gain land and people, property and honor, or to establish and spread idolatry, but to preserve God's word and His church, especially for our dear youth and descendants, and we intend to fight the Turk so that he will not put his devilish filth and blasphemous Mahomet in the place of our dear Lord JESUS CHRIST; this is indeed the fundamental cause and serious opinion of our fight, death and life in this case; this is certainly true. Therefore we wage a godly war against the Turk, and are holy Christians and die blessedly.

43. so it may well be that the Turk, like the pope, would fall. For the two kingdoms, the Pabst's and the Turk's, are the last two abominations and God's wrath, as Revelation [14:8, 9] calls the false prophet and the beast, and must be seized together and thrown into the lake of fire. For this has never been heard of any kingdom from the beginning, that they so shamefully destroyed the marriage state, as the pope and the Turk do. The pope, under the pretense of chastity, has condemned them forbidden and unclean. The Turk tears man and woman from each other and gives and sells the women as if they were cows or calves; of this, and other things, I have written in the Sermon to the Gentiles 2). Summa, there is nothing different, because house-, city- and church-regiment disturb, both in the Pabstthum and Turkey.

1) The "Notes on the Evangelist Matthew," to which Luther refers here, can be found Walch, old edition, vol. VII. The passage in question, Matth. 10, 28, ibid. there, Col. 148 ff.

2) The previous number in this volume.

44 Lastly, let the children learn the Catechismum, whether they are led away in strife, yet know something of the Christian faith; who knows what God may work through them? Joseph was also sold in Egypt in his seventeenth year, but he had God's word and was able to keep his faith, and afterward he converted all of Egypt. So did Daniel and his companions in Babylon [Dan. 1, 8. f.]. Likewise, if the wives, being carried away, should live with other men in Turkey, both in bed and at meat, to be patient, and to suffer these things for Christ's sake, yet not to despair, as if they were damned: for the soul can do nothing, as the enemy doeth unto thy body. He who is a prisoner is a prisoner; God's word and faith remain uncaptured, just as Christ himself remains uncaptured. The preachers will be able to continue to teach and transfigure this. It is said: "marvelous, unsearchable, incomprehensible are His ways" [Rom. 11, 33.] and as He says to Moses: "My face thou canst not see, but My backside shalt thou behold" [2 Mos. 33, 23.].

45. But I do not want to have written such comfort at all, that Mainz, Heinz, and whoever else they are, the desperate assassins, traitors, murderers and evil-doers, should console themselves of that, whom I respect well, and also truly know that before they accept our teaching, the divine word (which they themselves must know, recognize and confess, that it is not our word, but truly God's word), much before they would become Turks against us, or, if they could, they would gladly become devils themselves, let alone that they should not heartily indulge, serve, advise and help the Turk as they only can, according to the saying of Virgili: Flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo, 3) if God does not help us from heaven, then all the devils will help us in hell; that is Mainzes and Heinzes, together with your thoughts, that I truly know.

46 And this is no small comfort to me, that God will look upon our miserable pleas, cries and sighs, and upon such great treacherous wickedness and devilish plots of the Heinzen and Mainzen, so we and still have to suffer, and help us above our merit, even regardless of our sin, yet against both, and finally, when we are humbled, give them their deserved reward on their head. For he lets sing of him: Facit judicium injuriam patientibus [Ps. 146, 7.] and: Justus est Dominus [Ps. 145, 17.]. And just as they sing now: Where is now your God? we want to sing once again: Where is now Mainz, Heinz, G[eorg] and their fellows?

3) Virgil, li6. VII, v. 312.

(47) Likewise, I will not and cannot have comforted our nephilim, 1) the tyrants, usurers, and rogues among the nobility, who make themselves believe that God has given us the gospel and redeemed us from papal imprisonment, so that they may be stingy, toil, and exercise all courage, press their princes, oppress land and people, and want to be everything in everything, which is not commanded but forbidden to them. They are the ones who help God's wrath to send the Turks to thresh over us, over themselves as well, where they will not repent. For it is impossible that Germany should remain standing, even infallibly and unpleasantly, where such tyranny, usury, miserliness, and the arrogance of the nobility, the bourgeoisie, the peasants, and all classes should remain and increase; in the end, the poor man would keep no crusts of bread in his house, and would rather, or so gladly, sit with the wise among the Turks than among such Christians. If there is too much power and no one better, they mock God's word and plague his servants.

1) i.e. giants, tyrants, Gen. 6:4.

2) Jenaer: like this. - Erlanger: "superiority."

48. But the consolation is that God, the Father of all mercy, a right judge, as well as an angry avenger 3) of all devils, Turks, Mahomet, Pabst, Mainz, Heinz, and all evildoers, has given us His holy, sacred word out of heartfelt grace, to recognize His dear Son; and that such a word is nevertheless accepted, honored and praised among so many blasphemers, persecutors, despisers, desperate devil children, by many good-hearted, chosen people, so glorious that not a few have risked their life and limb, property and honor over it, and still do. Such people's faith and prayers will and should push the bottom out of the barrel and put an end to the game, as Christ says, Luc. 18, 7. 8.: "Do you think that God will not save His elect who cry out to Him day and night? I tell you, he will save them in a moment."

In sum, we Christians should not presume on our wisdom or power (as the Turk, the Pope, Mainz, and the world do); nor should we despair or fear, as Judas did, and the Turk, the Pope, Mainz, and the world must do in the end. Our consolation, defiance, arrogance, presumption, pride, insistence, security, victory, life, joy, glory and honor sit above at the right hand of God the Father Almighty [Rom. 8:34]. Defiance, devil, bend him a hair, he is called and remains Scheblimini. All things are commanded unto him, he shall do and do well, as he hath done from the beginning, even unto the ages of ages, amen.

3) Jenaer: "Streffer" - punisher.

56. brother Richard's publishing of the Koran,

Written Anno 1300, Germanized by Luther, with his preface and attached warning. *)

About the end of April 1542.

Martin Luth, D.

(1) This book of Brother Richard of the Order of Preachers, called Confutatio Alcoran, I used to read more, but I could not believe that there were sensible people on earth whom the devil should persuade to believe such a shameful thing, and I always thought that it was invented by the French writers, as they have made all their histories suspect with their eternal lies in honor of the pope. However, I would have liked to see the Alcoran myself, and wondered how it happened that the Alcoran had not long since been brought into the Latin language, since Mahmet has now reigned longer than nine hundred years and has done so much harm, but no one has bothered to find out what Mahmet's faith was; they have only been satisfied that Mahmet was an enemy of Christian faith, but where and how, from piece to piece, has not been said; which is necessary to know.

But now, this Shrovetide, I have seen the Alcoran in Latin, but very badly interpreted, that I still wished to see a clarifier. So much, however, noticed from it, that this brother Richard does not invent his book, but tunes it at the same time. And that no false delusion can be here, so brother Richard has been probably two hundred years ago, almost under Emperor Alberto the First, since Dominici and Francisci Order have not been old. For he speaks and knows nothing about Turks, which first began to reign 200 years ago, and this next hundred years 2) (sint King Matthias' times) have grown so much that they have eaten up the Saracens, who reigned for nine hundred years, by Zelim, this Turk's father, Anno 1517, and are now called the Turkish Empire. I say this because I have to believe this brother Richard, who so long before has moved the Alcoran, so the same neither before nor until now with us no one has seen, and still see indistinctly.

Therefore, I consider it useful and necessary to translate this booklet (because there is no better one), so that we Germans may also recognize how shameful the faith of Mahomet is, so that we may be strengthened in our Christian faith. For since Mahmet receives victory, happiness, power and honor in the world through God's wrath or doom, but we Christians bear the cross of our Lord, and are to be blessed not here on earth, but there in that life, the common man of flesh and blood is easily moved to that place, where there seems to be no cross, but only good and honor in this life, to which Mahmet also directs his Alcoran.

4. suMma, where we cannot convert the Saracens and now the Turks, but that we in turn also remain firm and strong in our faith, and do not allow ourselves to be moved that the Saracens and Turks so much

1) In the old editions: Watschen.

2) "hundred" is missing in the Wittenberger.

3) Walch and the Erlangers: easy.

*On March 26, 1542, Luther wrote to Jakob Probst (De Wette, Vol. V, p. 452) that he was busy with the "translation of the refutation of the Alcoran Mahomet", and Besold wrote on April 11, 1542- about this writing, "that it will be printed soon" (Köstlin, Martin Luther, Vol. II, p. 686 sã p. 603); according to this is our approximate time determination. The writing appeared first in Wittenberg with Hans Luft 1542, and still in the same year in another edition without indication of place and printer. In the collections: in the Wittenberg (1551), vol. II, p. 494d; in the Jena (1562), vol. VIII, p. 11 d; in the Altenburg, vol. VIII, p. 12 and in the Leipzig, vol. XXI, p. 657. Only the preface and the epilogue in the Erlangen, vol. 65, p. 190. We give the text of the writing according to the Jenaer under comparison of the Wittenberger, the preface and epilogue under comparison of the Erlanger, which brings the text according to the original printing.

a hundred years of victory and happiness against the Christians, but we had many misfortunes against them, until they became masters of the world, always prevail with great honor and good, but we are defeated with great shame and harm. This is not because Mahomet's faith is right and ours is wrong, as the blind Turks claim, but because this is God's way of governing His people.

First of all, that he punishes and oppresses them because of their sin, as the 79. 1) Psalm, v. 8. 9. says, and the histories of the children of Israel teach abundantly with many examples; and St. Peter 1 Petr. 4, 17-19. (Proverbs 11, 31.): "It is now such a time that God's punishment or judgment must begin on the house of God. But first of all, what will be the end of those who do not believe in the Gospel of God? And if the righteous is barely (or with difficulty) preserved, where will the wicked and the sinner appear? Therefore, those who suffer according to God's will, let them commit their souls to Him, as to the faithful Creator, in good works." Thus Jerem. 25, 29: "Behold, in the city which is called by my name I began to afflict; and ye shall go unpunished? Ye shall not go unpunished."

(6) Secondly, Christ's blood must be shed from the beginning of the world to the end, so that many martyrs may go to heaven, because not only the blood of his saints (all of which is called his blood), but also his own personal blood must be shed. Woe to those who shed it! He has driven these two pieces through Mahmet and is still driving them. For Mahmet has tormented the Christians more cruelly than any tyrant, and the Christians well deserved such punishment, since they separated themselves with heresy and mobs, many new doctrines, and in addition lived angrily in ingratitude and contempt of the precious blood of Christ, that they might be redeemed and not atone. Thus the Mahmet also makes many martyrs than are ever made, that he strangles so many innocent children and otherwise pious Christians horribly.

7 But the great wrath is upon himself, that he is so terribly rejected by God, not only to inflict such punishment and bloodshed (which is not yet too high for a Christian heart to suffer and overcome), but also to lead so many people into eternal damnation with him in body and soul through his lies, as the pope also did and still does. These are the right last, terrible, horrible, most annoying plagues, hard for a Christian to bear in his heart, as the 89th Psalm v. 47. 48. almost grumbles against God and says: "Lord, how long will you hide yourself like this, and let your anger burn like fire? Remember how short is my life; wilt thou then have created all men in vain?" So let us leave the Turks and Saracens with their Mahmet, "as the wrath of God has come upon them to the end" (as Saint Paul says of the Jews [1 Thess. 2, 16.]) and think how we may be preserved and remain in God's grace, so that we may not be condemned with the Mahmet, nor let its great power, honor, victory, happiness and good entice and entice us, nor its terrible sword deter us. For this Richard also testifies that the Mahometans are not to be converted, for the reason that they are so hardened that they mock almost all articles of our faith and mockingly laugh at them as if they were fools washing impossible things.

(8) And where shall they be converted, if they reject the whole holy scripture, both New Testament and Old Testament, as now dead and unfit, and confess no discourse nor disputation of the holy scripture to any man, stopping up their ears, eyes, and hearts firmly against the blessed book of the holy scripture, abiding in their alcoran. This means wrath against all wrath, for which our dear Father in heaven protects us through his dear Son Jesus Christ and his Holy Spirit. We would rather, and it is better, suffer His wrath of temporal punishment and bloodshed, than to deny the Holy Scriptures with the devil and his apostle Mahmet and his saints, the Turks, and fall eternally into the eternal wrath of God with their victory, happiness, power, honor and good. "The Lord is my helper (says the beautiful Confitemini),

1) Erlanger: the 89th Psalm.

and I will see my pleasure in my enemies. The Lord is with me, therefore I will not fear; what can men do to me?" Amen. [Psalm 118:7, 6.]

Preface Brother Richards.

1) In the time of Emperor Heraclius 1) a man arose, yes, a devil and a firstborn child of Satan, against the truth and against the Christian church, who drowned in carnal immorality and dealt in black arts, named Mahmet. He has 2) from the inspiration and help of him, who is a liar and a father of all lies [Joh. 8, 44.], let a law go out full of lies and injustice, but with the appearance that it was spoken from the mouth of God: the same he has called Alkoran, that is, a summa or assembly, namely of the divine commandments. This Mahmet has persecuted the Christian church, neither harder those who have gone before, nor those who will come after. For he has not attacked the church in one way, but with all three, namely, with tyranny like the tyrants, with false doctrine like the heretics, and with deceit of glittering holiness like the hypocrites or false brethren, so that he has brought the greatest part of the world under himself with his deceit by God's decree, 3) who is wondrous in his doings among the children of men.

(2) Therefore I, Richard, the least of the Order of Preachers, have taken heed, and have directed my walk according to God's commandment. For after I had traveled over many seas and through many deserts, I also came to Babylon, the glorious city of the Saracens, where they have their high schools, which are very large; there I learned the Arabic script and language, and debated without ceasing and most diligently with their doctors and scholars, but found more and more how utterly shameful the said Alkoran law is. I also began to interpret it into Latin, but there were so many tales, lies, blasphemies, and always one useless babble after another that I was overwhelmed with great sadness.

1) Marginal gloss of the Jena edition: "In this year 1540 Heraclius has been dead for 900 years. - Heraclius reigned from 611-641. - In the Wittenberg edition (whose second volume first appeared in 1548), the marginal gloss reads: "In this 1548 Heraclius is just 906 year today." Instead of "1540" in the Jena edition, "1542" was probably intended.

2) Thus taken over by us from the old edition of Walch. Wittenberg and Jena: hats.

3) Wittenberger: verhengnis.

3) But this time I want to point out and indicate 4) the noble main points and lies of this shameful law with the help of the Most High, who is truth itself, so that other brethren may have cause, so that they may all the more easily convert such heretics, seduced by this law, back to God.

Chapter I.

From the main pieces of this alcoran.

4 Thus it is to be noted that all the filth, which the devil spreads from time to time through other heretics, he has fed out in one heap through Mahmet. With Sabellio he holds that God is not three persons, but he sets a branch in the Godhead (which rhymes with nothing in the Godhead); the one he calls God himself or God's being; the other he calls God's soul, and this is to be Christ, of a different and lesser being than God's subject. Therefore he introduces God in the Alkoran, that he speaks in two persons' names, and is divided 5) and says: We have done this, we have commanded this 2c. And this he got from the Arians, who taught that Christ was God's Son, who was a creature or God's creature, but far above all creatures, as through whom God had created everything else. So also Mahmet says that Christ is the most holy man above all others, and is a power far above all. Therefore, he calls him God's Word, God's Spirit, God's Soul; but that he should be a true, natural, essential God is very ridiculous to him, and considers the Christians to be ridiculous gross fools who believe such things.

And here he needs two causes: The first, that Christ never called himself God. The other, that he taught the contradiction. 6) Therefore Mahmet says (mockingly): The Christians say that Christ is God, while he himself says to the Jews: You shall worship my God and your God, my Lord and your Lord. And so Mahomet's foremost opinion is that Christ is neither God nor the Son of God, but a wise holy man and great prophet, born of a virgin without a father. For he says, 7) it is impossible for GOD to have a son, because he has no wife. And where he should have a son, there would be Him-

4) "will" is missing in the Wittenberger.

5) sich ihrzet" - speaks of itself in the majority.

6) Marginal gloss of the Jenaers and Wittenbergers: He got that from the Arians. O cleverness!

7) Marginal gloss there: He got this from the Jews, who are still talking like this today.

mel and earth and all creatures in great danger, for there would ultimately have to be discord among them.

He further says: 1) The Jews did not crucify or kill Christ, but another who resembled him. In this he almost agrees with the Manichaeans.

7 He further says: God has taken Christ to Himself, and He will be revealed again at the end of the world and will kill the end Christ. After that, God will let Christ die.

8) Further he says that also the devils can be saved by the Alkoran; and of the same many, since they heard this, 2) have become Saracenes.

9 He further says: He himself, Mahmet, went up to God, when the angel Gabriel was sent after him by God, God laid his hand on him, and when he was thus touched by God, he was so frozen that [it] also went through the marrow of his back.

10 He further says that the Holy Spirit is a creature, as the Macedonians said.

11 But that he says that the angels became devils, because they would not worship Adam as God had commanded them; in this he has no one to follow.

(12) But because he deludes and deceives about the eternal blessedness to come, that it should be in carnal pleasures, good living, delicious garments, and merry gardens, he has this from Cerintho and some other unbelievers.

13 And he holds that circumcision must be kept; as the Ebionites taught.

(14) He shall permit them to have many wives in wedlock, as well as concubines and maids, and to catch and feed as much as one of them may in war, and to rob and take the wives of others in war.

15 And he commanded that they all be put to death, if they obey not this law, or be liable to interest.

16) And in the chapter Vacca (that is, cow) he looks as if he allows both men and women to commit silent sins, although the descendants adorn them with beautiful glosses.

17 And this is the sum of it: Everything that is hard to believe and hard to do in the Scriptures, he cuts off, and allows what one is inclined to in this temporal life, as, carnal lusts, robbery and murder, to which especially the wild, raw people, the Arabs, have desire; because he is an Arab.

18. but of the right virtues, as, De

He speaks of courage, patience, chastity, peace, and of eternal life nothing worth reading.

19) But so that such of his 3) traits would not be mislaid by the Old and New Testaments, or by the old 4) philosophers' books written about virtues, he commanded that nothing in them should be considered truth that was contrary to his law, and called for all those to be severely punished who spoke against it. 5)

20 But he praises the Psalter and other prophets highly.

21. also says, 6) Christ prophesied much of him in the gospel to the children of Israel, saying, I proclaim to you an apostle of God, who will come after me, whose name is Mahmet. And boast that this name is written from eternity on the throne of God above, at the right hand.

22 But to prove this, that it should be believed, he did no miracle at all, but drew out a sword, and said, He was sent of God, not with powers of miracles, but with powers of the sword, or weapons.

These are the most important parts of the Alkoran, that is, the Saracen Law; otherwise there are countless lies in it, some of which we will deal with in the 9th chapter.

Chapter II.

How to deal with them.

(24) Secondly, it is to be known that they are very nigern und kützeln 7) to hear of our faith, especially of three persons in the Godhead and of the humanity of Christ; not that they desire to know or believe it, but that they mock our faith and make their laughter of it. For what is beyond reason and human understanding they cannot understand. Therefore they do not want to believe it, even though Isaiah says: "If you do not believe, you will not understand", Is. 7, 9. And because it is also contrary to their Alkoran (which they firmly believe to be God's word), they do not let them say anything about it and do not pay attention to it. Therefore, it is not necessary to first discuss with them the high articles of our faith and to cast pearls before swine [Matth. 7, 6.], but to take this way and manner, namely, from their

3) Thus set by us. Jenaer: "such his"; Wittenberger: "such his".

4) "old" is missing in the Jena.

5) talk tbursten - dared to talk.

6) Marginal gloss: O devil! Ivan. 5: Alius betrayed in homilie suo.

7) i.e. curious and ticklish.

1) Marginal gloss: He got that from himself, as the third master.

2) Marginal gloss: That is true, devils, Saracens, Turks are. One thing.

Alcoran, and do diligence to prove such their law false and void. For since faith teaches us such things as are incomprehensible, let us be content that it is confirmed by the gospel (which the Alcoran himself also praises) and by miracles, since they have neither gospel nor miracles to prove 1) their law, but hold what reason can comprehend, like the Gentiles.

35 And though the Alcoran says, Ye shall not call three gods, cause it is One God; this is not against us, and proves nothing. For we ourselves say, as do the pagans, that there is only one God, and that he is united and indivisible, so that nothing could be more united. Nor do we give him a companion, as they do, who is called God's soul, God's spirit, God's word, as if he were his servant; so that one would be justified in asking them why the Alkoran makes God speak more than many, or we, if they insist that he is one, and not many or we. But because the Saracens deny both miracles and the Apostles' Scriptures, where they are against the Alcoran, there is no other way to deal with them, except that the Alcoran is not God's law. Which one can also do through the Alcoran, and thus strike Goliath with his own sword.

Chapter III.

That the Alkoran is not God's law, because neither Old nor New Testament testify nor prophesy of it.

26 There is no testimony of Mahomet, neither in the Old nor in the New Testament, but he himself and only he testifies of himself, without miraculous signs and without writing; therefore he cannot be of God, and denies, since he boasts that he is a prophet to the whole world. But to this he answers thus: it is well prophesied of him, both in the Old and New Testament, but the Jews have falsified the Old Testament, the Christians the New Testament; but he has taken out the best, and nothing true remains in the Old and New Testament, without what he has collected and selected in the Alkoran. Otherwise, 2) Christ would have proclaimed in the Gospel to the children of Israel: "I proclaim to you an apostle who will come after me, whose name is Mahmet.

27. that this is not true, I prove therefore; for he himself [Mahmet] in the chapter of Jonah says thus: Where you doubt that which we have now 1) "to" here inserted by us and "to" before "have" to you.
erased from us.

2) In the old editions: had.

ask those who have read the book (the Bible) before you 2c. But this is what the Jews and Christians find. If then the books of the Bible are falsified, why does he assign his Saracen brothers to false ones? Is he a prophet of truth, and skins himself here in the cheeks?

28 Thus he also speaks in the chapter Elagar, which means stone: We (God) have sent down monitiones, admonitions, which we also want to receive. But admonitions are called the gospel and the law of Moses. So God must preserve the Gospel and the Laws of Moses both before and after Mahomet; how then does he reproach them for falsifying God's preservation, the holy prophet? Item, in the chapter Elmaida, that is table, is thus written: When the judge of Empacene said to Mahmet: How shall I tell the Jews, if they seek justice from me? said Mahmet: How do they seek justice from you? they have the Old Testament, where God's justice is written. Now tell me, how do you deny that the Jews have forged the Old Testament? Or do you direct them to the false book, you holy truthful prophet?

(29) It is also foolish to say that the Bible should be forged, since all the heretics in the world have used it against the Christians, and it would be ridiculous for the heretics to use a different Bible than that of the Christians. For then they would have known that their new Biblia would have been worthless against the old Biblia of the Christians, and again, the Christians against their Biblia, because there were two different Biblia. But now it is a matter of one Bible, who has it or not.

30 Further: towards the morning there were many sects before Mahmet was born, especially the Nestorians and Jacobites. The Nestorians, however, agree more with the Saracens than the Jacobites; that is why they gave honor to Mahmet above all others. But how is it credible to reason that the Nestorians and Jacobites became one with each other, who were so hostile to each other that they even strangled each other?

Item, why should the Christians have removed the name Mahmet from the gospel before, which praises Christ and his mother, also the gospel? For thus he says in the Alkoran: In the gospel of Christ is truth and perfection. Much more would they have erased the names Pilati, Herodis, Jude, Caiphä 2c.

32) How can it rhyme that the Christians should have put in the gospel how Christ was crucified and died, so that it would have been much better for the Christians and easier for the world to believe that they have Christ?

(the Mahmet does), especially because it is foolish and impossible for all reason to believe that he who is a true God should die?

33. nor has the whole world accepted this, emperors, kings, scholars, and poor unlearned laymen, as the apostles and their disciples were. So also a Saracen Calphas or Soltan died as a Christian in Babylon, and a cross was found on his neck, that he might bear witness that, though he had been the Saracen Soltan, yet he wished to die as a Christian; wherefore he was also specially buried, not in the place where others are wont to be buried, and I have seen the grave myself.

34 Item, in the chapter Elmaida (Table) it says: There is nothing with the company of the book, where they do not keep the gospel and the law. "Society of the Book" is the name of the Saracens who have accepted the Alkoran. So they must keep the Gospel and the Law of Moses, besides the Alkoran, which is their own law (as they say), or there is nothing with them; how then shall they keep corrupted books according to God's and their Mahomet's commandments? Or do God and their prophet honor truth and lies at the same time?

35 Lastly, they are guilty of showing us where they have found an unadulterated Bible, because they are all said to be false; they must convince the false with a true one, or be liars, and be guilty of keeping with us the Biblia, which is the same in all the world, or condemn its Alkoran by its own judgment as a book of lies.

Chapter IV.

That Alkoran could not be God's law, because he has another way of speaking.

The Alkoran does not have the way of speaking that other holy scriptures have, for it is definitely set in rhyme or poetry, as songs are sung. But to speak in such a way is not only against the holy scriptures, but also against all philosophers, laws and other textbooks, without where the songs are. For it is not fitting, if one should preach, teach or speak in court, that he should come along with rhymes, as if he wanted to sing a song or play a mischievous game. Although the Saracens and Arabs praise this highly, as if it were a sign that their law is revealed by God to the Mahomet and is all the more glorious, if the contradiction is true. For no prophet, lawyer or philosopher has ever spoken poetically or in rhyme where he should have taught and preached to the common people.

Therefore also some reproached Mahomet, as it is written in the chapter Elempii, and said: How is it with thee? Dost thou dream? or wilt thou dance? or art thou foolish? For no reasonable man can suffer anything to be told or reported to him, especially if it is new that someone wants to do it with rhymes. He would have to think that one wanted to mock him or make a joke in serious matters; singing and rhyming otherwise have their time and space, here it is not suitable.

37 Furthermore, the Alkoran is full of his own useless praise. For he may well teach nothing everywhere for a whole chapter, but only speak in God's person that God is great, high, wise, good, just, and that he is all that there is in heaven, on earth, and in the means, and he is to be praised. And he should do this more than a hundred times, and then follow it: there is no God but God, and he believes God and his apostle (means himself by this); and in this he forgets, like a madman, that he himself speaks such things about God. For it is not God's way to speak thus in His own person: Know that God is great 2c., but the prophets and others speak of God thus; but God speaks of Himself thus: I am your GOtt, I have made all things, mine is all things, I am gracious 2c. Not so in Alkoran: God is your God, as if he spoke of another, which he was not.

38 Thirdly, the Alkoran uses impudent, coarse, lewd words when speaking of the work of the flesh, as do the harlots and knaves in the whorehouse, or other coarse impudent people. But the Holy Spirit speaks of it in the Scriptures in a very chaste way; as: Adam knew his wife Eve; item: David went in to Bethsaba; item: Elisabeth became pregnant 2c. Because also the right and philosophi, as public speakers, chastely and shamefully speak of it. But Mahmet was so deeply immersed in fornication that he liked to speak shamefully in public about such wretched need or evil sinful lust, and teaches how to speak, as those do who are like him in the insatiable lust of the flesh.

39 Fourth, it is obvious and certain to all who read it that the Alkoran is full of fables and useless fairy tales, so I will put a little here. In the chapter Emele, which means fly, it is written that Solomon gathered a great army of angels, men and unreasonable animals. As they went along, they found flies like a great stream of water. Then Solomon said to the flies: Arise, ye flies, into your dwelling, that Solomon and his host destroy you not. But the flies smiled. Soon after, all the birds in the army were there without the flies.

were not there. And Solomon said, How is it that I see no fly? I will punish it and cut off its head, or else causes shall tell me why it is not there. Then said the fly: I have learned more than you; I come to you now from Sabea with true new paper. Then I found a woman ruling over them, whom I forced, together with her people, to worship the sun in God's stead. 2c.

. Item, in the chapter Caramar, that is, moon, Luna, thus it is written: The hour came, and the moon was broken. Their scholars interpret this as follows: Mahmet once stood with his company and watched the moon as it almost wanted to become new. Then they said to him: "Dear, let us see a sign. So he beckoned to the moon with two fingers, his thumb and middle finger. When he did so, the moon split into two pieces, and one piece fell on Mount Eleventh, which is near the city of Mecca 1) on one side, and the other piece fell on Mount Rubus, which is on the other side of the city. When the moon was thus divided, it crept into Mahmet's skirt, and he made it whole again.

Item, in the chapter Seni he says, how a worm announced Solomon's death to the devils. They glossed over it thus: Solomon leaned on his staff, then suddenly such a great pain came upon him that his soul went out in a flash. But he did not fall down, by the miracle of God. The devils, however, who had to be subjected to him, seeing that he was standing, thought that he was asleep. Then a worm grew out of the earth and gnawed the staff in two, so Solomon fell down. And the devils ran to 2) and saw that he was dead. So they began to harm the people with all their might.

42) Item, in the chapter of Erzelen 3) he himself, Mahmet, sets the reasons why wine is forbidden, and says: God sent two angels on earth, that they should rule well and judge right, one was called Aroth, the other Maroth. Then a pious woman came and invited them as her guests, and gave them wine to drink, when God had forbidden that they should not drink wine. When they were drunk, they asked to sleep with her; 4) she agreed, but with the condition that the one taught her to go to heaven and the other taught her to go back down. So she went to heaven. But when God saw her and heard her

He made her a morning star, so that she would be as beautiful among the stars in heaven as she had been the most beautiful among women on earth. 5) But to the angels he gave the choice whether they wanted to be punished here or there. And because they chose rather to suffer the punishment here, he let them hang by the feet with an iron chain in the well of Babylon until the last day.

43 These and many other things are written in the Alkoran, from which all reasonable people may conclude that such a law cannot be divine. For even nature teaches, if there were no Bible, that the true God would not speak to men through such fables.

Chapter V.

That the Alkoran does not agree with the Holy Scriptures or other reasonable teachings.

44 It is obvious that the Alkoran of virtues or good works, and of man's blessedness, does not agree with the philosophers either, let alone with the holy Scriptures; for the philosophers speak much of all kinds of virtues, and that man's blessedness is found in contemplation, not in carnal pleasures. But Christ clearly says John 17:3: "This is life eternal, that they may know thee, the one true God, and him whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ. And Moses, 2 Mos. 33, 13. 18., having seen many wonders of God, and being full of gifts, nevertheless heartily desired to behold God's face.

45) But Mahmet is not about virtues at all, 6) but about wars and robberies, the long way to hell. And will they help nothing to blessedness (as they think) when they speak these words: 7) There is no God but God, and Mahmet is God's apostle. So he also puts man's blessedness in carnal pleasures, in eating, drinking, beautiful clothes, funny gardens, pretty clean women, of which afterwards in the 6th chapter. And no one can say that he speaks these things as parables, which should mean something else, spiritual, as there are also parables in the Gospel, as Christ says that his own shall eat and drink with him at his table, in his Father's kingdom [Luc. 22, 30]. But the Evan-

5) Marginal gloss: Ei, nun strafe dich GOtt, leidiger, blasphemous devil.

6) Marginal gloss: Ut in Rosario.

7) Marginal gloss: Murderer, say a Hail Mary and you will be blessed.

1) In the Wittenberg and the Jena: Mecha.

2) Marginal gloss: These are silly and young devils gewest.

3) Perhaps: "telling", as Walch resolved it.

4) Marginal gloss: Here stands the chaste Mahmet's word.

The Gospel itself interprets such parables, that eating does not mean filling the belly, or that beautiful women should be there, as everyone knows well. But the Alcoran speaks such things without all parables, and interprets it nowhere else, except that it is a blessedness, as a lewd carnal man desires.

46) Even though Mahmet did not think or speak about the right eternal bliss, he nevertheless told his Saracens a special thing beforehand (without doubt because of God's decree), because Mahmet says to the Saracens: 1) After me you will be divided into three and seventy parts, among which only one part will be saved, the others will all be destroyed with fire. This saying is so valid among them that 2) neither the wise nor the unwise hold it in low esteem. There is also another saying in the Alcoran, in the chapter Martil, that is, Maria, which says that all Saracens must go to hell. I consider this saying to be true, even though it is spoken from the mouth of the supreme liar.

47 Secondly, the Alcoran does not agree with Moses in the commandments. For God's commandment forbids murder, robbery and all carnal pleasure, but the Alcoran says all this, or even forbids it: as in the chapter Elmir, that is, Light, he forbids that one should not force wives to leave chastity; but if they consent to it, one may safely sleep with them. And in the chapter Elminim he allows both to sleep with their own wives, and how much one can catch them in war 2c.

Chapter VI.

How the Alcoran is against himself.

Mahmet himself speaks in the chapter Elnasa, that is, women: If the Alcoran were not from GOD, there would be much repugnant in it. And in many places he says: God does not lead anyone astray. Again, in many places he asks that God lead him from darkness to light. Item, he says: he is a lost orphan. Again he says: God has made such a prophet out of him. For when God called him to Himself, he went up to God in the seventh heaven and obtained forgiveness for an angel a thousand times greater than the world, whom he found weeping over his sin.

49. He says: he is the common prophet of all the world. And again he speaks: that God gave the Alcoran only in Arabic language,

1) Marginal gloss: Here the devil raises mice.

2) In the editions: them (jnen).

and he could not speak any other language than Arabic. He says in the chapter Inpakara, that is, a young cow, that both Jews, Christians and Sabaeans will be saved; but afterwards, in the chapter Abraham, he says that no one will be saved except those who live according to the law of the Saracens.

50] Item, he commands them, 3) They are not to act harshly and harshly, but gently with people of another sect, for it is not man's, but God's alone, to bring them to justice. And each one must give account for himself, not for another. Again, in many places he commands to kill and rob those who do not believe, until they believe or pay tribute. But again, in the chapter Comem, he says: 4) Those who accept a god other than God, you shall not take care of them, nor provide for them, for God Himself has reserved this for Him. Is this not a deliberate act against each other, so often commanding to kill the unbelievers; again, so often commanding not to punish sin, but to let God alone punish?

51 Thus in the chapter Elteminim he boasts that he is not one who compels to faith. How is this true? Or where is a greater compulsion than to compel by robbery and death? In the chapter Bovis, that is, Ox, he admits that 5) it is not against nature to mix with boys and women. For he says to the Saracens that they should not defile themselves with the unbelievers before they become believers. And to the 6) women he says: Your wives are your fields, plow them as you wish. Again, in the same chapter, he says that the Sodomites in the time of Lot committed an abominable sin, which the former Gentiles were not accustomed to.

(52) He says of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their descendants that they were Saracens. Again, he says that it was revealed to him by God that he was the first Saracen in this faith. If he is the first Saracen, how were those Saracens? if the Alcoran was given long after Moses and the Gospel. For Mahomet began at five hundred and eight and ninety years after the birth of Christ, and continued until the seventh hundred year. But if he wants to say that they were Saracens because they knew as prophets what the Alcoran would be, then they were also all kinds of heretics and everything that they knew in the future. If they want to say that they liked the Alcoran, it is impossible,

3) Marginal gloss: Hoc servat hodie.

4) "he" is missing in the Jena.*

5) Marginal gloss: O Sow Abbot and Rangen Prior.

6) In the old editions: the.

For they have taught and done much that is in the Alkoran differently and against it.

53, Item, he says: "Prophesying by the flight of birds or by their crying is forbidden. But after that, in the chapter of Elaphar, he says: You shall prophesy; if you cannot do otherwise, do it with your fingers; and whoever does not do it, let him be banished. Item, he says, he was sent to the Arabs because they had no apostle of their own from God. Item, that the Alkoran is given only in the Arabic tongue, and that he cannot speak any other language than Arabic. For when Mapira the Jacobite, Silon the Persian, and Solam the Jew joined the Mahomet, some said: These will teach you everything; then he fell to the ground, and his hands clenched. And his fellows covered him with their garments.

54 And when he was come again to himself, he said, God hath sent me to rebuke you for the word, because ye say, These teach me. And read unto them a saying, which is at the end of the chapter of Elnael, that is, Palms, which saith thus, We 1) know that it shall be said, These teach him, when they speak Persian with him 2c. Therefore he says: How is it possible that these should teach me, if one is a Persa, the other a Hebrew? To this they answer: It is possible that they speak to you in their own language and then interpret it to you, but you put everything into your own language. To this he knew no answer.

(55) But if he could not learn from a Persian and a Hebrew, which are the nearest to his language, how can he teach those who are so far from his language? And yet he wants to be a prophet to all the Gentiles. For in the chapter "Prophets" he says that God said to him: We have sent you to all the Gentiles. But how will he come to all the Gentiles, who are divided into 72 languages, if he cannot reveal his word in any other language than Arabic?

Chapter VII.

That the Alkoran is not confirmed with any miraculous work.

When Moses was sent to Pharaoh, he performed great miracles [2 Mos. 7, 9. ff], and all the prophets, Elijah [1 Kings 17], Elisha [2 Kings 1. ff], and especially those who were to bring forth a new thing. Christ came with great signs [Apost. 2, 22. 10, 38.], as Mahmet himself confesses in the Alkoran; but he 2) has never done any sign; therefore his law cannot be of

1) Marginal gloss: "We" that is, GOD and His soul.
2) "but" is missing in the Wittenberger.

God, and he would not be an apostle of God. And if the Saracens wanted to say that Mahmet had done many and great signs, as when he replenished the moon that had been cut in two and made a spring of water flow from his finger; these are fables, and also contrary to the Alkoran itself. For Mahmet declares that no such thing of his is to be believed without what is written in the Alkoran. Of all the prophets he says, "Many have told many lies; lest anyone think the same of me, let that alone be believed to be true of me, which is proved by the Alkoran.

57 For when he had done no miracles, and wished to prove it, he brought in God, who spoke to him, saying, "The Lord said to me, 'Therefore I will not let you perform miraculous signs, lest you suffer for miraculous signs, as other prophets have done. So it is proved by his own testimony that he did no miraculous sign. And he, Mahmet, often speaks in the Alkoran, as the people said to him: Show a miracle, as Moses came with the signs, and as Christ and other prophets have done. To which he answers: Moses and the prophets were sent by God, especially Christ, who came with great signs; but the world did not believe them, but called them magicians and black artists. Therefore God did not send me a sign, because they would not have believed; but I came by force of arms.

(58) But this is publicly false. Why would they not have believed him if he had performed miraculous signs, if they had believed him without miraculous signs, since he only pretended to kill, rob and rape women, to cut out tooth for tooth, eye for eye? For people are inclined to worldliness, so that they can hardly be kept from it by many judges, executioners and punishers. But that he introduces the sword for miracles, or weapons force, is also a lie, because he is not always superior, as Moses, Joshua, Elijah, whom God's angels always protected, 3) and helped to win. But Mahmet sometimes won, sometimes lost, like other tyrants; for his teeth were knocked out in war, and his face was bruised.

(59) Therefore this is not a miracle, which they take for a miracle, that a great part of the world has fallen to him. For he has given such a law and such commandments, 4) to which people are inclined even without laws; as said above. God has commanded me," he says, "to fight the heathen with the sword, until they have

3) In the editions: protects.
4) Marginal gloss: Yes, against God's law.

that there is no God without God, and that I am God's apostle. Those who have confessed this have received their money and blood with it. Therefore, the Saraceni are called servati, the preserved ones. For those who accepted Mahomet's commandment were preserved, both by him and by those who were under him, and did not kill them or take anything from them. And the Saraceni therefore will not be called Saraceni, but Maselamin, that is, the preserved ones, and mock the Christians for calling themselves the preserved ones.

(60) Since many took such preservation from Mahomet for the sake of the same causes, he was told to preach that whoever said these words, "There is no God but God," 1) would go to Paradise, being an adulterer or a highwayman. But there came to him one, whose name was Evordi, and asked him whether this was true? He answered, "Yes," and said, "If he drinks wine or kills, even if he bends the nose of Abdala," 2) but to confirm this he did not give a sign, but drew his sword.

61 It is even clearer in the chapter of the Prophets, for there it reads: "It was said to Mahomet, 'You dream, you invent lies, or perhaps you want to sing; dear one, come to us with some miraculous signs, like those who were sent before. Then he answered, "God says, 'We have turned back cities before the eyes of the unbelievers, and after them those who were before you; yet they will not believe, neither will you believe, except by the sword. But he boasts that Gabriel was sent to him by God, who led him to a beast larger than an ass and smaller than a mule, whose name was Elmaparak. And the same beast could talk and walk in an hour a way that would otherwise take five thousand years to walk, and it did so at night; and other more fables, of which hereafter in the tenth chapter.

(62) But our Christian faith, which demands hard things to believe and to do, is founded on public and useful miraculous signs, which not only Christ, but also the apostles and later the fathers performed, and which still continue to this day, so that devils are cast out, the sick are healed, and the dead are raised. Such miracles are performed by Christians, who believe and confess that Jesus Christ Crucified is the true and only God.

63 And although the Saraceni say they did not believe that les) had happened, I show this great miracle. It is evident that the

The whole world before the birth of Christ worshipped idols, especially the Romans, who were masters of the world at that time. They still accepted the Christian faith, and not only believed that the crucified Christ was the true God, but also rejected all other gods, who answered them so long ago through the idols, and also did not impose anything more difficult; but the Christian faith imposes such unusually difficult things, as despising the world, despising oneself, loving enemies, praying for persecutors, doing good to those who harm us, not stealing other people's goods, giving our own goods 2c. The world has accepted all these things and rejected its former nature.

(64) Whether the world be converted by miracles or without miracles, it is a great wonder that without miracles, through simple-minded unlearned men, such things may have happened. And this is what the Christians did, who did not kill other people, but patiently suffered the death of others. Thus it is evident that the Christian faith is founded on exceedingly great miracles, but the faith of Mahomet is not founded on a single miracle. There is also such a faith that needs no miracles, especially among the Saracens, who are quite carnal and inclined to temporal pleasure, even to rob and murder.

65. although what wise people [are,] and learned people, the people have reason among them, the Mahmet believe nothing.

Chapter VIII.

That the Alkoran of Mahmets is bestial and sour.

(66) It might well have happened that Mahmet's law would have been accepted by the world, even without miraculous signs, since it would have been according to reason. But now it is not according to reason. First, because of the master; second, because of the law in himself; third, because of the work; fourth, because of the end or opinion.

First of all, it is not according to reason that such an evil man, a murderer, robber, adulterer, and subject to other vices, should make a holy (as they call it) law; as is obvious to all who know his life. Here the Saracens answer: David also fell into adultery and murder [2 Sam. 11.]; Moses slew an Egyptian [2 Mos. 2, 12.]. So it may be said of Mahomet that he can still be God's prophet, whether he has been in sin or not;

1) Marginal gloss: Id est, diabolus est etiam deus.

2) Marginal gloss: Infra [§ 160] Audula [In the Aus gave erroneously: Andula.]

3) In the outputs: everything.

for those two were nevertheless true prophets of God. But they were not. David and Moses have punished their sin by repentance; and this is known. For David confessed his sin, and was sorry for it; therefore when he said, "I have sinned," Nathan said out of God's mouth, "The LORD hath forgiven thee thy sin" [2 Sam. 12:13]. But nowhere does it say of Mahmet that he atoned for or confessed his sin, but rather confirmed it by his blasphemously shameful law.

68 For all the Saracens know very well that Mahmet had fallen in love with a woman called Mary, a Jacobite, whom Macobeus, the king of the Jacobites, had given him. But Mahmet's two wives, one of whom was named Aiese, a daughter of Empiecer, the noblest of all, and the other Aasa, a daughter of Omar, began to jealousy against Mary. And they came to him one day, and found him lying with Mary, and said: Yes, shall a prophet do so? Then he was ashamed, and swore an oath that he would never do it again. And they were satisfied for the sake of the oath. Soon afterward he could not refrain himself, and made a law as if it had been ordained by God and revealed to him, and put the sentence in the Alkoran, in the chapter Elmetheharem, that is, prohibition or ban, saying: O Prophet, why doest thou commit that which God hath permitted thee? Do you want to court your wives? God has hereby decreed that you may not keep your oaths. So he perjured himself and slept with her again, pretending that God had revoked his oath, with Michael and Gabriel as witnesses.

(69) Then one of his wives said, O Mahmet, yes, God will be very pleased with your forwardness. Perhaps that is why he spoke it, so that he would follow you and participate with you in this evil work; do you think that is why God commanded you to testify with your mouth? Do you think God wants to help you and assist you in this? Then he read to both his wives what follows in the chapter Vetationes, and said, as if from the mouth of God: "Let it be a sorrow to you before God that your hearts have sinned so (he means that they had punished him for adultery); and there it follows: If he will divorce you, I will give him better Saracen women in your place, who are devout, rich, penitent, prayerful, and strong, as well as virgins. When they heard this, they said, "We are sorry.

Seventy and seventy, when he took his wife from Zeith, his conductor, he said in the chapter of Elazeb that God had said: Thou dost you harbor in your heart that God wants to be revealed, and you fear men; it is cheaper to fear God. But when she promoted Zeith again and said: O apostle of God, you must not have her 1) as your wife, Mahmet said: Woe to you, God has given her to me.

(71) Indeed, he himself, Mahomet, says: There is no greater sin than to ascribe lies to God. There is no sin more offensive to a prophet than impure lust and fornication of the flesh. For the Holy Spirit does not stir the heart even of the right holy prophets when they are in the work of the flesh, as St. Jerome says. Aristotle also says that it is impossible to deal with wisdom in such work or lust.

Therefore it is contrary to reason that such a holy law (as they call it) should be the master and prophet of such an unclean, coarse, lewd, carnal man, who also boasts that he has as much strength and supply for such a work as forty other men. Although God has not given him a child, only a daughter. 2) Such a law is a beastly, unreasonable law to keep for the sake of its master, who is such a desperate, evil, beastly, sour man. In addition, he himself is uncertain and doubtful, as he testifies about himself in Alcoran that he does not know how he and the Saracens will fare, and that he is also uncertain whether he and they are with him on the path to salvation or not.

73 Secondly, the alcoran is also in himself a beastly and sour law against reason. For he uses the most impudent words in matters where it is necessary and fair to speak honorably and demurely, and to cover the hereditary shame, but he likes to speak such words, which serve the lust of the flesh. For in many places he uses the word coire, 3) that even the poets are not so coarse. Nor does he publicly pretend that there is no man on earth who understands the Alkoran. Why then has God commanded to keep it, if one cannot understand it?

This is also contrary to reason and foolishly spoken, since he says in many places that God commanded the angels to worship Adam. And those who would not do so would have to become devils, but those who would do so would remain angels. How can reason suffer that God should command idolatry and give men the honor that is God's alone?

75 Item, as they say, is the most necessary thing in

1) In the Wittenberg (wrong) instead of "they not": "me".

2) "a" is missing in the Jena.

3) Marginal gloss: Vox diaboli.

their laws that one should speak these words everywhere: There is no God but God, and Mahomet is God's apostle, and that God is great. What kind of a great thing is this, as if there were some doubt or strange new doctrine in it? Who does not know that God is God and that He is great? Who has ever heard that God is not God, or that He is small, be it One God or much? It is just as if one said: There is no donkey but a donkey, there is no cow but a cow, there is no man but a man. It is well known that an ox or a dog is not an ass, nor is man or an angel God; fools and madmen may speak so. But that it should be a special service of God or wisdom, that is nothing. Moreover, as true and certain as it is that God is God, it is uncertain that Mahomet is God's apostle. What is the use of such a great foolish glory in these vain words, that he who speaks such words will be blessed without doubt?

76 Item, Mahmet says in the Law: that all men are of one kind, and of one faith, but God has made them of many kinds, having sent many prophets. Dear, what appearance does this have that it should be true? God wants to have unity at the highest, and not various sects. The devil and evil men (by God's decree) separate men from the unified truth in various errors and sects.

(77) Item, Mahomet says, as from the mouth of God, to kill the unbelievers, that is, those who are not Saracens. And yet say, they can think no good thing unless they are guided by God. If they are not guided, it is foolish, even murderous, they kill for that which they are not able to do. But if they are able, it is foolish to force them. For GOtte does not like forced services. And elsewhere he himself considers it a foolish, unskillful thing to kill those who do not believe, or to force them to believe. For so he says in the chapter of Jonah: "If God would, all who are on earth would believe; and you want to force people to believe? No one can believe unless God gives it to him. More about this in the following chapter.

78 Thirdly, his law is contrary to reason and animalistic, because of the things it teaches. He makes a separate chapter of ants, of the spider, of smoke. But why does God give such things about ants and smoke 2c.? Item, he says: God can never forgive him who turns his back on his enemies. Rather, what fool would consider it a sin for one to flee,

If he saw the danger? without wanting to make his own foolhardy and belligerent.

79 Item, when he teaches 1) about washing, that is indeed foolish and ridiculous. He says that if they want to pray, they should wash the hands and face, and below (with leave) the hindmost and foremost, as he calls it roughly enough, also the soles of the feet and the arm up to the elbow. But where they could not have water, they shall thrust the hand into dust, and rub the hands with dust, and so rub the face also therewith 2c. If one teaches to wash the heart, as Jeremiah says [Jer. 4, 4], that would be more reasonable. What is the sense of rubbing dust on the face?

80 But this is exceedingly great, gross unreasonableness, which he teaches about divorce. For a Saracen may repudiate his wife and take her again, as often as she loved him, 2) but so far that he, who repudiated for the third time, must not take her again. Unless the other husband has not slept with her properly or perfectly 3). Therefore, if they would like to have their wives again, they give money to the one who has taken the rejected woman (who is sometimes a blind man or some other lowly person), so that he may be heard publicly to say that he wants to divorce her; when this has happened, the first one can take her again. 4) But it also happens that the same other man likes the woman so much that he says afterwards that he cannot divorce her; so he has lost both money, bride and hope. But such laws should not be imposed on humans, but on unreasonable animals 5).

Fourth, Mahomet's law is also against God and all reason, that he sets man's highest and last good (eternal bliss) in carnal pleasure. For throughout the whole of the Alkoran he promises his Saracens this blessedness, that they will possess watery gardens, wives and concubines, young, clean, sedate, in purple robes, golden and silver cups over the tables, and all kinds of delicious food; all this he tells especially in the chapter Elrahman,

1) Marginal gloss: O holy water, where are you?

2) Side note: This is dog and sow wedding, not marriage.

3) Marginal gloss: "Perfect", what that is, the devil or Mahmet's impudent hemlock himself interprets in my place. Fie on you, you shameful devil and cursed Mahmet.

4) Here should probably be read: "that the same other man's wife" etc.

5) Randglosse der Jenaer Ausgabe: Nämlich den Säuen und Hundm.

that is, merciful. And in the Book of the Doctrine of a child in the womb, which is nourished and produces Mahomet, which is highly respected among them, he sets nothing. But what such an example does, everyone the order of the food and says: "The first dish shall be in the liver of the fish Alimpeput, a very sweet food. Then fruits of the trees, one after the other. And now comes further on in the same chapter, where some ask him, whether they also will do carnal pleasure? He answered, "If there were not some pleasure, it would not be a blessed life, and the rest would be nothing and in vain, if this pleasure of the flesh did not follow.

And the final opinion of the Alkoran and the Saracen sect is to put the blessedness in carnal and belly pleasures. And do not do that, that they interpret it spiritually to another, wre the holy scripture speaks of the table and meal in the kingdom of heaven [Luc. 22, 30.]. For Mahmet does not say a word about the true blessedness of beholding God and being perfect in all virtues, for he does not desire it, nor does he understand it, but only that which he desires he promises them.

In this he shows himself to be the one who teaches not only against Christ and the prophets, but also against the philosophers and all rational men, who all agree that man's salvation is in knowledge, as Christ says: "This is eternal life, that they may know you" [John 17:3]. And Aristotle says: "Life in the mind is the best. So life according to the belly and carnality must be the worst, which hinders all good understanding.

But because the Saracens do not ask anything, neither according to the holy scriptures nor according to the reason of the philosophers, one must reproach them, as the coarse sows, their sour life, how it may be in that life. For why should eating and drinking, if there is an eternal life, no sickness, hunger, thirst, death or lack? As Mahmet himself confesses and says in his textbook: God will strangle death, after which they will rise immortal and completely healthy. So, what is the use of the work of carnal pleasure, if there are no children or fruits of the body there, since it was ordained by God? Or if there is to be eating and drinking, then there must also be the sweeping out of the body; how does this rhyme with eternal blessed life?

Here Mahmet answers in his textbook: There will be no sweeping out of the filth without sweat 1). And he leads the example of a child in the womb, which is nourished and produces nothing. But what such an example does, everyone understands well; for the child neither eats nor drinks in the womb, nor does it have carnal pleasure in eating and drinking, which the mammoth alone seeks, but nourishes itself through the umbilical cord. Also, what kind of bliss is that, since one must sweat, sweat and stink every hour without ceasing, as in a bath or parlor?

But where children are to be born of the work of the flesh, 3) many more will be born after the resurrection than were ever born before the resurrection; and these same children cannot be perfect, like the fathers and mothers, but must be unequal, weaker, more foolish, more meager; how then are they blessed? Also, where there is lust of the flesh, there will also be pain in childbirth for the women of the flesh. Item, the children will also have to die, if they are to be resurrected otherwise.

(87) If those who are born after the resurrection cannot be blessed, but take many wives, they must remain blessed and wait until many wives are born. And thus many more women than men would have to be born. Thus, in a short time, the reign of women would become.

If, after the resurrection of men, their multiplication by fleshly works is to continue forever, this must be followed by the fact that they must either die again and decay or be born eternally without number; this is impossible. Or if the same deceased shall not also rise again, the soul must remain eternally separated from the body, and thus the resurrection will not be of all men.

89. But if children are not to be born, to what end is the lust of the work of the flesh? Perhaps to an eternal fie on you. How much more sensibly the philosophers and pagans speak of this, that such work is not ordered to or for the sake of lust or heat, but again the lust is ordered to and for the sake of the work, so that thereby the animals are stimulated to increase and maintain nature, which otherwise would perish without such work.

90 And why do we not consider the unreasonable animals blessed, as the stags and boars in heat, and dogs and foxes when they baptize or ram, as having already the pleasure in this, so Mahmet seeks there in that eternal life?

2) "not" is missing in the Wittenberger.

3) Marginal gloss Such art shall teach whoever rejects the Bible.

1) Marginal gloss: O a strong sweat it must be.

Or what is needed here on earth, or what is lacking, that we are not blessed with equal women in this life, if we can eat and drink to the utmost (as we Germans do), or take many wives (as the Turks do)?

91. Also, if such beautiful pleasure is eternal life, why do they themselves praise all those who abstain from such pleasure with them (the Saracens)? For they also have some monks and clergymen who live chastely, of whom they think much.

92 But what shall I talk sharply with sour unreasonable people? I will continue to talk roughly with them. If there is eternal joy in such carnal lust, what do the souls of the saints who have died do? For they do not eat or drink, nor do they indulge in carnal pleasures, because the body lies rotten.

(93) And whereof are the angels blessed and merry, which neither eat nor drink, neither have they wives?

(94) Further, if eternal blessedness is that a man may have many wives, and without number concubines, where shall the wives be blessed and happy, if they also shall not have many husbands according to the free pleasure of the flesh? Again, how can a man be happy if his wife is to have many husbands? From this it must follow that either the man will be unhappy if his wife wants to have many men beside him; or the woman will be unhappy if she alone wants to have one man, but the man wants to have many women beside her; and yet both should be happy, according to the lust of the flesh, as Mahmet teaches.

95 This is enough to say how unreasonable, shameful and sinful the law of Mahomet is in this play. Although it contains many more foolish and unreasonable things than that God swears by the faithful city, by the garden of figs and the garden of oil, as he clearly says in the chapter Eltim (that is, fig). So all reason teaches that all who swear swear by that which they hold higher than themselves, rather than by a higher witness to confirm their word, of which [the Epistle to the] Hebrews also says that since GOD had nothing greater by which to swear, He swore by Himself [Heb. 6:13].

Item, that he forbids wine for the sake of drunkenness, as he says in many places, since wine is a good creature of God, and the abuse of the good creature is to be condemned. But perhaps he suspected his Saracens that they could not drink wine moderately, so he had to forbid it.

Chapter IX.

From public gross lies of the Alkoran.

He himself, 1) Mahmet, in the chapter of Jonah says: Who teaches the truth? He answers: God teaches the truth, and is the truth, one should follow. And again: It is not proper to speak anything in the divine law without God. Now it is well known that lies and falsehood must be spoken without God. For St. Augustine says: "If a lie were found in the Gospel, the whole Gospel would be suspect and nothing. For God cannot lie.

Now it is true that in the Alkoran there is much that is written in the Gospel, Moses and the prophets, but Mahomet adds so many public lies from his own head that his book is suspect and false and must be attributed to him who is a liar and the father of lies [John 8:44].

I will summarize his lies in the Alkoran in ten parts. First, he lies shamefully about himself, then about the Christians, the Jews, the apostles, the patriarchs, the devils, the angels, the Virgin Mary, Christ, and God.

(100) Of himself he thus teaches that he is the end, seal and silence (or cessation) of all prophets, and that he gives the order to kill all those who claim to be prophets after him. Against this not only the Jews and Christians say (as God's hand is not shortened by Mahomet) that many of them are prophets after Mahmet, or have had the spirit of prophecy, but also they themselves accepted a prophet in Babylon called Solem (that is, leader), whom the Tatars slew, and with him not a small number of the Saracens. Further, he leaches from himself, and exalts himself as from the mouth of God: If all spirits or angels and all men would do together, they would not be able to make such an Alkoran as he is. This he may understand as he pleases, that it is not possible without God's doom or without God's help, it is a blasphemous lie.

(101) He denies that Christians give God a companion; this is a blatant lie, for Christians throughout the world say that God is one and indivisible, indeed that nothing is more united than the Godhead or divine essence.

102 Further, in the chapter Telteumpe (that is, repentance), he denies that Christians consider their bishops, pastors and monks to be God; this is a public lie; although Mahmet speaks such things.

1) Marginal gloss: Pro se dicit, ut sibi credatur.

out of ignorance of languages. For the Christians in Persia and all the 1) Oriental countries call their bishops, pastors, monks or clergymen Rampan (that is, master or overlord), but in Arabic Rampa is God's name and means Lord, so that it means God alone; just as with us God is called HErre, and when one speaks of God, it is God's name alone; otherwise men are also called Herre; therefore in this Mahmet, as an enemy, obliges himself with lies to us Christians.

He further denies that the Christians make Mariam a goddess: for in the chapter Elmaide (that is, table) he introduces Christ as apologizing before God for not having taught the world that his mother was a goddess. The Christians do not say that Mary is God or Goddess, but the most pure feminine image. For the Gospel does not call her a goddess, but a feminine image. Whoever says otherwise about the Christians is lying as a Mahmet and a devil.

In the same chapter he speaks of Christians and Jews: they cannot be God's children or dear friends, for they must suffer much, like sinners. This is also wrong, for the Scripture often says: God's saints must suffer much, even death. And where are the holy friends of God, the Saracens, who have had to suffer many a distemper from the Tatters?

(105) From the Jews he teaches, for in the chapter Telteumpe (Repentance) Mahmet says that the Jews make Eleazar a god and teach him: He is the son of God. This is a public lie, for the Jews do not make a man God, nor call him God's son. Further, in the chapter Elnasa (Women), he teaches that the Jews should say: they have killed Jesus Christ, the son of Mary, the apostle of God. So the Jews say Ficht, because they do not consider JEsu as Christ nor as God's apostle, but as an evil man, whom they have killed for blasphemy.

In the chapter Abraham (whom they call Moses' father) he denies that the apostles said to Christ that they were Saracens and successors of the apostle Mahmet. This is a public lie. For the apostles and Christ were over six hundred years before Mahmet, and Mahmet came forth in the time of Heraclius, who began to reign in the year Domini six hundred and twelve, and is now seven hundred years that Mahmet has been. Now it is more than a thousand and two hundred years since Christ was born. How then can the apostles be Saracens? for he himself says in the chapter Elcamnar that it was commanded him by God that he should be the be the first Saracen. If he is the first Saracen, he denies that the apostles were Saracens; if they were Saracens, he denies that he is the first Saracen.

Of the patriarchs he teaches the same, that Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their children were Saracens, as he puts it in many places in the Alkoran. He also says of Noah that he was a Saracen. Yes, he says that the flood came upon the earth because he preached to the people that they should become Saracens, and they did not want to. The lie is as obvious as the previous one. How can Noah be a Saracen who has been over two thousand and six hundred years before Mahmet, when Mahmet wants to be the first Saracen?

(108) The Saracens also lie, saying that God promised Mahmet that no one would enter Paradise before him. Then God took him and brought him to Paradise, where he saw many men and women and said, "Lord, what is this? And God said unto him, Marvel not; these are all thy followers. Now it is not possible to be Mahmet's successor John through the Alkoran; but he is not revealed before Mahmet, as it is written in many places inside, and especially in the front. But such a gross lie must not cause much embarrassment to him who has a little sense.

He lies about the devils, for he writes a special chapter about them in the Alkoran, and there he freely says that a great number of devils were glad when they heard about the Alkoran, and they confessed that they might be saved by it, and they also called themselves Saracenes, and so they were saved. How gross this lie is, must not be proved.

(110) Of the angels, he denies that they all worshipped Adam, except the devil. Item, he denies when he says that when he came to God with the angel, he saw an angel a thousand times greater than the world, who wept for his sin, and Mahmet obtained mercy for him through his prayer. And many other great 2) lies he tells, of which we will hereafter say in his false face.

Item, he holds that the angels have a tangible body; for in chapter Sad he says: The angels are made of fire, men of earth. In other places he says that they are of great space, as will follow.

In the chapter Abraham he publicly says that she is Abraham's daughter.

1) "all" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) Thus the Wittenbergers. Jenaer: larger.

Aram 1) was the father of Moses and Aaron. And in the chapter Mar Jem, that is, Mary, 2) it says that Mary, the mother of Christ, was Aaron's sister. It is true that Moses and Aaron had a sister called Mary, and all three were children of one father, Aram, as 2 Mos. 2, 4. 7. says. But between that Mary and this Mary, the mother of Jesus Christ, are more than a thousand five hundred years, and that Mary died in the wilderness when Moses brought the children of Israel out of Egypt.

Of Christ, he therefore denied that Christ had never said of himself that he was God and the Son of God, but apologized to God that he had not taught this to the world. This is a public lie, because John 14:1 says: "If you believe in God, you also believe in me"; and John 5:18, when he called himself the Son of God, the Jews wanted to stone him and said: "He makes himself like God"; and there are many sayings in John when he calls himself like God. If then Mahomet would have believed his own words, when he said that one should take the gospel as a witness to his alchemist (as said above), then he would have to punish his own lying mouth, that he says that Christ did not call himself the Son of God, or that he praised himself like God; or he would have to lie in that he takes the gospel as a witness to his alchemist.

He further says that Christ was not crucified nor did he die, but God would let him die at the end of the world 2c. If Mahmet thinks the gospel is right (as he boasts), why does he deny the gospel? If he thinks it is wrong, why does he praise it? For it is proved above that Mahomet lies, saying that the gospel is counterfeit in all the world. And much more shameful lies he tells about Christ against the gospel, which he praises so highly.

From God, therefore, he surely denies the gospel, vowed by him as the truth, that it is impossible for God to have a son, for he has no wife; and this he always proclaims, as if it were a solid, delicious reason. But such wisdom is just as if I said, "God cannot live, for He neither eats nor drinks, neither poops nor pees, nor snorts nor coughs. Christians know well how God can have a son, and there is no need for Mahmet to teach us how God must first be a man who is a woman.

A man who has a cow to beget a son, or a farmer who has a cow to beget a calf. How is the Mahmet drowned in the flesh of the woman, in all his thoughts, words, and deeds; he can neither speak nor do anything before such a heat; it must all be flesh, flesh, flesh.

And why does Mahmet call Christ the Son of Mary, the Word of God, the Spirit of God? If he is an oral word of God, as the word of all prophets is called the word of God, then he has not so highly praised Christ, whom he exalts above all men; for then he would also have to be the word of Mahmet, as of the apostle of God. And for the sake of such a verbal word, God should not speak as two (as is spoken through and through in the Alkoran): We, we; for it is not that a speaker would call himself and his word: we. But if he considers Christ to be an eternal Word, who has always been with God, why does he deny that he is God or the Son of God, born without a woman? because Word or Spirit cannot be born of women.

In the chapter Elminim he thus teaches: 3) If God had a son, the world would be in great danger of becoming divided. For he thinks that God is nothing higher than a man, whom the son may disobey. Although it is a miracle that he does not also indicate here the women's danger, that they might become disunited for the sake of a whore (like bad boys), as he was disunited with Zeith, his steward, for the sake of his wife, ut supra.

118) Mahmet teaches in the chapter Elezar that God and the angels pray for Mahmet and for the Saracen 2c. I will not say anything about the angels now. Dear, when and where, or how does God pray for them? Or whom does he ask for them? Does he ask the angels, or the people, or himself, or the devils? And if everything else would be possible, then he could not ask himself, because Mahmet penetrates, it is nothing, but a single God.

He also tells many other lies and impossible things. As in the chapter Elasiar, where he speaks as if from the mouth of God, 4) if we were to send this Alkoran to a mountain, you should see how he would be destroyed by great fear and trembling before God. Thus we have heard above how he lied 5) about the moon being divided, and many more lies that lead to

1) Should be "Amram" according to Num. 26, 59.

2) Above in § 46 the chapter "Maria" is called "Martil"

3) Marginal gloss: Poeticum est, ut de Jove et Saturno, de Sole, et Phaethonte.

4) Marginal gloss: Vult suos terreri.

5) Marginal gloss: Ei. Pfui dich, Teufel.

much are to tell, that no reasonable man can believe, his Alkoran is from GOD.

120 There are still many more unrhymed Narrentheiding, which are taken for certain truth in the Saracen, than glosses or commentary on the Alcoran, and are clearly written in the Commentary Nähmet, of which we (who are very many) want to tell a little.

One thing is: that the sky is made of smoke, the smoke of the mist of the sea, the sea of a mountain,' which is called Caph, which surrounds the whole world and carries the sky. Says: The sun and the moon were equal in size, and there was no difference between day and night; but when Gabriel flew once, he touched the moon with his wing, therefore it became darker, 122, Item, he says: the wild sow was born from the elephant's mud, and the mouse from a pig's mud, the cat from the lion's forehead. They interpret this as follows: 1) When Noah was in the ark with his children and animals, when they went into the secret chamber, the ark would sink, especially when the elephant was there. Then Noah was afraid, and asked God; who answered, "Go therefore and worship before his backside, even to the hole where the mud goes out. When he did so, the muck came out with a very large pig, which now rooted in the muck, as is its kind. A mouse grew out of it and began to gnaw at the boards of the ark, and they were terrified. And Noah asked God, who told him to strike the lion on the forehead; then a weasel (or cat) came out of his nose and ate the mouse. And this shall be the cause why they must not eat swine's flesh.

In the same chapter he says that at the end of the world God will kill all creatures, including angels and archangels. Angels and archangels, and will leave nothing alive without God alone, and death, which is an angel, called Adriel. Then God will command Daniel to kill himself. When this is done, God will call out with a loud voice and say, "Where are the rulers and lords of the world? And then everything will be resurrected.

Item, Mahmet wrote a book of twelve thousand wonderful words. 2) When some wondered and asked if they were all true, he answered: 3) Only three thousand were true, but the others were all lies. And if now in this

1) Marginal gloss: O Satan, O Satan, you shall pay. 2) Marginal gloss: Vsl things.

3) Marginal gloss: Vide securitatem Satanae et fiduciam mentiendi.

The Saracens say that they find something false in the book: Oh, Mahmet 4) himself said that not everything is true; and this piece is one of them, but the other remains true. Methinks they do the same with the Alkoran. For although 5) many lies are found in it, but because there are also some true sayings in it, they consider it to be God's word.

But we Christians know that God neither lies nor can lie. And as St. Augustine says: "Where a few lies are found in the Gospel, it would be fair to reject it as useless gibberish and not a Gospel, Quia commune dictum est: Fidei non potest Msuro sudesse, Lying cannot make blessed, but condemns. Therefore, faith cannot stand on any lie.

And I consider it certain that the reasonable and learned among the Saracens believe nothing of the Alcoran, but must despise such fictitious teachings among themselves. And that this is so is indicated by the fact that they do not want to debate publicly with other scholars, as I have experienced myself, and do not allow the Alcoran to be brought out publicly. And they are disgusted beyond all measure when it is read by others, and they do not want it to be interpreted into another language.

127. We Christians, however, who know and take comfort in the truth that abides forever and shuns no light, gladly talk with others about the Gospel, and are glad that others also read it, do not throw it under a bushel, but put it on the lampstand, that [it] may shine freely to all the world, and wish that it may be interpreted into all languages, and are not ashamed to publicly confess and praise the suffering of Christ (which the Mahomet mocks and ridicules with the Saracens and pagans) with writings and words.

The X. Chapter.

That Mahmet's law is murderous, tyrannical, and furious.

This proves that the Alkoran cannot be God's law. For it is, to speak briefly, a law of death and rage. For it not only leads to eternal death, but also forces people to believe what Mahmet says through bodily death. Although in the chapter Em-.

4) Marginal gloss: cuckoo his name.

5) Marginal gloss: Alkoran lies, and yet is supposed to be God's word, so God must be Mahmet's liar.

6) "mit andern" is missing in the Wittenberg.

pacara 1) (that is, cow) speaks: Compulsion is not in God's law. Because it is already separated right and wrong. But where can be greater compulsion than through murder? Therefore, the law cannot be from God that compels people.

The Saracens call it with a special high name Elesalem, a wholesome law of God. Yes, rather, as said, a murderous and furious law. But such was the way of such a law and master, that the people had to consent to eternal death through love of life and fear of the sword. The Christians, however, in turn, despise bodily death and life and attain eternal life.

For when Mahomet, or rather his master the devil, saw that his law was contrary to God's law in the New Testament, and also contrary to himself, and had no reason nor miraculous sign, and was full of tangible lies, he could well think that many would persuade and contradict him. Therefore he gave him his own right instrument, the sword, to kill. And therefore he set a commandment in his Alkoran, that all those should be put to death who oppose this law and do not believe. Therefore he does not speak in one chapter, but throughout the whole book as a common commandment: Kill, kill.

But Christ teaches us Christians to love our enemies, to pray for those who persecute us, and to do good to those who offend us [Matt. 5:44]. St. Augustine says: "A man may be forced to confess with his mouth that he believes, but that his heart should be forced to believe is not possible.

132 So we read that Mahmet brought his cousin, his father's brother, who said, "How, my dear cousin, my brother's son, will I kill you if I do not? Mahmet answered, O cousin, I will kill thee. And he said, Can it be no other way? Not otherwise, said Mahmet. Then said his cousin, Well, I will follow thee with the tongue only, and not with the heart, for fear of the sword. And Omar, the son of Catempadi, forced, said: Lord, you know that I will become a Saracen only for fear of death. So the son of Empiasca also became a Saracen out of fear of the sword, sending letters to Mecca (which a woman brought hidden in her hair), warning them in the city of the future of Mahmet, that they should beware of the violence of Mahmet's teaching.

133 And here it is to be noted that there are four kinds who hold Mahmet's error. The first ones, who come in through the fear of the sword (such as

The others, deceived by the devil, believe that such lies are the truth. The others, deceived by the devil, believe that such lies are the truth. The third, who do not want to leave the faith of their ancestors, and say that they believe as their ancestors believed. And these are the ones who, having been idolatrous before, respect Mahomet's cult better than the previous idolatry.

(134) The fourth, who for the sake of the free life, and that they may have many wives, and other indulgences, prefer this temporal impurity to the eternal joy of that life. Those who are called wise and learned among them do not believe that their law is right and good, but the free pleasure of this life suppresses reason, just as among us Christians many learned and wise people do not keep the gospel, even though they believe it is right and good; nor do they prefer to lead an Alkoran life, regardless of the fact that they believe there is no truth in it.

And this is the sign in both, that some Saracens become Christians, and some Christians become Saracens. Although a Christian would not become a Saracen in his end, but in his life. But a Saracen would rather become a Christian in his end than in his life. And so both would rather die Christians than Saracens, if they were not forced otherwise by force.

Now there are three signs that this law is a murderous and furious law, about which it is said that he often says, "Kill, kill. The first that Mahmet said: his law would remain as long as they would remain strong with weapons and violence. But as Chrysostom says: the truth is of the kind, the harder it is stormed, the stronger it becomes. Again, the lie, if it is assisted by equally great power, yet it falls from itself. Thus, the Gospel of the Christians, persecuted for about three hundred years, has grown the most, both in the number of believers and in miraculous clarity.

The other sign is, that when they come together, that their preacher should teach them the law of the Saracens, and deliver the word, he putteth forth a sword, and holdeth it bare in his hand while he preacheth, or putteth it in a high visible place for a terror. On the other hand, when Christians preach, they do not lift up the sword, but the cross, and do not show a murderous sign, but a friendly one, as men sent by Christ in the midst of wolves, like sheep.

2) Marginal gloss: Sicut apud nos.

1) In the Jenaer probably wrong: "Emparaca"; in § 49 it was called: "Inpakara".

The third sign that it is a murderous law is that among the Saracens are raised Assessinii, 1) future murderers. To these they promise eternal life for murdering, God grant that they murder or are murdered over it, and send them out into the whole world to cunningly strangle the worldly lords. These Assassinii have castles and houses on Mount Liltum, and are under the Sultan of Babylon, who is the head of the Saracens. And although these Assessinii are true Saracens and live according to the laws and customs of the Saracens, they are not called Saracens, but Ishmaelites, as the tribe and root of the Saracens, and the most distinguished defenders and upholders of the Mahmetic Law. For they are specially nourished and educated to murder. Of which vice not only the Christians, but also the Tatters are afraid, who say that they have no law without the natural right. 2) The Saracens are the most noble defenders of the Mahmetic Law. Thus it is certain that the Saracen is a murderous and furious law, not of God, but of the devil.

Chapter XI.

That the Alkoran is not God's law, because it is disorderly.

What is from God is well ordered, Romans 13:2, which can be seen in both nature and holy scripture. And it is certain among Christians and Saracens that Moses' Law, Prophets and Gospel are from God. Moses keeps a very fine order, starts from the creation of the world, and goes through the whole books orderly according to time and history. The prophets do the same and write in order, under which king, and also say a given thing in order. So also the gospel goes in the finest order, it begins with Christ, how he was conceived and born under Augustus, Herod, and who ruled at that time. Then how he lived, preached, did miracles, then suffered, died, and rose again 2c.

But in the Alkoran there is no order at all, there is no account of the time or years, no person of the kings or rulers of the same time, also no orderly speech of the things. For the first chapter, which is the title of the book, begins with prayer and praise to God. And after such a short prayer he starts the book, and the same is the other chapter of the red heifer, of which is written in the fourth book of Moses Cap. 19, 2. The third ca-

1) Randglosse: How? if that were the Zigeunex or Tattern.
2) Walch had resolved this with "Thättern".

The first chapter is about the house of Abraham, whom he calls the father of Moses. And he says much about Christ, saying that the Virgin Mary was the sister of Moses and Aaron. After this the fourth chapter is about women. From then on, in the other chapters, he chops it up so messily that no one can say why this is in front, that is behind, or this is in the middle.

Thus he also speaks of no matter properly, but falls from one to the other, unk mixes one into the other as a madman or who would always be elsewhere, much less remains ev on the way, if he is to prove or conclude something in turn, but sets a saying, on which he introduces, that nothing rhymes with it. As, since he always therefore washes, God is high and good, and Alkoran is a law of salvation, and God is God, and that there is no God except God, and Mahmet is a true prophet. Dear one, how does it hang together that Mahmet is a prophet, God's servant, and God is God?

In the chapter Elmaida (that is, table) he says: God has given us the house of Elaram (that is, calling), which is the house of the table, and the fast moon of the Saracens. And this is so that you may know that GOD knows all things that are in heaven and on earth, and knows all things that come to pass. But who is so great as to doubt that God knows all things? And if anyone doubted it, how does it rhyme that the Saracen's table and paschal moon make anyone know how God knows all things?

And he always speaks as if he were in a dream, and especially at the end of the book, when he still lacks words. As in the chapter Elkaphetim (that is, heretics) he says: "O cursed ones, I do not worship what you worship, and you do not worship what I worship. 3) To you be your law, to me be my law. 4) What heretic or idolater could not speak thus? What is the use of investigating the truth?

I have not found a single disputation in the whole book that would be proper, but the words and rhymes are fine. For the whole book is made in rhyme or poetry, of which the Saracens boast very much. And this is to prove that Mahmet is a true prophet. For an unlearned layman could not speak so rhyming 5). But above we have proved that God does not use poetry or rhyme to speak with men or through prophets.

3) In both the Wittenberg and Jena editions, the phrase is duplicated: "I pray - anbete".

4) Marginal gloss: What is that said?

5) i.e. chivalrous.

The XII. Chapter.

That the Alkoran is not God's law, for it is unjust and evil.

That the Alkoran is an evil and unjust law is evident from it. For in the chapter Elcaph, and in the chapter Elgem, that is, the devils, it is thus written that it pleases the devils and the devils have pleasure in it. The devils, however, are evil, perverse spirits, to whom nothing can please unless it is evil and perverse. The alcoran is also the cause of all evil, such as murder, robbery, perjury and the like. For he not only indulges in such things, but also commits them, especially murder, as was said above.

(146) And it does not help if someone says that he commanded to kill the unbelievers and not the believers. For thus he says: The believer shall not kill a believer. Yet he says to kill the unbelievers if they do not pay tribute. So I hear that not giving tribute is cause enough to kill. Why is it not rather the cause that they do not believe?

147] In many places he says that there is no greater sin than to ascribe lies to God. Now the Alcoran does the same, and ascribes many more lies to God than those told in the 9th chapter above. But we could indicate many other such lies, as in the chapter Elemphaal (that means profit or benefit) he says: There are several profits of God and the apostle, and one should give the fifth part of the profit to God.

Tell me, has God become so mischievous that he permits robbery, that he may take the fifth part? or is he so poor that he cannot feed his poor and widows, orphans and strangers (of which he speaks there), so that he permits robbery? If he makes such a profit, indeed, Mahomet makes God his companion to do evil, who cannot have a companion to do good.

(149) And though the Alkoran at times forbids robbery, perjury, and other evil, yet such a prohibition is more like an allowance. For he says: You shall not do evil, for it is not pleasing to God; but if you do it, he is merciful and gracious, and will gladly forgive you. But from robbery in particular he gives nothing everywhere, that one should give back. Nor is it their way, but it is enough for a Saracen to say at its end: There is 1) no God but God, and Mahmet is God's apostle; as is said above.

150 He speaks freely of perjury in the chapter Elmin: God will not reckon perjury to you, but rather that you do not call upon him; as if he should say: Perjury does not deserve guilt, but only punishment. For afterwards he says: For such a transgression it is enough to feed ten poor people, or to clothe so many, or to release a prisoner; whoever is able to do this truly shall fast three times.

From this all evil must follow, for they are not afraid to rob, cheat, swear falsely and break faith, even though Christians are commanded to believe even enemies and unbelievers.

But they, the Saracens, have an oath that they do not easily break, which we will see hereafter. Mahmet speaks of himself in the chapter Elmetare that God had dispensed with him or allowed him not to keep what he had sworn legally and honestly. For example, he no longer wanted to lie with the Jacobite woman, whose name was Mary, and was perjured about it, and Michael and Gabriel had to be witnesses to this permission, as he denied. Should such a law of God be, since so much evil, indeed all evil, comes from here, and ascribes such great poisonous lies to God?

153. Above these lies he gives God more, not only lies, but also foolish lies; for he says: God has excused Himself that He did not send an angel, but the man Mahmet. And could have sent an angel, but they could not have walked safely through the world. 2) How? Could Mahmet have walked through the world more safely than the angels? Or could God not protect them? Or, if he wanted to understand pious peaceful people through angels, it is certain that pious peaceful people walk through the world more safely than the wicked.

154] Item, he is always pointing out how God says that He did not make the world as a joke. 3) But who is so foolish as to think that God has made the world his joke?

Item, the Mahmet, a man and Saracen in daily fornication, introduces in Cap. Elinir Elazapi, 4) as God says thus: You shall not enter anyone's house uninvited or uncalled. Then God says: When you have gone in and eaten, come out, and do not stand and preach to the doorkeepers, for it is displeasing.

2) Marginal gloss: Forte quia non haberent gladium, sicut Mahmet.

3) Marginal gloss: Ut nostri: He did not make the sky for the geese.

4) Wittenberger: Elazapir.

1) Wittenberger: be.

lich and ashamed to preach there. 1) But God is not ashamed to preach the truth.

In sum, what he wanted to do or had done, he put it to God, 2) as if He had commanded him to do it. From this came all evil, as if God had commanded it in his law, murder, rob, commit adultery, swear falsely, commit incest with the wife of the time, break the oath for the sake of Mary, the Jacobite, and keep faith with no one. So it is no wonder that the devils are pleased with this law,

Chapter XIII.

Who is the master of this law, and how uncertain the alcoran is.

157 The wisest among them had certainly for it, and is also convinced with a strong reason, that the first master of the 3) Alkoran was not a man, but the devil, who out of old envy, by God's doom for the sake of man's sin, publicly and violently started such an abomination of the end-Christ. For when he saw that he could no longer defend the multitude of idolatry, nor resist the gospel and holy scriptures that were spread throughout the world, he thought to deceive the world with a fictitious faith, which would be like a middle way between Moses and the gospel,

For this he needed a man, yes, a devil, named Mahmet, who was an idolatrous man and poor, yet arrogant, and famous in the black arts; he would much rather have taken a better name than a man, if he had been allowed to, just as he would much rather have taken another animal than the serpent to deceive man, under which his wickedness would have been more beautifully hidden. But the divine wisdom did not want to allow it otherwise, than that he would take such an animal, and now also attack the world through such a man, so that the world could easily understand what the law would be, which would be given through such a master.

159 When Heraclius the Persian had defeated King Cosroe, and had brought the holy cross to Jerusalem with great triumph, Anno six hundred and twenty after the birth of Christ, and Anno fifteen Heraclii 2c.

1) Marginal gloss: Hic nescio, quid dicat translator.

2) Marginal gloss: Sic facile est, esse prophetam etiam porcis.

3) Wittenberg and Jena: the.

4) of a better name man" - the figure of a man of a better kind.

He was an Arab who had become rich through a widow he had married. After that, he became a captain among the highwaymen, and came into such high office that he intended to become king in Arabia. 5) But because he was of low estate and reputation, they did not accept him. Then he pretended to be a prophet, and after he had the falling sickness or the falling plague, and always fell down, so that no one would believe that he had such a plague, he said, An angel had spoken to him. And after that he said some sayings, which he heard (as he said) like a bell ringing in his ears.

160 But when he was an unlearned layman, the devil gave him right companions, some apostate Jews, and some lost Christians, the heretics. For a Jacobite named Baira attached himself to him, who stayed with Mahmet all his life, and it is said that after his death Mahmet did nothing. But of the Jews Phinees and Audia named Salon, then Audala 6) and Selem, they became Saracens, and some Nestorians, who agree very much with the Saracens and say that God was not born of Mary, but the man Jesus Christ.

And at that time Mahmet made something as a law by his fellows, took something from the Old Testament, something from the New Testament. But the people did not have the Alkoran at that time. For one reads in their histories thus that Mahmet spoke: The Alkoran came down to me above with seven men; what now is enough, that is enough. These men were Naphe, Eon, Omar, Omra, Eleesar, Asir, the son of Cethir and the son of Amer. Then we said to them, Let it be read before Mahomet. And they all said, Nay; but before the seven elders, and afterward before Mahmet.

It is certain that the seven elders did not agree with those, the previous elders, according to the words of the book, which they now keep. This is clear from the fact that the words of the first part are repugnant to the words of the second part. For after the death of Mahmet no one understood Alkoran except Audala the son of Mesetud, and Zeith the son of Tampeth, and Ocanan the son of Ophin, and the son of Oenpe, and the son of Tap. But of Alete the son of Abitale, some said he understood one part, but some said no.

But each of them made his own Alcoran, quite unlike the other Alcorans. And they were also at odds all their lives, and

5) Marginal gloss: Münster.

6) Probably: Abdallah. Cf. § 60.

None of them worshiped the other's Alkoran. After her death, the people went astray and were divided in the Alkoran until the time of Mermpan son of Elecen, who gave them the Alkoran they have now and burned all the other Alkorans. Also the seven reeves of the cities contradicted him that he had not used proper and clear language after their kind.

164 In their histories it is also said that the chapter on divorce was longer than the chapter on Bovis, which at first had two hundred and thirty sayings, and now has no more than twelve. The others say that the chapter "Ox" had a thousand sayings, but now has eighty-seven. They also say of a mighty one, named Elgas, that he had eighty-five sayings from the Alkoran, and had added so many others of a different meaning.

How is it true, then, that they say of the Alkoran that God should have said: We have sent down the admonition (Alkoran) and also want to receive it?

Some also say that Mahmet died of poisoning, and at that time the people had no Alkoran. But when Empeumpecer took the reign, he ordered that everyone should read together what he could. And so he provided the alcoran that they now have, and burned the others.

But in the chapter Elaram it says of the Alkoran that no one understands its interpretation except God alone, and he who has a high understanding; we believe him, for it is all from God. And of course it is true that in this book there is so much disorder and incorrectness (as told above) that it teaches nothing, but is overwhelmed with folly and lies. So they finally agreed that this is the Alkoran they have now, and say that God revealed it to Mahmet, who wrote it from the mouth of God.

168 Elphacae, that is, the great teachers and interpreters, have never been united in their interpretation, nor will they ever be. So not only are those who live in the morning at odds with those who live in the evening, but also those who live in the morning are divided among themselves, and those who live in the evening are divided among themselves; even in the same school there are disgusting sects, so that one condemns the other; some follow Mahmet, and he is the most, some follow Hali, who is the least and the best, and say: Mahmet has taken by sacrilegious force what Hali has done.

169. some scholars stood up in the philosophia against both sects, began to read Aristotle and Plato, and left all of them.

Sects of the Saracens together with the Alkoran. When Caliphas of Babylon noticed this, he built schools, Academiam and Stantzeriam, which are very delicious, and changed their lessons into the Alkoran, and decreed that all who came from the countries to Babylon to learn the Alkoran should have free lodging and food, and commanded that those Saracens who studied in the Alkoran should not study in the Philosophia. Therefore, they consider that those who study in the Philosophia are not good Saracens, because they despise the Alkoran, for reasons indicated above in the eighth and ninth chapters.

Chapter XIV.

Of a peculiar shameful big lie and image.

The Mahomet sets a fictitious face, which is supposed to be an interpretation of a part of the Woran. He speaks in the chapter "of the children of Israel": Praise be to him, who let his servant travel in one night from the house of prayer Elaram, that is, from the house of Mekka to the most femal house of prayer, which is the holy house of Jerusalem, which we bless 2c. The interpretation of this saying is this: one day Mahmet said his morning prayer in the Psalms, and when he had finished it, he said to the people: O people, notice that yesterday, as I was leaving you, Gabriel came to me after the vesper prayer and said: O Mahmet! God has told you to visit him. I said: Where shall I visit him? Gabriel said, "In the place where he is. And he brought me a beast greater than an ass, and less than a dun horse, whose name was Elmparac,

And he said unto me, Get thee up, and ride unto the holy house. And when I would have sat up, the beast fled. And he said, Stand still, for it is Mahmet that shall sit out of thee. And the beast said, Am I sent for him? Gabriel answered, "Yes. The beast said: I will not let him sit out, but he shall first ask God for me. And I asked my God for the beast, and sat on it, and it went very softly under me, and it set its foot as far as it could see, to the end of heaven, and so I came to the holy house, nearer than in a moment.

And Gabriel was with me, and brought me to the rock of the house of the holy Jerusalem, and said unto me, Descend, for from this rock thou must go up to heaven. So I got down. And Gabriel bound the beast Elmparac to the rock with a girdle and carried me on his shoulders up to the rock.

the sky. When we came to heaven, Gabriel knocked at the door. Then he said: Who are you? He answered: I am Gabriel. And again he said, Who is with thee? He answered, Mahmet. And the porter said, Art thou sent for his sake? Gabriel said, Yes. Then he opened the door for us. Then I saw a great multitude of angels, and I bowed my knees twice, and prayed for them.

Then Gabriel took me and led me to the other heaven. But the two heavens were as far apart as a road that could be traveled in five hundred years. And when he knocked, the answer was the same as before. And so on to the seventh heaven. In the same heaven (as he writes) he saw a great multitude of angels; the size of every angel was many thousand times greater than the world is. Each one had seven hundred thousand heads. Every head had seven hundred thousand mouths. Every mouth had seven hundred thousand tongues. And every tongue praised GOD with seven hundred thousand tongues. 1) And he saw one of the angels weeping, and asked why he wept? And he answered, that he had sinned: and he prayed for him. Then he said, Gabriel commanded me to another angel, and the same to another, and so on, until I came and stood before God and His judgment seat. Then God touched me with His hand between my shoulders so hard that the coldness of His hand went through the marrow of my backbone. And God said to me, "I have put prayer on you and your people.

When I came down again to the fourth heaven, Moses advised me to go up again and relieve the people, 2) because they could not bear so much praying. And in the first coming again I attained from ten to the fourth part. And in the fourth coming I attained to the seventh part. And at last the number of the prayers was so few that almost little remained. But when Moses said that they could not yet bear so much, I was ashamed that I had gone up so often. And would go up no more, but came again to Elmparac, and rode down again and again unto the house of Mecca. And all this happened closer than in the tenth part of the night.

(This face we have left much more outside, because we have told).

When Mahmet told all the people, a thousand people fell away from his law.

And when they said, Dear, go up to heaven by day, that we may watch and see how the angels meet thee, he would not acknowledge his lies, but said, Praise be to God, I am nothing but a man, and yet an apostle.

In the chapter "Prophets," he says of those who sought miraculous signs from him and spoke to Mahomet in this way: Thou speakest many dreams and heapest up blasphemies, or speakest poetically, bring us at least one miraculous sign, as the former have done. He answered: "We (says God) have turned back cities before the unbelievers, do you think that they would believe? Why do they wait for miraculous signs? Then he answered, "Those who were before you did not believe in miracles, so you would not believe in miraculous signs without the sword.

177 Now listen, you Saracens who believe the Alkoran to be true, he himself, Mahmet, testifies that he has done no miraculous sign. And he is much more whom the sword has devoured than those who willingly followed him, as said above. And this shameful lie and false poem alone should be enough to embarrass all that Mahmet has said and done. For, as has often been said, the Holy Spirit made him lie so grossly that anyone could easily recognize his false poem. Now he says of himself unheard-of miracles; now he says that he has done no miracle; now he says that he is a man and a messenger; now he says that he is more than an angel and above the angels. And why did he need an ass or a beast to go from Mecca to Jerusalem, if he could go to the uttermost heaven without an ass? And how could he suffer such great splendor of the angels in heaven, saying [that] when an angel appeared to him, he fell to the earth every way, and lay, and foamed, and his hands and feet were bent? To this he does not say that he was raptured in such a vision, but went up with body and soul. And he says to the signs: God touched him between the shoulders with his hand, and [he] felt the cold through the marrow of his back.

Chapter XV.

Of six common questions in the Alkoran, against the Saracens. 3)

Let us hold six questions before the Saracens, to which, if they cannot answer them, they should recognize themselves and convert to the truth.

3) In the old editions: "is", which we, like Walch, have omitted.

1) Marginal gloss: Calculate how many languages an angel has.

2) Marginal gloss: He has grown weary of praying, so he wants to file away with lies.

179) The first: What does the Alkoran want with it, that he introduces God so often speaking as in many persons? For so he speaks in the chapter Elmpaceram, in God's person: We commanded the angels that they should worship Adam; and so henceforth he lets God speak through the whole book to the end, now as many persons, now as One Person, when it is certain among the Saracens, as well as among the Christians, that God is one, and has no companion nor equal. For they cannot say here that God speaks thus in his person and in the person of the angels. For he speaks this to the angels, or from the angels, when he says, "We have commanded the angels," and this speech of God is not from the angels, but from the angels, as the chapter Sad also testifies, that all the angels worshiped Adam, without the devil.

In many places in the Alkoran, he performs such a speech of God as spoken in many persons, in addition in such works in which the angels cannot have a part or fellowship with God, as in the creation of the world and the justification of the ungodly 2c. For in many places it is thus written: We have created heaven and earth, and all that is between them, 1) and we have not judged man in vain. And we sent the Son of Mary, and we gave him the Holy Ghost, and the gospel, and miraculous works, and such like. In which works the angels may not have part nor fellowship with God. For they themselves are created by God, and do not create heaven and earth with God. 2c.

Neither can the Saracens say that such speech is of God and of another being, which would be called wisdom and understanding, over the created understanding, through which God creates everything. For it is evident that what is apart from God is a creature, or being created by God. For the creature is not at the same time a being created by GOD, and with GOD a creator. Nor can it be said that God speaks in this way because of many of his attributes or names, except that he is called the eternal power, wisdom, justice, goodness, 2c., which the Arabs call Saphat. For all these are not peculiar and other beings apart from God, but the one divine Being Himself; indeed, no angel nor man may speak of himself as many, for the sake of such attributes, since they are not the Being Himself, but may be with and from.

182. it is true, it is found in one place in Moses, that God speaks in such a way, Gen. 1, 26: "Let us make man in our image", which the Jews interpret as meaning that God is talk with the angels. But this is against the holy scripture, which does not say that man was made in the image of angels, but in the image of God. As Moses himself interprets it soon after v. 27: "God created man in His image, in the image of God He created him." Therefore, this is a speech of the Father to the Son, or of the whole Trinity to itself; for God is one in essence, and triune in persons.

Thus Mahmet might well have said, from his own words, since God calls Himself We or Us, that there is One God and three Persons; but he makes a false sense under right words, as if three Persons must be three Gods. Therefore he says in the chapter Elnesan: "O company of the Book, be not lax in your law, and say nothing of God but the truth, that Christ is the Son of Mary, an apostle of God, and the Word of God, which He has put into them by the Holy Spirit. See, there he names the three, God, Word, Holy Spirit; but that he does not confess three gods for the sake of the three, he quickly adds: You shall not say that there are three Gods, for God is one God. Thus the Holy Spirit admonished him and drove him, so that he had to pronounce the highest article with words of our faith, and yet led the wrong mind into it. For we also say that God is one, and yet God's Word and Holy Spirit are with God, and not three gods.

The other question: The Alkoran always remembers the Holy Spirit and the Word of God. Does the Holy Spirit work, and who is the Word of God? For in the chapter Elpalceram God says: "We have given Jesus, the Son of Mary, to perform public miracles and signs, and have made him perfect through the Holy Spirit. And this is what he always proclaims throughout the whole chapter. And in the chapter Elmaide: Mary, we have poured into her the Holy Spirit; and in many places he speaks thus.

Here the Saracens cannot say that he is a creature, like an angel, or good spirit. For he (that is, God) speaks of One Holy Spirit. But the angels are many, all holy, and all God's spirits. Why then does he speak as of one special one and say: the holy and our spirit? Nor would it be a special praise that God should not have given Christ, whom the Alcoran praises very highly, more than an angel, or holy spirit, as a guardian. For that is what he does to all men, as the

2) "be" put by us instead of "is" after § 187, where the same citation recurs.

1) "is" is missing in the Wittenberger.

Alkoran says in the chapter Elntaide: 1) God makes His spirits angels and us apostles.

Furthermore, the angels cannot (yet no creature) sanctify a man, but it must be God who does both by and without means, and he alone can forgive sin, as the Alcoran says. Thus, such a spirit that does such works must be true God, just as he who speaks of such a spirit: We have given the Holy Spirit, and have poured in the Holy Spirit 2c. So then, if there must be one inseparable God, it follows that whoever gives the Spirit, and the Spirit so given, must be essentially One God, personally distinct. Thus Mahmet, though ignorant, must testify with words against himself to our faith's highest article, and does not understand what he says.

The third question: In the same way, we may also ask about the word of God; for in the chapter Abraham, the angels say to the holy Mary: O Mary! God has exalted you above all women. And soon after: O Mary! God proclaims to you, or His word proclaims to you. And in the chapter Elnesan he says: "Say nothing about God except the truth that Christ Jesus, the son of Mary, is an apostle of God, and is the Word of God, which He has placed in her through the Holy Spirit. So he confesses that Christ is the Word of God.

The question now arises: What is such a Word of God, whether it is a human, transient word, or an essential word? One cannot say that (it) is a human word, because it is supposed to be God's word; so also the human word was not put into Mary by the Holy Spirit, much less born from her.

The Gospel and the Alkoran also speak of a single word of God, which is not the voice of man. For the word of man, which is also called and is the word of God, is many, and by it was not heaven and earth created, nor was it born of Mary. And what special praise of Christ would that be, that he should be the Word of God, that he should preach the Word of God: when all the prophets preach the Word of God, and yet none is called the Word of God; Christ alone is called the Word of God in the Gospel and the Alkoran. But Mahmet wants to exalt Christ far above all prophets, because he is the Word of God.

190) But because 2) he speaks of the essential imperishable Word, it is evident that it must be

1) In the old editions "Elmaice", which is probably a misprint. Compare the note to § 209.

2) Thus the Wittenberg edition. The Jena one offers instead of: "Weil - redet" the words: "Will - reden".

be an eternal word and true God. For just as the word spoken from the mouth of corruptible men must be corruptible, so the word that proceeds from the eternal mouth of God, through which (as the Alcoran confesses) heaven and earth were created, must be eternal and incorruptible, and thus a true God. But since there cannot be only one God, it follows from this that God and His Word must be essentially One God, and yet personally distinct. And this is the word by which God spoke and made all things, John 1:1, 2, 3, as is also written in the Alkoran. So that the Mahmet here once again confesses with words, yes, with our words (however unwittingly) the high article of the holy Trinity in God.

When Mahmet hears that the Christians preach that God has a son, he could not think more highly than that without a wife there could be no son. Therefore, the coarse companion does not bring up any other reason than that God does not have a wife. And did not think that David in the Psalter, which he praises so highly, gives God many sons, you say Ps. 82, 6: "You are gods, and children of the Most High," and yet God has neither one nor many wives.

Even if it is impossible to have sons without a woman, it must be just as impossible for women to have sons without men. Why then does he believe that Mary would have a son without a husband? But he is too coarse to understand how God has a son. And yet he speaks the words, as he learned from the Arians, that Christ is God's word; however, like a jackdaw 3) learns the language of men, which it does not understand.

193 Notice that when he said that Christ is the Word of God, he adds that Christ is with God like Adam, to whom he said when he made him from the earth: Esto, be a man. How does this rhyme with the one where he says that God poured his Word and his Holy Spirit into Mary? and thus the Word was born from Mary.

194 But if he should be called the Word of God, because he was created like Adam, and it is said of him: Esto, be Christ the Son of Mary; then all creatures 4) must be called the Word of God, because it is said to all: Esto, be, or become. Thus Christ would not be the word by which all things were made, as he is confessed above; but he himself must also have been made by another word, like all creatures.

3) In the old editions: "Dale".

4) Thus taken over by us from the old edition of Walch instead of: "dem alle Creatur nach" rr.

The fourth question: Why does Mahomet praise so highly Moses, Job, David, and say: The Psalter is a noble book? But above all books he praises the gospel, because he confesses that truth and salvation are in it. It 1) asks (I say) why the Saracens do not read, nor have, nor teach such books, which the Mahmet praises and points to? For the Christians, when they heard such books praised by Christ, took them from the Jews, and interpreted them into all kinds of languages, and still hold them high, reading and preaching them in their churches.

For the Saracenes pretend out of their mahmet that the Jews have falsified the Old Testament, the Christians the New, and that nothing true has remained in the world, for as much as is in the Alkoran, this is proved above to be a lie. For this is against Alkoran himself, who directs his Saracenes to such books, saying: there is truth and salvation in the Gospel, and if they doubt in Alkoran, let them ask the Gospel; and is not that such great prophet should direct to false books.

But this is the reason why the Saracens do not read such books. For their scholars know that where the Saracens read such holy truthful books, they would easily find the lies of the Alkoran. That is why the Alcoran, out of the devil's malice, has protected himself so that his lies would not be revealed, and has built many defenses against it. The first, that he commanded them to kill all who speak against the Alcoran, as above in Cap. The other is that they shall not debate with people of other sects. The third, he forbids to believe all who are not of his sect, as in the chapter Abraham: You shall believe no one except those who follow our law. The fourth, that he separates himself from all and says: "My law to me, your law to you. If the Saracens wanted to follow Alkoran, because he praises Moses, David, Solomon and the Gospel so highly that truth and salvation are in it, they would do well. But now they remain condemned, even by their own Alkoran, who directs them to the right books, and yet they despise them.

The fifth question: Why does the Mahmet always indicate these words? Believe God and the apostle; obey God and the apostle; follow God and the apostle 2c.? For therefore it seems as if Mahmet wanted to make himself God's

1) So the old issues. The meaning is: you ask cheap 2c.

2) Wittenberger: is.

He always claims that there is one God and that he has no equal or companion. For that Christ says: If you believe in God, then believe also in him, he does this justly; for he is natural God, and equal to God from eternity. Otherwise, the prophets do not speak in such a way, 3) that they join or resemble God, and say: Listen to God and me, follow God and me.

The sixth question: Since the Alkoran says many and glorious things about Christ, but little and low things about Mahmet, why do the Saracens not prefer to follow Christ rather than Mahmet, and the Gospel rather than the Alkoran? And that both may seem the clearer, let us set black and white against each other and hear what the Alcoran says of both.

Of Christ, the Alcoran says that he was announced to his mother by an angel, sanctified by the Holy Spirit, and conceived by the power of God the Most High, not by natural power, and born of the most holy virgin Mary, who is the purest of all women. But of the Mahmet he says none, but that he is an orphan and wretched, and hired by God.

Further, the Alcoran says of Christ that he is God's word, therefore nothing was unconscious or uncertain to him. But Mahmet is an uncertain prophet. For he himself confesses that he does not know how he and his people will fare. For he speaks to his Saracens: I do not know whether I or you are right. 4) Therefore it is also said that he said of his father and mother, "I would like to know how they have lived, or how they are doing.

It is also said that he was bewitched by the Jews, namely, that the women stuck his waxen image in the face full of needles and threw them into a well. And it is commonly said that he was killed with poison, which he got because a Jewess let his vein run.

Item 203: Christ comes from Abraham and Isaac, to whom the promise of the blessing of the inheritance is given; but Mahomet comes from Ishmael, to whom the promise does not concern, but

3) Marginal gloss: Hoc est frigidulum. Nam 2 Paralip. 20, 20. dicit Josaphat: Credite Domino et prophetis ejus. Et Paulus: Imitatores mei estote, sicut ego Christi: [This reason is somewhat dull; for 2 Chron. 20:20. saith Jehoshaphat, "Believe the LORD and his prophets." And Paul (1 Cor. 4, 16. according to the Vulg.): "Be ye followers of me, as I of Christ."]

4) Marginal gloss: Papale: Nescit homo, utrum amore an odio dignus sit.

It is written of him: "He will be a wild man, his hand against all, and all hands against him" 2c. Gen. 16, 12.

Item 204: Christ never committed any sin, for God's Word and Spirit cannot sin; Mahmet was an idolater, a murderer, an abuser of women, a robber, and full of all vices. Although they say that God has forgiven him.

Item: Christ performed many great healing miracles, but he did not perform one, as the Alcoran testifies. For that which is said of him is either a lie, or impossible, or foolish, or of no avail. For example, that he has cut the moon in two, or that a camel has spoken, or even that he has done them in secret, for he himself confesses that he has done many things by night and in secret, which he could not prove when asked during the day. Therefore also some said unto him, Thou sayest how thou goest up to heaven by night; go up by day, that we may see and believe.

206. But Christ did great and glorious miracles in the daytime, publicly, before many observers, and his works are manifest. Item: Christ has been a surpassing Master, as the Alcoran says; and in the chapter Elmaide God says: O Christ, notice how I have given you the Holy Spirit to speak. Item: In the cradle I taught you the Book, Wisdom, Mosaic Law and Gospel. But Mahmet was an unlearned master, a layman, who knew no other language than his mother tongue, nor understood the interpretation of his own law. For he says that God understands the Alcoran.

Item: Christ, according to the Gospel, was crucified, died, rose again, and sits at the right hand of God. Although the Alcoran says that he did not die, but that God took him to himself. Now he says what he wants, so far he agrees with the Gospel that Christ is alive, but Mahmet is dead. Now it is better to have a living helper than a dead one. Why then do the Saracens not rather follow Christ than Mahmet, and rather the Gospel than the Alcoran? And it is reasonable to believe that the best law is given by the best master.

Chapter XVI.

How the gospel surpasses the alcoran.

From all that has been said above, it is easy to see how the gospel is far above the Alcoran. For we have thus proved that the Alcoran cannot be God's law, because neither the Old Testament nor the New Testament testify to it.

[It does not agree with others in speech or teaching, it is repugnant to itself, it is not confirmed by any miraculous sign, it is contrary to reason, it contains public lies, it is murderous, it is disorderly, it is harmful, it is uncertain; all this is proved from the Alcoran itself. And he who reads the Alcoran himself will find it better that we may boldly say, If you will not believe us, read the Alcoran. But in the Gospel all this is contradicted.

And he himself, Mahomet, before all the prophets that are now, or that may come, highly commendeth Christ, and exalteth the gospel above all the books of the holy scriptures. But we know that no testimony of doctrine or life is so strong and powerful as the praise of those who reproach us. For in the chapter Elmaide 1) God says: "We have made the way of men through Jesus Christ, the Son of Mary, the most true prophet, and have given him the gospel, which is law and light and public truth. So the Alcoran praises the gospel in many more places. And it is revealed to the world in the highest way, in all places, in all languages, so that I may boldly say to the Saracens: If you want to believe your Mahmet or not, read the Gospel yourself.

210. Further, the Alcoran says in the chapter Elemphal: Since God wanted the truth to be certain by His word, and the heretics to be reigned in, and the truth to be right, and the lie to be destroyed, God has thus provided and ordered, so that the world would not be corrupted by ignorance, that this law, which is common and necessary to all, namely the law of the Gospel, should not be written in one place, but in all countries, not in one language, but in all languages, Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and then faithfully interpreted.

211 Therefore, at the end of the Gospel, Matth. 28, 19, Marc. 16, 15, Christ commanded His disciples to preach the Gospel confidently to the whole world. And so that they would be able to do this, He gave them the gifts of speaking with all tongues and the power to perform miracles. But the Alcoran says that he was given to them 2) alone, and only in Arabic.

1) In the old editions: "Elmeide", while in 2 103 and 2184 it is "Elmaide" and 2 28 and 2 34 Elmaida". Also "Elmaice" (2 185) is probably a printing error. Aehnlichen errors we meet also with other Arabic chapter names, e.g. "Inpacara" (2 49) and "Empacara" (2 128), "Elmpaceram" (2 179) and "Elpalceram" (2184); "Elemphal" (2 210) and "Elemphaal" (2 147).

2) Jenaer: him.

Language given by God, as the Saracens firmly insist that no one can understand him who does not know Arabic. Now it is obvious that not all the world can learn Arabic, nor can all of them, and yet they boast (as has been said) that no one can be saved except those who live by the law of the Saracens. Therefore, it is reasonable to ask them why God wants only the Saracens, or those who know Arabic, to be saved, 1) since the Christian Law is written in all languages, teaching that God wants all people to be saved.

As the Saracens, who alone call themselves the blessed or preserved by name (as said above), and all others truly want to be saved, they must learn to recognize Christ, the only Savior, and read the gospel in whatever language they want; then they will find all that is proved above about the Alkoran, the contradiction.

They will find how Moses and the prophets testified to the same thing, and that it is not against itself, nor rhymed or poetically put, but simple and bad speech, for the benefit of the simple, that they may understand it well. It is also not full of its own praise, nor does it need shameful, lewd, but mean, honest words. There is no fairy tale or twaddle in it beforehand. And even though there are parables in it, they interpret themselves afterwards. So it is also perfect, not only the outward work, but also the inward evil desires.

Item 214: It does not permit murder, robbery, violence, or injustice; indeed, it teaches that one should suffer such things for God's sake, and pray for enemies, persecutors, and blasphemers. Thus it is also, as said above, orderly, and certain, by certain masters; not so disorderly, incorrect, and by uncertain masters, as the Alkoran. It also does not reject people who do not believe soon; it does not say to them, like Mahmet, "My faith is mine, your faith is yours," as if he alone asked where he would be blessed, not where the others remain. But it teaches to be ready to answer all who desire causes of their faith and hope, wanting all men to be blessed, and not themselves alone.

215 And this is also due to a wise man of understanding, that he should show the reason and cause of what he does and teaches; otherwise every fool would give the law, and make what he would, and then say to those who asked him the reason and cause, To me be my law, to you be your law, to me let no man believe contrary or otherwise.

1) Marginal gloss: Vsl, an vslit onmss ^radioarn llnAuam älsosrs.

Chapter XVII.

What the Saracens answer to all this.

216) To this some quarrelsome and spiritual Saracens want to answer, thus: We do not say that the Gospel is not from God, if the Alkoran publicly testifies to it. Nor do we say that it has a defect or is imperfect because it is from God, but it proclaims such high and perfect things that the world is not able to keep it. 2) For who can love God with all his heart and his neighbor as himself? 3) Who can pray for his persecutors and blasphemers? Who can do good from the heart to those who do evil to him? And many other high things are given in the gospel.

Because it was such a law that could not be kept, God advised the world with the law of blessedness, and made the commandments easier, and gave the world the Alkoran, which is not so difficult, and people can easily be saved by it. 4) Therefore they say that the Alkoran is better for the common man, and for the world very much enough for salvation; and for this reason they call the Alkoran with a special name the law of salvation. Thus they conclude that the Alkoran has come in the place of the Gospel, 5) and what was good in the Gospel is in the Alkoran, so that henceforth one may have nothing of the Gospel.

218 But this is a public lie; for it cannot be said with truth that the gospel was given for a time, that is, until the Alkoran, and the Alkoran should have come in its place; because the Alkoran himself testifies that truth and blessedness are in the gospel. For how can truth and blessedness depart? Or from whom should they depart?

219] Furthermore, it is not good to say that after God gave the gospel, He only afterwards realized that the world could not keep it, and therefore changed His word and eased the commandments; just as if God did not know what we were or what we were able to do until He learned it afterwards: for a man knows beforehand what his cattle can or cannot bear. Rather, God knew beforehand whether the gospel was too heavy, and what men could bear 6).

The Alkoran himself also says that the Saracens are nothing if they do not fulfill the Gospel and Mosiah's Law, as stated above.

2) Marginal gloss: There it lies.

Loo est.

3) Marginal gloss: Isn't the Mosis commandment.

4) Marginal gloss: O salutary law!

5) Marginal gloss: O devil!

6) Wittenberger: endure.

321 Further, if the Alkoran is lighter than the gospel, it is all the more dangerous if they do not keep it. Now the Saracens do not keep it, that is obvious; for they drink wine and get drunk, and eat forbidden food with them, do not keep the fasts, nor the prayers, and do not give alms according to their ability, and many other things more, which well know who has lived among them and experienced such things.

It is true that Mahmet would have liked to give an easy law, but he is not forbidden to rule his pen in such a way that he does not write many difficult things under it. First of all, it is difficult that no one understands the Alkoran without God alone, as he says in the Alkoran, although this is foolishly said; ut supra Cap. 8. Item, he confesses that Mary, a virgin, gave birth to Jesus, and that God has a Word and Holy Spirit; which is difficult to believe, and with us confirmed by miracles, as necessary articles for salvation.

223 He is also hard on works, such as circumcising oneself, not drinking wine, and guarding against all drunkenness through strong drink, fasting and praying, and giving alms according to each one's ability, and many other things that very few Saracens keep.

224 If it were necessary for men that the commandments of the Gospel should be lightened, and the Alkoran given as a lighter law, then one might pretend that it would be necessary to give another lighter law, which men could keep, and thus both the Gospel, the Alkoran, Moses, and finally all laws would be done away with, until we would do what everyone desires. Therefore let it remain as Solomon says, Ecclesiastes 12:13: "Fear God and keep His commandments, which is the duty of all people."

Martinus Luther.

This is a shameful law, which itself confesses that not everything is true that is written in it, but, as we heard in the ninth chapter, Mahmet himself confesses that of his twelve thousand words, only three thousand are true, and the other nine thousand are all lies. This is a free devil, who, without all the larva of angels, publicly boasts in his own form that where he teaches something, the fourth part is true, and three parts are lies; so it is certainly all lies, even the fourth part, if it were true in itself.

2. for no one (no one, not even a sensible person) will ever eternally that a man (if he is otherwise a man who is 1) in his right mind) should be able to believe with seriousness a book or scripture, of which he would be certain that one part (let alone three parts) would be a lie, not having to know which would be true or not true in different ways, and thus having to buy in sackcloth, or eat or drink three pints of poison mixed with one pound of sugar.

No one (I say again) will persuade me that a reasonable man can seriously accept and believe such a book. For it is impossible that a human heart, even the devil himself, can believe a lie. I say, believe seriously; for the devil himself knows well that his lies are lies, and cannot himself believe them to be truth, as little as all his children, who lie secretly or publicly, can believe in themselves that their lie is truth, yes, they know and want it to be lies.

4 If the Turks or Saracens believe this book of Mahomet, the Alkoran, with earnestness, they are not worthy to be called men, as they, deprived of common human reason, have become mere brutes, stone and block. But if they are men and of sound mind, and believe the same Alkoran knowingly and willingly, then no one is guilty of their damnation but they themselves. For their master, Mahmet, and the devil, too, have kept themselves safe, and are honestly excused from their damnation before God and all the world, because they publicly confess that they want to teach lies.

(5) If my pastor preached to me: Do you hear, I will now preach a sermon in which three parts will be lies and the fourth part will be true; and if I do not distinguish between the three parts and the fourth part, but I nevertheless believe everything in the 2) field: Dear, tell me, with what pretense would I accuse such a pastor at the last judgment of having deceived me? He would answer me (the devil himself also): I have not deceived you, but you yourself, I warned you that I wanted to lie to you, and you wanted to have the lies.

1) "a man is who" is missing in the Wittenberg.

2) Wittenberger: ins.

(6) If this were so, the Turks or Mahometists would have to be such people who unite themselves with the devil, committing and prescribing that he should assist them, help them and advise them on what they would like, as they have always been and still are, even great princes and lords. For they must not blame anyone for their damnation except themselves. The devil is innocent in this, they want it that way. And it is nevertheless to be seen from this booklet Richardi that the Mahmet together with his companions had also been such a leveler 1). As with the Arabs, his compatriots, such black arts have always existed, and still are today.

(7) And where the Turks were of the people, the Christians (especially with armor and weapons) would have a hard time against them. For to fight the devil with iron is nothing and a lost cause; one must first, by right faith and with an earnest Lord's Prayer, put the devil, their god, out of the field, and bring God to us with His angels.

Now, I want to put this time (but that without giving) that the Turks are partly also men, and do not believe the Alcoran, as Richardus also testifies that there are many among them who do not believe the Alcoran. For also our Medici and Astronomi have many of the Saracen books, as Avicennam, Mesue, Hali, Albumasar, Alfraganum 2c., who admittedly were men, and believed nothing of the Alkoran, but followed reason, as Plato, Cicero, and such philosophers. Such people, I think, have been misled by the sects, and have wanted to be neither Jews, nor Christians, nor Saracens, and have kept to reason and philosophy.

(9) After that, the other group, who believe neither this nor that, are slammed (as they still do) for the sake of great happiness, victory, good, honor, worldly carnal glory and pleasure, who do not ask anything about what is right or wrong, about God or the devil, but because there is happiness, quickly conclude that God must be there, whose gift is all this, and if he were not their gracious God, he would not give it. So it must be right, what they believe; and though they know that they believe many lies, God will let it all be good, who nevertheless gives them so much, so helps them, so blesses them, so lifts them up, that they have become drunk with great happiness and, drowned inside, do not consider where they are at home.

(10) Take an example from ours, who want to be Christians and holy churches; they know and freely confess that it is God's commandment, word and truth that they hear, and that what they believe is wrong and unjust. But their hearts are elsewhere than in mammon, temporal power, honor and pleasure, that they knowingly and wantonly despise and persecute the recognized and known truth, to defend their public and recognized idolatry, lies and injustice. And the mob, who daily hears God's commandment that adultery, robbery, theft, avarice, usury, cursing, despising God 2c. is great sin, laughs and mocks both the preachers and God in his commandments. And the sum is, where the great God Mammon is powerful, everyone believes and does what he wants, and what he thus wants to believe and do must be right, regardless of the fact that his conscience tells and admonishes him otherwise. And, what is still worse, there are many who associate with the devil, and know that it is the devil, and trust him. For they know that he is a murderer and a liar. All these will not be able to say at the last day that they have been deceived by the devil.

11. Since both of these things are common among us and among us Christians, and the greatest number, disobeying God's commandment, knowingly serve mammon, yes, the devil: What is there to wonder if the Turks, who do not have God's commandment and word, drowned in mammon and such great fortune, believe public lies, or at least consider them harmless lies, because God is so close to them, and so highly honors them with victory and wealth, fortune and whatever they want. They do not think how God gives such great goods, dominion and honor to the worst of boys, nor does he give the whole world to the devil, so that he is called the prince of the world.

12) Now, when such two armies of Turks come against

1) Thus the Jenaer and the Erlanger. Wittenbergers: "Ebentherer".

Dear, give our Lord God good counsel (where he otherwise would not know), which Turks 1) he should help and give happiness? I, for one of the least counselors, 2) want to advise him to give the Mahometan Turks luck against the Christian Turks, as he has done so far, without our counsel, even against our complaint and request. The reason is that the Mahometan Turks do not have God's word, nor do they have preachers of it; they are coarse, insolent sows, and do not know what they believe or believe; but if they had preachers of the divine word, they might, yes, some of them, turn sows into men. But our Christian Turks have God's word and preachers, yet they do not want to hear it, and they become vain sows out of men, desecrating the name of Christ, so that they boast of being Christians and Christian, and yet they are worse Turks than those who boast of being Christians and not Christian.

Item 13: This is also a very fine thing (if this is to be called fine, which the devil himself cannot make uglier) about the Saracens or Turks, that they not only believe such lies, or at least are not afraid of them, but also do not know whether these are the same lies, 3) or who the masters of such lies are. For, as Richard says in the 13th chapter above, they have had so many different Alkorans, some burned, some patched up, and some destroyed and mangled, that they themselves do not know which is the right Alkoran or the right book of lies. That it looks as if the Mahmet has perhaps put something, after which so many masters have come over it, since one has carpentered this, the other that on it, removed and added, according to each conceit, that the name Mahmet alone has remained on it and the present Alkoran (to speak so) must be called the right Alkoran out of arbitrariness and by force.

14. and it is not much better with us

1) "Turks" is missing in the Wittenberger.

2) Wittenberger: one.

3) Erlanger: lie. It will have to be the noun here, because the context reveals that the Turks do not know whether it is just the same lies which the Koran contains, which Mahomet has presented, or other lies. Immediately following, Luther says: "The right book of lies".

Christians also went. For there are so many lies in our Alcorans, Decretals, Lying Sums and innumerable books, since no one knows where they come from, when they began, who the masters are. For it is not known today who the masters of the abomination are, that the one figure of the holy sacrament has been taken out of the church. Item, who of the 4) lying saints, St. Christopher, St. George, St. Barbara, St. Catherine, St. Ursula, and those without number, with their miracles, who first devised the Sacrifice of the Mass, Purgatory, Indulgences, and such idolatry without measure first began. Still, as they come into custom and are written in books, they must be called articles of the holy church, and all those who doubt or believe against them must be heretics.

15 And the pope defends everything with force, since his high scholars, also cardinals, rebuke and boast with the saying in their rights: Non potest omnium ratio reddi [one cannot give an account of all things, regardless of the fact that God, the Holy Spirit, through His holy apostle St. Peter, tells us to be ready to give everyone the answer, the reason and the cause of our faith [1 Petr. 3, 15]. And St. Paul teaches his disciple Timothy to know from whom he learned [2 Tim. 3, 14]. If a Christian does not know from whom he learned it, nor why he believes this way, what may one believe about God or His Holy Scriptures?

But God has let his final wrath go so that the devil has poured out all his power and wickedness until he could do nothing more evil, namely, that he has created all kinds of lies knowingly and understandable to reason by Mahmet's regiment there in the morning and by Pabst's regiment here in the evening, and that he has not considered us worthy to know or denounce the masters of such lies for the purpose of mockery and exaltation. This is how God should punish our ungrateful, cursed being, for the blood that His dear Son shed to reconcile and redeem us. Oh, Lord God, pray, sigh, cry out, whoever can pray, sigh, cry out, that the wrath may one day, as Daniel says, come to an end, amen [Dan. 11:36].

4) Erlanger: "sanctify".

(17) But what I am writing here I am doing in order that this booklet may come to the attention of those who are fighting against the Turk, or who are already under the Turk, or who are yet to come, by means of printing or preaching, so that they may resist the faith of Mahomet, since they cannot resist his sword, especially those who would like to be saved even after this life. For I have completely despaired of those who want to wage war against the Turk, and yet with blasphemy, fornication and all kinds of willfulness, neither the Turks themselves are worse than I know that God will not nor can give happiness where such people should wage war for us.

It will be up to those who repent and amend, honor God's Word and His sacraments, humble themselves before God, and pray heartily so that God may be moved and keep His angels with us in the field. Otherwise, it is lost and the punishment must come upon us, be it this or another. For God can no longer suffer it, as is now often preached, and reason must confess.

(19) This should also move a devout Christian, yes, even a respectable heathen man, that there is no discipline or marital status at all among the Mahometans, but only a free life of whoredom. For whoever, according to Mahmet's law, takes as many wives as he wants, rejects them again, and takes them again as often as he wants, or sells them 2c., is not a husband, but a true whoremonger or wild whore-hunter. For this is not how God created women, nor how he ordered them to be kept, as Moses and the Gospel teach us by reason. Therefore, such mahmetists are vain whoremongers and fornicators, just as dogs and sows have marriage, since no marriage nor semblance of marriage can be. And it is no wonder that the wild, savage people take pleasure in such a free sow's life and like to become Turks.

(20) That they keep much stricter order besides, as obedience in war, severe punishments in regiment, and much praying, and the like, that is vain pretense and helps nothing. Behold the murderers' and murderers' guilds, and other desperate societies of traitors and malefactors, how they are so faithful among themselves to keep their oaths and vows, so secretive, so obedient, so diligent, so valiant, so cunning, so careful, how they suffer so much and dare to do harm, that no prince nor lord finds the same among his subjects (except among very few). And it would be a blessed regiment if the subjects were all so faithful, so diligent, so brave, so obedient, to do good, as the murderers, traitors, murderers, devil's flocks are among each other, to do evil. For the sinful flesh is willing and inclined to do evil and to serve the devil, it likes to keep faith and obedience, but to do good it does not want to continue anywhere. Just as a wife is much more faithful and obedient, and does and suffers much more for the sake of the adulterer than for the sake of her husband and children. Again, the adulterer also, according to the saying: The devil's martyrs suffer more than Christ's martyrs, and hell must be earned more sourly than heaven.

21) They also pray a lot, like the married woman, Proverbs 7, 14, does, 2) give and sacrifice a lot. Our highwaymen sing 3) thus: First we will praise Mary, the pure maid, and St. George must be Rottmeister. And what may it much say? Where is more prayer and worship ever heard than among the idolatrous heathen, among the false prophets in the nation of Israel, and among the clergy in the papacy? And yet all their prayers in a heap are not worthy of a letter nor a bag in the Lord's Prayer; indeed, as the 109th Psalm, v. 7, says, they are vain sins, and, Matth. 23, 14, condemned as a great abuse of the divine name, because "what does not come from faith is sin. Rom. 14, 23.

From all this we Christians may see what a cruel, terrible, immeasurable wrath of God has fallen upon the ungrateful world that has despised the Gospel of God. There, towards morning, he has decreed that the beast, the shameful Mahmet, has

2) Wittenberger: "Ehehurn" and "thun"; "much" is missing. 3) Walch and the Erlangers: ostrich robbers.

1) "the" is missing in the Wittenberger.

1) Here, towards evening, he has let the false prophet, the troublesome Pabst, arise, who has deceived and crushed the world much more subtly, so that those who did not want to hear the Son of God there had to hear the son of the devil, the Mahmet, and those who did not want to obey the Holy Spirit here had to obey the evil spirit in the Pabst. 2)

(23) But his causeless mercy, to preserve his dear church, has so tempered such abominable wrath that the shameful Mahmet has not been able to deceive anyone, nor has he himself wanted to be deliberately deceived. For he had to expose his lies so crudely and tangibly, and to arrange his nature so sourly and beastly (as heard above), that no reasonable person (let alone a Christian) could believe him, nor approve of his behavior.

(24) Here, in our country, He has mightily and graciously preserved the Holy Scriptures, the text of the Gospel, and the sacraments in public usage and in the churches, so that the deceived elect may finally, in their distress or at their end, come to terms and take hold of the Lord and Savior in His Word and Sacrament, as happened to St. Bernard and many like him.

(25) And I do not take Mahmet for the end-Christian; he makes it too rough, and has a knowable black devil, who can deceive neither faith nor reason, and is like a heathen who persecutes Christianity from without, as the Romans and other heathens have done. For how can he deceive a Christian who rejects the Holy Scriptures, both New and Old Testaments, baptism, sacrament, keys, or forgiveness of sins, Lord's Prayer, faith, ten commandments, even the marriage state, and teaches vain murder and fornication?

26. but the pope with us is the real end-Christ, he has the high, subtle, beautiful, glittering devil, who sits inside Christianity, leaves the holy scripture, baptism, sacrament, key, catechism, marriage, and the other things in the hands of the devil.

1) Wittenberger: plagued.

2) Jenaer: would have to.

3) Wittenberger: the.

stand. As St. Paul says: he sits (that is, reigns) in the temple of God [2 Thess. 2, 4], that is, in the church or Christianity, namely in such a people that has been baptized, the sacrament, the keys, the holy scripture and God's word. And yet he rules so masterfully that he elevates his Drecketal, his Alkoran, his human doctrine so above God's word that the Christians' baptism, sacrament, keys, prayer, gospel, and Christ himself are no longer of any use, but must believe to be saved by their own work. All monasteries, convents and all his regiment are directed to this.

This devil does not affect those who want to be deliberately deceived, as under the Mahomet, but those who do not want to be deceived, yes, the elect of God, Matth. 24, 24. For he uses all these names, God, Christ, Son of God, Holy Spirit, church, baptism, sacrament and everything that Christians believe and teach, and which the Mahmet rejects. And yet, under such names and appearances, pushes the truth to the ground by his alcoran, as St. Paul says: Speciem pietatis habentes, virtutem ejus abnegantes [2 Tim. 3, 5.].

(28) Mahmet also boasts that he does not perform any signs, but Christ and Paul prophesy that the Pope should sit in the temple of God, pretend to be God, and perform many false signs and wonders [Matth. 24/) 15. 24. 2 Thess. 2,4. If you want to know what these miracles are, read about the saints, the monks, the pilgrimages, the masses, and similar legends, and you will see what false signs are, and what miracles the poltergeists and pilgrimage devils, saints' service or invocations have done in all corners of Christendom. Although some of them are fictitious, and in addition to such signs, Christ also proved His true signs to His own through the prayers of true Christians.

29 And behold, how the gross devil there and the subtle devil here have played the game of matrimony. The coarse, impolite Mahmet takes all wives, and yet has none. The chaste pope takes no wife, and yet has all wives. Are these not strange

4) Here the Erlangen edition reprinted from Walch: "Matth. 34, 15."

Things? He who has no wife has all wives; he who has all wives has none. How does it work? This is how it goes: the impudent, insolent Mahmet leads no pretense of chastity, takes wives (like a whoremonger) as much as he wants; therefore he has none in marriage, nor can he have one in marriage, and is therefore without a wife, or in no marital state.

30. The lily-white, chaste, shamefaced, chastening, holy father, the pope, the tender Juugfrauschaft, leads the appearance of chastity and also does not want to have a wife with God and honor; but how many wives he otherwise takes, not only whores, but also wives and virgins: Look at his cardinalates, bishoprics, monasteries, convents, priests, preachers, chaplains, schoolmasters, and his whole body, without which there are still countless vices that must not be named.

I do not want to count other things than murder and avarice, or else the pope would far surpass the Mahmet in this. For he has instigated so much war, murder and bloodshed among the kings, robbed so much property, land and people, stolen, plundered and maltreated them without rest, and has also practiced such arrogance over all the kings, and all of this under Christ's name in the most blasphemous way, that Mahomet would be almost holy before the world against him.

32. shall we now have luck against the

1) Erlanger: marital.

Mahmet, the outward enemy of Christianity, we must first renounce the inward enemy, the 2) end-Christ with his devil, through righteous repentance, and turn to our Lord and Savior JESUS CHRIST with right earnestness and a simple heart, so that we can pray rightly and with truth, and thus be sure of being heard. Otherwise, we will be as fortunate as our forefathers, who fought against the Mahomet until he came out of the brittle murderous corner of Arabia, and having gained land four hundred German miles away, now knocks at our door and defies us. 3) (33) Well, God give us His mercy and punish both the Pope and the Mahomet along with their devils. I have done my part as a faithful prophet and preacher. Whoever does not want to listen, let it be. I am excused now, from that day and forever. But those who believe will thank me here and there. For it is they (where God will give happiness) who will earn it for God with faith, prayer and forbearance, and will do the best. 4) May God, the merciful Father, help them through His dear Son Jesus Christ, with the Holy Spirit, blessed forever. Amen.

2) In the editions: den.

3) Taken by us from the old edition of Walch. In the editions: "on our misting."

4) Walch and the Erlangeners: Das.

57: Luther's admonition to the pastors in the superintendency of Wittenberg to exhort the people to repentance and prayer against the Turk. *)

February 1543.

To all pastors, our dear lords and brothers in Christ, grace and peace in the Lord. D. Martin Luther and D. John Pomer.

1. our most gracious lord duke John Frederick, elector, etc., has given his consent.

Both you and we are commanded and admonished that we should always diligently exhort the people to repentance and prayer against God's ruthlessness, the Turk. Which we also, without this, in addition to our gracious Lord's command to you, provide that you from *) This admonition is found in the collective editions: in the Wittenberg (1559), vol. XII, p. 227; in the Jena (1562), vol. VIII, p. 1706; in the Altenburg, vol. VIII, p. 341; in the Leipziger, vol. XXII, p. 424; in the Erlanger, vol. 56, p. 54; and in De Wette, vol. V, p. 544. We give the text according to the Jena edition, comparing the Wittenberg. The determination of the time is according to De Wette.

(1) I have sufficiently admonished you, and I have no doubt that you have done so and are still doing so.

2 Because this move, which happened last summer, did not turn out too well, unfortunately! but the heavy tax was badly laid, great goods were lost, in addition many fine people were lost, and, which is probably the worst, the name of Christ was highly despised by the Turks, but the Mahmet was highly praised, moreover that some princes and lords (as it is said) kept the tax and sent no help, which was frightening for us to hear, and have had to think that they must either be in league with the Turk and traitors to Christendom, or else worse enemies of Christendom, neither being the Turk himself, because they so shamefully kept the money, which was put up for the last need of Christendom, and killed it, of which much evil talk arose in the empire; And if this were the case, they should be thrown out of the empire and deprived of all honor of the empire.

3. Such and such things have truly moved us, that we would have thought our prayers (I Doctor Martinus in particular) to be nothing, but that God would not hear, because not only has no repentance followed, but usury, stealing, transgressing, all kinds of wantonness in all classes, but also such enemies of Christianity are found among us, who have deprived the fighting Christians of their wages in such distress and, as much as there is in them, have starved the Christians to serve the Turk. Such things, I say, truly move us as well, along with many other pious people, that it seems as if God's wrath and punishment will not be asked for, but will give room to the Turk and his traitors.

4 But because we are commanded by God's word, we are also commanded to pray. Therefore, let us do what we can and how we can. Whoever not repent nor become righteous in God's name, let him (if he will) become worse in the devil's name. We must pray, just as we must preach, without ceasing 'and without hindrance, because we are with the world and in the world, so that our conscience may be free on that day, when we have faithfully shown our Christian ministry and love against the false, ungrateful, evil world, and have not grieved it to the end. If God wants to punish her through the Turk, as she deserves, and is still struggling for it with all impenitence and wickedness, our prayers will be directed to us again, as Christ says in Matth. 10, 13, and will be a testimony to us before God that we heartily resisted His wrath and the Turk, our fortune, and would have gladly saved poor Germany from sins, God's wrath and destruction.

(5) You shall also stop the tolling of the bell at noon, and help to pray earnestly in church after the sermon, when the people are together, and let the children pray in the houses. For it is not so important to us old people who go there, but it is to serve our descendants so that they may remain safe from the devil of Mahmet in the faith of Christ and eternal bliss.

6) Do not forget the Imperial Diet at Nuremberg, either, that God, the Father of all graces, wanted to enlighten and incline the hearts of the princes, now that this summer the faith has rudely come into their hands, that they once seriously want to leave their disagreement, to unite cordially with all their might, and to do things differently than before, before they become confused and degenerate, since they would like to in vain, because now they do not want to, since they can. There are enough examples with Hungary and many other countries. Whoever will not listen, God will not hear him again. But we, who preach and pray, are excused. Hiemit GOtt befehlt. Amen.

1) This refers to the "Exhortation to Prayer Against the Pitfalls," No. 55 in this volume.

2) Wittenberger: in this.

Appendix of some writings, which still belong to the present part.

1. Carlstadt's writing full of the recipients, signs and promises of the holy sacrament of the flesh and blood of Christ.

June 24, 1521.

To the venerable and respectable Mr. Nicolao Demuth, provost and archidiacon of the New Work at Hall, my beloved master and patron, I, Andreas Carolstat D. wish health and prosperity through Christ! Amen.

Venerable, magnanimous Lord!

1. Since some apostates from the faith do not refrain from hindering the comforting and evangelical doctrine, and make those of little faith fear Christ, who has come to their benefit, salvation and help, especially that the sick shun and flee their physician and medicine, for this reason I have recently given notice herewith, that no one should abstain from receiving the flesh and blood of Christ because of his sin, and by the holy Scriptures I want to indicate that those who are sinners, because of their sin, should cheerfully, like Zacchaeus, take the Lord into their arms and house, and that the saying Centurionis 1) which the church uses, namely: Lord, I am not worthy that you should enter my house (Matth. 8, 8, Luc. 7, 6.), to which Christ answers, "I have found no greater faith in Israel." For by such words Christ did not praise Centurionem for considering himself unworthy of his presence, but only for believing that Christ would help him absent. Thus Centurion embraced and received Christ spiritually, as Zacchaeus received him spiritually and bodily, to whom Christ said (Luke 19:9): "Today blessedness is made to this house, for he is a son of Abraham", that is, a believer. Centurion placed the greatest on the word (Luke 7:7). Zacchaeus embraced the sign in the word; what word? "Today I must stay in your house" (Luc. 19, 5.). So Christ also stayed with Centurione, because he made his servant well. Recently, they both received Christ in that word, and it is a wonder why one does not say to those who go to the sacrament: "Say: I will receive the Lord with joy, as Zacchaeus did. For the word Centurionis, Non sum dignus etc., Christ has not yet praised, as he praised Zacchaeus. I know not what moved the teachers more to this word Centurionis, "Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst go under my roof." For Zacchaeus confessed his sin, infirmities and ineptitude no less than Centurion, who also accepted the Lord in spirit.

After this I wanted to report that signs in the sacraments are less, and because of the promise, 2) that also no one, but a sinner, receives the sacrament of bread; item, that everyone can know whether he takes such sacrament worthily. This I have attributed to Your Reverence (to indicate my service with it), highly requesting Your favor of official diligence, E. E. hereby wish, until long the other booklet 3)

2) What Carlstadt means by this can be seen from § 34.

3) This may refer to the exegetical writing that Carlstadt dedicated to Provost Nicolaus Demuth on the Monday after Jacobi (July 29) 1521: "Berichtung dieser Red: Das Reich GÖttes leidet Gewalt 2c. Matth. 9." (Jäger, Carlstadt, p. 216.)

1) d. i. of the captain [at Capernaum].

will be printed, have patience. Then to serve E. E. and all your beloved ones, and especially Mr. Andreas Zeitlaß von Carolstat, your chamberlain, I am always willingly ready. Date Wittenberg, [on the day of birth] Johannis Baptistä, in the 15] 21st year.

In order to make this speech easier and more understandable, I will ask two questions. First, whether sinners should abstain from the reverend sacrament and withdraw, because of the iniquity and sin they have committed. For the other part I ask: Since there are two things in this sacrament that make it full, namely the sign and the divine promise, which is the highest and to which man should most of all adhere: Whether the flesh and blood of Christ more fei, or divine promise attached to the sign?

[Examination of the first question.]

(4) For the first part, some decide that a person should refrain from receiving the holy sacrament because of sin, and they base it on an illusion of the Scriptures. Namely, they read: "Our sins divide us from God" [Is. 59, 2]. If sins divide us from God, one must abstain from the Sacrament because of his guilt, for he should avoid that from which he is divided.

Item 5: "God says to the sinner, Why do you take my testament into your mouth? Ps. 49. [or 50, 16.] If a sinner may not take commandment and testament of GOD into his mouth, how should he be permitted to take the flesh of Christ into his mouth? If it displeases God that a sinner should put the divine word into his mouth, much less does he permit a sinner to eat his flesh.

(Isaiah 1:15) By whom God speaks thus: "If ye lift up your hands unto me, I will turn away mine eyes: and if ye worship me, I will not hear. Much less will he have his mercy on the sinner, if he needs the reverend Sacrament, than he has on those who call upon him with hands and words.

(7) To this they refer to the saying of Paul, 1 Cor. 11:27: "Whosoever eateth the bread, and drinketh of the drink unworthily, shall be guilty of the death of Christ." Now Paul says before of sinners who were chaste, 1) and had no distinction and judgment of the body of Christ, if they [ate] the flesh of Christ unworthily, that they became as guilty of the blood and death of Christ as the Gentiles and Jews who strangled Christ.

1) quarrelsome == unruly. 1 Cor. 11, 16: "who takes pleasure in quarreling."

(8) With these writings they discourage sinners from the use of the sacrament and the communion of saints. Yes, they secretly say how Christ may come in to sinners, and make of our Savior a corrupter, of Christ (who is born to all sinners for joy) a frightening man. Therefore I will make this resolution:

(9) Sins committed by a man shall not deprive him of the reception of the reverend Sacrament, but shall rather impel and kindle him to run quickly and swiftly to the reverend Sacrament.

10. reason: Christ says (Matth. 9, 13.): "I did not come to call the righteous, but sinners. Hereby we hear clearly that Christ came on behalf of sinners to take away their sin and unrighteousness. Why would he say, "I have not come to call the righteous," when he was born to the pious? And if Christ wanted us to flee sin halfway, why does he say, "I have come to call sinners"? If he calls us, we are to come. Now you hear that he calls sinners, and for this reason he came, that he might call the erring and lost sheep to him" (Matth. 15, 24.). If this is so, the sheep should not flee from the Shepherd because of their loss and wandering.

(11) If you were to fear and shrink from the holy sacrament because of your sin, what would Christ have said when he said, "The shepherd feeds ninety-nine righteous sheep and seeks out one sheep that has gone astray" (Luc. 15:4, 7)? What does the story of the lost penny (Luc. 15:8, 9) serve us? I say unto thee, Fleuch Christum nicht Sünde halben, der darum kommen [ist] und dich sucht, dass erben dich von Sünden und erlösung will. His name is called Jesus because He was born to make His people holy from their sins (Matth. 1, 21.).

12. remember every one the words of Christ, which he said to the holy eaters 3) (Matth. 9, 12. Luc. 5, 31.) saying: "The healthy have no need of a physician, but the sick and weak." These words Christ answered when the Pharisees and scribes (who walked in great, praiseworthy and seeming works, as monks and clergy and other churchmen now walk) asked, "Why do you effet and drink with the

2) i.e. holy. In the Vulgate: salvum.

3) i.e. Pharisees. Several times later.

sinners?" To this Christ answered, "The healthy have no need of a physician," and set forth clear causes why he came, saying, "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners only to repentance." With these words Christ compares sinners to the sick; for what sickness does in the body, sin does in the spirit. Therefore David says, "O Lord, make my soul whole, for I have sinned against thee." Ps. 40 or 41:5.

(13) Now everyone knows that the healthy do not desire a physician, nor do they seek one to make them well. But the sick, when they perceive their addiction and disease, desire a physician, and do not shrink from the physician for their infirmities. Yes, the harder they feel their sickness, the faster and more eagerly they flee to the physician, and consider nothing but the physician's help and their own sickness. It is the same with sinners: they should not be afraid of Christ, because Christ came to call sinners, to draw them to himself, to make them well. The more and the more grievous a sinner's sin, the more swiftly and fiercely he should run and hasten to Christ. If thou hast sinned, and needest nothing more on earth, but to know thy sickness and sin, and to find thyself in need of thy Lord Jesus, and to believe that he is able and willing to forgive thy sin, thou art more worthy 1) of Christ's help, than those who begin to run with good works, who hear that the healthy have no need of a physician. Item: "I have not come to claim the righteous" 2c.

Let this be your eternal comfort, that Christ said: The sick need a physician. Confess your sickness, and you will have Christ standing before you as a physician to help you.

15 Therefore I say that no one should abstain from 2) the reverend Sacrament if he has sinned openly or secretly, if he has committed a great or small sin, vice or disgrace.

16 For though the deed be fresh, great, and abominable, yet fear not Christ, when thou knowest thine affliction. For Christ saith, Harlots and manifest sinners shall go before you unto the kingdom of God. (Matth. 21, 31.)

17. stand firm that Christ has come to make well those who are sick of sins; let nothing hinder you, believe this, and feel your sin, and come cheerfully, fresh and without doubt.

18) I say even more: even if a person realizes that he is not almost sorry for his sin, and would like to leave it 3) and repent, he should come to this sacrament with comfort. So you hear that many sins should greatly inflame you to receive this sacrament, and should drive you toward it, not keep you away. For this reason Christ said of Mary Magdalene: "Many sins are forgiven her, because she loved the physician much" (Luc. 7, 47.), and said: "To whom little is given before, he loves little. This is what Paul says: Since sin abounded, grace often abounded. (Rom. 5, 20.)

(19) I do not say that one should sin against the goodness of God, as the crafty gleamers try to argue when they preach the grace of God. Nay, I say, if thou hast sinned, thou shalt find thine affliction, and flee to Christ in good comfort without fear, and shalt not at all doubt that thy sins be forgiven thee. This is what Paul taught you, saying, "This is my faithful saying, which we should accept in all ways, that Christ came into this world to make sinners holy. (1 Tim. 1, 15.) If this is faithful speech, it must also be certain and true and not deceive anyone; so you should also meet Christ as a sinner and not flee him because he is going to meet you because of your sins. Keep his words, and bring your sin with you cheerfully to the Lord. Therefore it is written (in the Song of Songs Cap. 2, 14.): My dove is in the caves or holes of the rock. The rock is Christ, the holes or caves are his deep wounds, which he received because of our sin; to the same caves the sinners flee, as the Psalm says (Ps. 103. or 104, 18.): refugium herinaceis. The rock, that is, Christ, is to the bristling hedgehogs, 4) that is, to the sinners, a refuge to which all sinners should flee. Why should I flee sin halfway to him who is set up as a help, security and refuge to save me from my sins?

(20) Finally, Christ instituted the reverend sacrament of his own flesh and blood in order to help sinners and the sick, not the righteous and the healthy. For before his last departure, the Lord took the bread and broke it, and gave it to his disciples, saying, "Take and eat; this is my body, which is given for you" (Luc. 22:19), or as Paul said, "which is broken for you.

1) In the old edition: worthy.

2) So put by us instead of "before", because in Luther's time "abstain" is construed either with the genitive or with "from".

3) In the old edition: serene.

4) In the old edition: "dürftigen ügeln."

5) In the old edition: faithful.

(1 Cor. 11:24) If we had not sinned, how would the body of Christ have been given for us in suffering and death? But if his body was given for us, he died because of our sin. Now, as he was given, suffered, and died for us, in such a manner and opinion he instituted his sacrament. But he died for sinners, so he also ordained his sacrament for the benefit of sinners. Therefore Paul says (1 Cor. 11:26.): that we should proclaim the death of the Lord as often as we take the sacrament.

21 To proclaim and confess the death of Christ is to say why Christ died, how with his death he put to death and buried our sin. And if I eat his flesh, I shall know that Christ forgives me my sin; if I do this in strong faith, I receive worthily. Why then should I flee Christ for sin, because he comes to me for sin and dies for me?

Yes, some say, one should abstain from sin in honor of the Sacrament. My dear! What do you teach 1)? Is this the honor of Christ, to avoid him because of sin? Or do I honor him, if he seeks me, and I will not let him find me? Well, should I honor the doctor if I did not trust him with my addiction? Recently, the next and first worthy feeling is in finding out your sins and believing that Christ will surely heal you without merit. This is the closest and most worthy reason to the doctor, when the sick person recognizes his illness and wants to get well, and does not doubt that the doctor can and will make him well.

The priests have deprived many people of their souls with their reverence for the holy sacrament, because they have frightened the afflicted consciences before their physician and medicine. Do as you will, and you will never receive Christ worthily, for you feel your infirmity. But if they are too high for you, say with Job (13:23), "Show me my vices and iniquities;" and with Paul (1 Cor. 4:4), "I am not righteous because I know nothing.

(24) If you do well, you sin, as it is written, There is not a righteous man on earth who does well and does not sin. (Eccl. 7, 21.) Therefore we pray in the Lord's Prayer: Forgive us our trespasses (Matth. 6, 12.). Therefore there is no one who is without sin and not in need of the reverend sacrament.

Answer to the contrast in the beginning.

(25) The above-mentioned writings may not take away or break off this reason and decision.

(26) The sin that a man willingly has, which a man does not want to feel, and who fears God and flees as if their sins could not be forgiven, these have sins that separate them from God and put them far away.

(27) With one word I say to all that sinners are separated from God, and shall not take His law into their mouths, and that God does not regard their prayers and works that go on the head, that is, those who seek God with works, and earnestly purge their sins with devotion, fasting, prayer, mourning, mortification, 3) and other works; these God will not hear, but will turn His eyes from them. For you must purify your heart with faith, and be completely satisfied; knowing nothing else but [that] you are a sinner, and that Christ is your Savior. Your trust and faith purifies you, for it binds you to God, and makes you one spirit with God, and washes away your sin.

(28) Neither shall the scriptures (2) (of sins and works) deter thee. Cause: All suffering that the Scriptures bring, and all despising and throwing away, and all divine disfavor of God, are therefore brought against us, so that we may become wise and understanding. Of this we have an amusing text in the third 4) Book of Moses, Cap. 26, 41: I will walk against them (says God) and will surround them with enmity until their uncircumcised heart will be ashamed, then they will plead for their wickedness. Listen! God will wander against you until you recognize yourself and plead for your sin. God wants you to be aware of yourself for a short time and to pray for your sin. All punishments, disgrace, and wrath of God point to and lead to the realization or feeling and confession of your sins. Therefore, if you want to approach God and take His words into your mouth, or if you want to fast, pray and celebrate properly, you must remember, that is, find out your sin, you must feel woe and sickness, you must have a desire for God.

(29) What a physician would remember if you were sick with broken feet and came to him as a healthy person, God would also remember if you were a sinner and yet wanted to run to God with works. For as one cannot walk well

2) i. Scripture passages.

3) In the old edition: Köstigen.

4) In the original: fourth.

1) In the old edition: Iernest.

with sick feet, so a sinner cannot well or without harm come to God with works before he has attained health. This is the cause of the saying Isaiah 1, 15: I will not hear your prayer 2c. that the same sinners 1) (like our monks and priests and other holy gluttons) begin to go to God with works. For this reason Paul wrote (Rom. 4, 5.): To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that worketh unrighteousness, faith is made righteousness. If thou wilt be far from God, come with thy works and godliness; if thou wilt come near to God and be justified, come with confession of thy sins.

30 This is what Job says (13:15, 16): "I know that if I punish my ways before his face, he will be my deliverer; I know that no glorifier, no holy devourer, will come before his face.

(31) Hear this, whoever comes to or from God and returns, and realize that you need nothing else on earth if you want to receive the sacrament worthily, but that you confess your guilt and sins, that you feel your wounds. Christ [Matth. 11, 28.] says: Come to me all who are burdened. Thus saith Job [13:15, 16], I know that if I punish my ways, that is, if I feel my burdens, he shall be my deliverer.

32 But to the holy glutton, who would make himself worthy of the sacrament with good works, Christ says: I have not come to the righteous; and Job: No glorifier shall come before him. All and every one who comes with works and piety are glorifiers, for they may not be godly persons.

From this life you can know whether you received the sacrament worthily or unworthily and to your detriment. For, as Job (9:15) boldly says, "I know that I will be justified when I am judged. 2) So you may comfortingly say: I know that I will take the sacrament worthily and to my advantage, because I feel my sin and my unwillingness. But if you do not realize this in yourself, say: "Oh, that I would be angry with and against my will and sin! Item: I know that God will surely forgive my sin through the reverend Sacrament.

[Examination of the other question.]

(34) Now I shall answer the other article, thus asked: Since in the reverend sacrament of the flesh and blood of Christ there are two things, the flesh and the Word, or the bread and the promise, which is the highest, the one most concerned with it?

(35) Before I answer, let it be known that I speak with the Scriptures, and take this for one thing, which I say, the sacrament of bread, of flesh, and of blood. For Christ calls it at times bread, at times flesh, at times body.

(36) For the other thing shall be heard as one thing, which I speak, the word, promise, covenant, or promise. Neither will I forbid you that the promise or word is called a testament in some parts of the Scriptures. For this cause ye shall not hinder yourselves, though I speak a thing by many words.

37. to the third, listen how Christ instituted the sacrament Luke 22, 19.: When the Lord and his disciples were eating, Jesus took the bread, gave thanks to God, broke the bread, and gave it to the disciples, saying: Take and eat; Matth. 26, 26.: This is my body, which is given for you among yourselves. Here you have bread and promise. Bread, he took the bread, saying: This is my body. The word or promise is this comfort: Who is given for you, that is, is sacrificed, persecuted, killed. So Paul says 1 Cor. 11, 23. 24.: Our Lord Jesus, in the night, when he was delivered to the enemies, took bread, broke it, and gave it to the disciples, saying, Take and eat; this is my body, which is broken for you, and is to die, or is to perish and die.

38) For the fourth, that we may speak lately of the sacrament, note that bread, flesh, and blood are called a sign; Christ himself saith John 3:14: As Moses hath lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, and be exalted. Now the Scripture clearly says, in the fourth book of Moses, chapter 21, that Moses made a bronze serpent and set it up as a sign, so that anyone who was wounded and looked at the serpent might be healed. Since Christ himself said that he should be set up as Moses set up the bronze serpent, it follows that Christ: flesh, blood, body, or bread is a sign. To this Isaiah, on the 55th cap. [v. 13.], saying: that the Lord is called a sign, which would be eternal, and not pass away or be taken away. The other signs interpret and end in these signs of the flesh and blood, and are much removed from it, as from the old and new law; but the sign, which is the Lord Himself, will stand forever.

1) In the old edition, here and elsewhere: Gleichßner.

2) This passage in Job (also in the Vulgate) says the opposite of what is stated here.

(39) There are some who make a distinction between the flesh or bread in one part, and the sign of this sacrament in the other part, and have the word of Christ for a reason, when Christ says, Take and eat; the bread is my body. From this they draw that the eating of Christ's flesh is a sign of the worthy sacrament, and say that bread or the body or flesh of Christ without eating or using the food is not the sign. And following they say: If thou eatest not the flesh of Christ, and drinkest not his blood, that thou mayest not have the sign of the promise, or of the word, which thou heardest of the said sacrament.

(40) I do not dispute this subtlety, but I know that food is food, even though it is not pestilent, inasmuch as the things called food are prepared and used for the mouth and stomach.

41 Now Christ says John 6:55: "My flesh truly is meat, and my blood is drink. However, food never reaches its final essence until it is eaten; therefore Christ says next [v. 56]: "Whoever eats me remains in me, as if he were to speak: You must eat me if you want to be partaker of me. From this we conclude that Christ is not a sign of the sacrament of salvation, but is eaten. But if one wanted to be subtle, he would say that Christ is a sign of this sacrament, even though you do not eat or drink him, and he would turn to the text John 3:14, where Christ says: "Just as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of Man be lifted up, so that everyone who believes in the Son may not perish but have eternal life. (The Scripture calls faith a sign 1). From the words now spoken it follows that, because the sign and word of God or promise are to make a sacrament, that Christ, exalted and looked upon, is a sign, and these words "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" is the comforting promise, and that such two things make one sacrament. But I do not want to pursue subtlety begun.

(43) It is certain that some signs of the sacraments are used by touch, some by sight, and some by other senses. Circumcision you grasp, because it is done on the body, with the sense that is called grasping, as in the first book of Moses at the 17th Cap. [the] circumcision was done with hands, and made pain, and was a sign of faith; as Paul Rom. 4:11 [testifies]. The sign belonged to this promise of God, that Abraham should be multiplied and become great and many in his seed, like the stars in the sky. In the first book of Moses 15, 5. and 17, 6.

43 We also have more signs that are used with the sense called grasping. As the sacrament used for the confession and forgiveness of sins. For if a prince of the people, through error and ignorance, had acted contrary to a divine commandment and realized that he had unwittingly acted contrary to God's prohibition, he had to sacrifice a goat and lay his hand on the head of the sacrifice. After that the priest killed the sacrifice 2c. and prayed for the prince, and his act or sins were forgiven him, Deut. 4, 22-26. See, you hear that the sign, which is given for confession and forgiveness of sins, had to be touched and used with hands.

44. so the serpent (which Moses set up in the wilderness) was looked at with the eyes, used and touched, 4 Mos. 21, 8. 9.

Thus God promised the rainbow in the clouds, Genesis 9:13-16. The same rainbow could not be touched and used in any other way than with the eyes. The signs are used in various ways in the Scriptures, and one cannot know why circumcision should be a sacrament, and the signs and promises mentioned above do not make a sacrament.

46 Finally, I do not much dispute that the flesh of Christ is not a sign, if it is not partaken of and touched and understood with the mouth: but I will include this, if one sees Christ with the eyes of faith, that he has no less a sign than John 3:14, 15 is clear and evident. From this long association we have partaken of the sign of this peaceable sacrament, namely bread and drink, which is the flesh and blood of Christ.

Now follows from the promise.

47. the promise and assurance is in these words: the body given for you; the blood poured out for you, Luc. 22:19, 20.

1) In the old edition: "time look at", to which Walch has put a longer note, which does not satisfy us however quite. We believe that "time" is an error, which must be improved after 4 Mos. 21, 8. by "signs", which only fits into the context. Jäger ("Carlstadt") passes over this and other difficulties of the text.

Or, as Paul says 1 Cor. II, 24: This is my body broken for you. The word "broken for you" is the promise. For Christ certainly tells us with such words that the body (which he calls us to take and eat) has been emptied and killed for us for salvation and good. This is a gospel word that brings us a joyful and comforting message. What is more comforting and joyful for us to hear than that the body (which we are to take and eat) is to be given to us for our prosperity and redemption into death and crime? Let my will, life and mind cling to these words and not doubt that the body of Christ, which is my food, died for me.

(48) Therefore Paul says that we should proclaim the death of the Lord as often as we eat his flesh. What is proclaiming death? Saying how Christ died? No, the Jews and the gallows knights could do that. The spirit must feel and know the cause of Christ's death. He must find that Christ's death came for our redemption, that he might put our sin with him to the gallows, and die [i.e., make us die] our old wicked Adam, pay all our debt, and justify our wicked life, and at last make no evil hurt us, and his righteousness become our righteousness.

This and much more, which we read in the Holy Bible, and especially in Paul, we are to consider most heartily when we partake of the Sacrament. He who will eat this worthily must do nothing more than feel the wounds of his sins and wickedness, and firmly believe the words that the body of Christ, which he will eat, died for his sin and sickness, and that his wickedness and sin fall away and die with the death of Christ. He that hath not this faith eateth unworthily; he that hath not this remembrance, when he receiveth the bread of Christ, eateth the flesh of Christ, as the Corinthians did, who took it for the fleshly hunger and pleasure.

You must have respect for the promise; the word of God is a word of faith, and teaches you the spirit of the sacrament. Whoever does not pay attention to the promise, the sacrament is of as little use to him as the flesh of Christ, as he says John 6:63: "The flesh is not useful, but the Spirit who makes alive.

51. divine promise is a word of faith, and proclaims the fruitful spirit, which invades eager ears with comforting and evangelical message, and makes the spirit of man alive, new, righteous and spiritual, if you believe the word.

For the promise of God does not lead to salvation if one does not believe, Hebr. 4, 2. So no one can come to peace and rest his heart without faith, unless he believes, as Ps. 94 [or 95, 11] is written: Quibus juravi in ira mea, that is. I have sworn to the unbelievers that they will not enter into my rest.

(52) After these sayings I say that a sign is less than the word, and that the sign is presented because of the promise. Recently: the flesh of Christ is because of the word of God, which we have often called a promise. Cause: that Christ Himself speaks that He had to die because of the Scriptures, and thus enter into the glory of His Father, Luke at the last [Cap. 24, 26]. Thus Christ is also a Commander of His Fatherly Word, Joh. 12, 49, and God has spoken through Christ, as He has spoken through the prophets in all times, Hebr. 11, 1. 2. Therefore it follows that Christ is a sign after flesh and blood, set up because of the promise, and we are to keep and bind ourselves beforehand and more to his word than to his flesh; although this is strange and odd, yet we learn this from Scripture, especially in the Gospel of John, which cannot speak or teach untruthfully.

(53) The 9th chapter of the first book of Moses informs us that the sign is set up because of the promise, and that we are to remember it through knowledge of the signs. There [v. 9. 11.] God speaks to Noah thus: The covenant, or promise and promise, I will make and bind with you: that I will not destroy the earth with rivers of sin and water. Hear, this is the promise; see also of the sign. I will [says [v. 13.] God] set my bow in the vaults for a sign of union or promise. Behold! that the bow is a sign of the comforting promise that God will never again desolate the earth with the flow of sin, and that the bow is only a sign of divine promise.

54. Now notice what you are to learn from the sign: If I [says [v. 14. 15.] God] have covered the air with clouds, then the bow will appear in the clouds, and I will remember my promise. Follows also [v. 16.]: I will look at the bow, and remember the covenant which I have put and promised between GOD and every living soul. From these words of Genesis 9, we are to learn that we are to take nothing but certain comfort from the signs and cast out all doubt. For we are to know that God is willing to keep His promise.

and has not forgotten his word at all. That is, we are to become firm and strong in the word of God from the signs, so that God will fulfill His word without doubt and give promised comfort and help.

55. Therefore, when you drink and eat the bread, flesh and blood of Christ, you should come to the certainty that Christ will keep his words without fail, and should not doubt his salvation, but firmly believe and have no assurance, except that the flesh and blood of Christ, when you take it, will kill your sin and be a medicine for you, and for righteousness and newness of your spirit. God, who is true and mighty, considers it a great injustice and wrong if you doubt him and his word. Therefore he has set signs to the promises, that you may be the more sure, the more at peace, and the more tranquil, and that you may stand in a living Sabbath. But if any man waver in the word and in the signs, he shall be severely punished for his unbelief, and so much the more severely, that he shall believe neither signs nor words.

Thus it is said and proved that signs serve the promises and covenants of God, and the word is more than its sign. Example: fleshly circumcision is less than faith and promise.

(57) Hereafter learn how to keep the best part, that is, how to firmly believe the word of God and keep it in the heart.

58 I will teach this shortly by a history of the scriptures, which is written in the 1st book of Moses at the 32nd. Since Jacob feared his brother Esau beyond measure, he held on with full faith to the divine promise forever, if this matzo was promised to him, namely in the first book of Moses at the 28th chapter [v. 13. 14.] God said to Jacob: "The ground in which you sleep, I will give to you and your seed; your seed shall become like the dust of the ground; that is, your seed shall become as many as the grains of dust in the ground. Follow [v. 14. 15.]: And in thy seed shall all generations be given; and I will be thy keeper, and will bring thee again into the ground, and will not leave thee, having accomplished all things that I have spoken.

59) This promise and glorification of God was well known to Jacob, when he was troubled, sad and fearful with him [i.e. with himself] because of his brother Esau, and said in anguish thus [Cap. 32, 9]: "O Lord, you told me that you would do me good. [V. 12. Thou hast said that I should spread forth my seed and my seed, as the Sand of the sea that cannot be counted. [V. 10.:] I am inferior to all thy mercies, and to all thy veracity. [Deliver me from the power of my brother Esau, for I fear him greatly, lest he slay mothers and children. Jacob clung to the divine word as a ship clings to an anchor in the sea.

(60) Thus a Christian should firmly adhere to the words and promise of Christ when his brother Esau, the old Adam, and the devil and sin afflict or persecute him and make his conscience unpeaceful. When he realizes that his sins are beginning to frighten him, he should seek the sacrament that gives peace and tranquility to the spirit, and keep the word of Christ in the same way that Jacob kept the promise God made to him in his heart and mouth.

(61) The word that the body is given for you in death, and the drink is poured out for you, shall be in his heart and mouth:

022 O LORD my God, a God of all the faithful, Abraham, Isaac, 2c., thou hast said, Take and eat this bread, which is my body given for you. O Lord, in the word which thou hast spoken, that I should eat thy flesh, for it is given for me and for us all in trouble, and in fear, and in death, I trust in thee, and I charge thee with thy promise, and doubt not that thou wilt give me the fruit of thy bitter death, if I eat thy flesh; for thou hast promised this. Thou art almighty, gracious and true; thou lackest nothing, so thou afflictest no one; so thy word is yea, yea (2 Cor. 1:19, 20), not yea today, no tomorrow.

I stand and stand on your words. You have told me with such words: you want to do me good, forgive sin, provide peace, make me safe, new and spiritual. I cling to your words and cling to the promise, as Abraham clung to your promise, who did not doubt that you would give him what you had said. (Rom. 4, 20. 21.) So I rely on your promise; I do not doubt that you can and will give me salvation from sins, even though my Adam will not admit it; I advance your word to you, as Jacob advanced his divine promise to God. Thou hast said, O Lord, thou hast spoken: I am not come unto the righteous, nor unto the sound, but unto the sick, and unto sinners. And, O Lord, thou hast said, I shall eat thy flesh gladly, and drink thy blood, that thou hast given thy body to be dead for me, for my sin and wickedness, all to me. Then come I unrighteous basket, 1) I wounded sinner and unpeaceful afflicted man, and advance your words in prayer and faith.

1) If not "koth" should be read, then this expression "basket" is to be understood according to Amos 8, 1.

(64) Thou art not like the promises of men, as kings, princes, lords, and others, who promise much, and suffer not that their promise should be pressed upon them, or that they should be reminded of the promise which they have made, and that they should demand that which they have promised. No, you are another Lord, and you want your words to be in our hearts and mouths, Jos. 1, 8, that we also set our hearts and minds, will and spirit, and everything on your promise, Deut. 3, 13-17, Ps. 110 [111:7-9], and say comfortingly: Lord, you have said, you have spoken, that we should take your flesh and eat it, because you have given yourself in death for our salvation. Upon thy word my faith, comfort, and hope stand; I will not let sin or my wickedness hinder me, for thou hast said that thou wast born and died to forgive our sicknesses and sins, and to make us whole.

65. Abraham stood firm on your promise; he did not doubt that you would give him what you spoke to him, even though he knew it was impossible by nature, yet he did not pay attention to his old and dead body, and you fulfilled 1) your words; what else should I remember but your promise? What should sin and wickedness subtract from me, because Abraham's age did not subtract from your word?

(66) Jacob advanced his promise to God that He had said He would do good to Jacob and spread his seed; Jacob knew this, so he firmly believed that his wife and child would not be slain, and he reminded God of His promise, and became strong in the divine word and in his faith, so that he was allowed to argue and wrestle with God, and held God so firmly in faith that he would not let God go until it was good for him. In such faith and constant adherence to the divine promise, Jacob was transformed in nature and name, for the Scriptures say (Gen. 32:28): "You must be called Israel, for you were strong against God, and how much more did you become strong against men.

(67) Is it not comforting that a firm attachment and faith in the divine Word can hold and overcome God? We should be more comforted by this than by heaven and earth; it should be our foundation. It is impossible for anyone to perish who firmly believes in the divine promise. As little as God can lie, so little can He let you perish if you hang firm, strong and manly in His promise. It is impossible that God

1) In the original: fulfill.

I do not want to leave a person who persists in such trust. Everything must be good for him, and better than man understands. In the firm and earnest adherence to the word of God stands all blessedness. Again, in unbelief stands all loss and harm, and all unworthy reception of the Sacrament, which Christ himself says in John 3:18: "He who believes is not condemned; he who does not believe is already lost. God cannot leave you any less than he left Jacob, if you, like Jacob, cling strongly and steadfastly to divine promise.

(68) So also one comes into true peace, and all bitterness is made sweet to him, and adversity is made kind, and evil is turned into good, as happened to Jacob, Gen 33:3: Jacob prayed seven times, and so long until his Esau, that is, his enemy and persecutor, drew near. What happened? When Jacob clung to the divine promise with faith and prayer, his persecutor and enemy Esau turned into a benefactor and friend; for Esau fell around Jacob's neck, pressed him kindly, and kissed him, and wept, and wanted to give Jacob his possessions and goods. So all evil turned to good, all mischief 2) and strife to goodness, peace and quiet. This happens to all those who steadfastly and firmly stand on the divine promise.

In such faith Moses says (in the other book, chapter 14, v. 13, 14): "Stand and see the great miracles of God and do not be afraid, for you will no longer see the Egyptians whom you see now: GOD who will contend for you, and ye shall be silent. Stand firm on the promise of God, do not be afraid, do not doubt His promise; for before His words should remain unfulfilled, heaven and earth must be broken. So the sea also became obedient, and was divided, and gave place and way to the faithful, and destroyed the Egyptians, which are our sin.

(70) It is the same with the reception of the joyful sacrament. He who wants to receive it worthily should not be afraid, that is, he should not doubt that Christ will fulfill his promise. And let not the Egyptians deter him from the divine word, that is, his evil deeds and sin, which fight against God. For God is the one who contends, the one who strangles sins; we stand still and silent, and find in the forgiveness of sins even worklessness. Cause: When God wants to work His great and wonderful works, we must do nothing more than to

2) i.e. quarrel, strife.

We turn our eyes to God and stand in good confidence when Jehoshaphat (in the 2nd book of Chronicles, chapter 20, v. 20) says: "Stand alone in comfort and strong confidence in God, and you will see divine help upon you; believe God, and you will be safe.

(71) This is what Moses says: Be silent; God is the one who contends. We must not be concerned whether we have prayed much, fasted, swept and searched churches, burned lights, and done such works, if we want to receive the holy sacrament; for we must be silent with our ears and feet, as it is written: "When you enter God's house, keep your feet and listen. (Eccl. 4, 17.) That is, we must not appear with any work, for if works should befall us and make us worthy recipients, God would not be the one who alone warred for us and killed the Egyptians. If I want to take the sacrament, I should do nothing else but believe the divine word that Christ gave and shed his flesh and blood for us in death, and that he gave us his flesh as food and his blood as drink for a sure sign: if I believe this, I will be sure, if I otherwise stand in divine promise with all confidence, that I will see the Egyptians no more; that is, my sins will no longer challenge me and make me miserable.

Thus I find his help and beneficence. In my person I need feel nothing more than manly, brave and firm faith.

and trust in God, that He will not forsake me, for one; for the other, I shall feel no strength, no health, no ability, no good work, and no piety, which I shall carry to the holy sacrament, but I shall see my nothingness, powerlessness, wickedness, and sin for that same banquet 1). As Jehoshaphat said [2 Chron. 20, 12.]; there is no strength in us to overcome the enemies that are our sins. So we see our weakness and Egypt, and flee to this sacrament, which strikes them all down and makes them drink, and makes us alive, gives strength and work, and makes us Esau, who gives us his possessions and goods, Gen. 33, 15. as the Gentiles gave tribute to the Jews. Jos. 16, 10. book of Judges 1, 28. 30. 33. 35. cap. 3, 3.

(73) Thus we have concluded that a worthy recipient has no need of anything other than to feel the wounds of his sins, to look upon his Esau, the Egyptians, or other offenders, and to stand alone chivalrous and manly, [placing his confidence] in divine promise, then God can by no means abandon him. He keeps GOD, and turns his enemies into servants, as said above. We have also heard that in the sacraments the word is more than the sign, and that the signs remind us that God wants to remember His promise and keep faith, not to let us perish in any way or temptation. May God help us through our Lord Jesus Christ! Amen.

1) In the old edition: times.

2. Carlstadt's writing against the old and new papist masses.

About September 1524.

Dear Brother N.! Since you have asked me to write you something about the German masses, especially about the new findings and additions 2c., I am willing to serve you, not only in this, but also in other matters. Accordingly, I will answer your article recently, and thus say to the first:

2 It is necessary, not only right, that in the churches of our German lands they read and preach in the German tongue, and make known other things taught by Christ. For all those who are converted should be corrected from this and know whether God's word is preached to them or not; this you have 1 Cor. 14. Paul has this reason from Moses, who said how some should read the benediction on God's servants, and some the cursing of God against the devil's limbs, and all the people should say Amen to it; as you can hear from the fifth book of Moses on the 27th and from other oertens of Moses.

3 The people could not say amen to the words of the magistrate if they did not hear the speaker speak in a familiar tongue. Therefore it is necessary that all things in the church be presented to the people in their own language. So everyone should put his prayers and all things in the church and

2) In the old edition: aside.

The only thing they hear is what they pretend to hear, and they hear the speaker or preacher as if he were judging or judging them. For this reason Paul says: "One or two speak, the others recognize" 2c. 1 Cor. 14, 29.

4 For the other, we see that some confirm the old error with the German tongue, 1) and fortify the poor unintelligent people in their error. For they soon speak: Now I have heard the mass correctly when German lessons have been read to them. This is what those do who call the Lord's Supper a sacrifice with words, or works and deeds.

5 Our poor surrounding priests mend their ways in this way. They read the epistle and gospel to the ignorant people in German, which in itself is blameless, but at the same time they say that Christ is a sacrifice in the holy mass. As a Christian, you can judge what an abominable sin this is. I have discovered it for my part in a booklet about the priesthood and sacrifice of Christ, and I also hope that you will not allow your pastor to execute our Savior Jesus Christ as an executioner would an evildoer, for his iniquity would also affect you as a grantor, Rom. 1.

(6) Some say and write and preach that Christ is not a sacrifice, and no less use the word mass, and may call the Lord's Supper a mass; which is the same as if I said publicly: The N. is a pious man, he steals from no one what is his; and yet call him 2) a thief or robber. Reason: this word mass is not German nor Latin, but Hebrew, and means in good German a free willing sacrifice.

(7) How well then it behooves Christians to call Christ in the sacrament, or the sacrament in which Christ is to be, a mass, I give you to know, because so much is said: Christ has not suffered enough at once; Christ is still mortal; Christ must be martyred in the mass for our sin. Item, Christ's sacrifice was so small that a poor, stinking, unclean, evil priest could offer it; which sacrifice no one could offer but he himself, Christ, the most high and pure priest. See in the epistle to the Hebrews the fourth, fifth, eighth, ninth and tenth chapters, and read them diligently and meditatively, and you will well understand what an abominable sacrilege it is for a sinful man to sacrifice Christ.

8. it is much worse to say that Christ is a sacrifice when a priest performs mass, than to say that Christ's suffering was insufficient. Because from such a saying or speech it follows that Christ's sacrifice has been and still is impure, guilty, sinful, defiled, insufficient, unintelligent, self-willed, disobedient, as the lukewarm priest and wicked of God, who submits to sacrifice Christ's body and blood. If the above chapters are not considered, all kinds of such abominations follow, and it becomes clear that the name of Messiah, against Christ's suffering, sacrifice and glory, is now attributed to Christ. In this, D. Martinus errs exceedingly, and the poor bishop of Zwickau, 3) who in this case has a papal sanctity, that he calls the Lord's Supper a Mass.

9) These also confirm their name 4) with their deed and manner, and confess that Christ is a sacrifice in the mass, although they grind their pen differently; that is, they lift up the hosts, likewise the chalice, and indicate by such lifting up that the one whom they lift up is still a sacrifice, that also their bread and wine is a sacrifice; for this manner is founded in the old law, and also has its origin and discovery there.

(10) In the Old Law, God commanded that the Jews bring sheaves and other things to their priests, which the priests lifted up and brought down, and by such lifting up and bringing down offered to God such things as you read in the third book of Mosiah on the eighth, ninth, tenth, fourteenth, twenty-third [chapters, and] in the fourth book of Mosiah on the sixteenth.

This annulment or sacrifice is called Thruma in Hebrew. Thus the priests abolish the sacrament and put it down in the mass, and set themselves without appointment as convenient priests of the angelic sacrifice, which Christ alone could offer, and therefore take the place of the avengers, executioners and murderers of Christ.

12) There was also another lifting of the sacrificed things, which is called Thnupha in Hebrew, when the sacrifices were woven or lifted to the right and left, in front of and behind them, as they now move the sacrament in the days of Corporis Christi and thus again indicate that Christ is a sacrifice, and speak that the stinking faithless priests could sacrifice to God, and that thus the newly sacrificed Christ forgives sin. But this still goes

1) Old edition: bestäten.

2) In the original: bannest.

3) This refers to Nicolaus Hausmann, whom Luther often calls Episcopus Cygnensis. De Wette, Vol. II, 572. He had to deal with the Zwickau prophets.

4) Abname perhaps as much as mocking name. Should this be correct, Carlstadt means: The name "new papists" they confirm with their That 2c.

now somewhat less and more than the mass. But both are against God's honor and a confession of their unbelief, that they also esteem Christ less than the unbelieving Turks esteem him.

(13) In the first statement, the whole of Wittenberg is in error, but they say that they do not mean it that way, and boast that they are so highly exempt from the law that they may also pervert God's word and interpret it differently than God has interpreted his word and way; but how Christian this is, you must judge. You know that Christ did none of these things, that he did not break the law, but fulfilled it; that we may also judge the Wittenbergers according to the law of God and call them wrong, if they pervert the work of the law or do it unjustly, because, where they allowed themselves to be circumcised, we did not rightly call them circumcised Jews? even if they snorted and roared about it. So, I say, they may abolish the sacrament, so we may speak or write of them that they offer Christ, because God has assigned and measured the abolition to the sacrifices.

14 Since they protested that they did not call Christ a sacrifice, and yet sacrificed him by lifting him up or by wrapping him around themselves, you know what a protestation is that is made against substantiam actus. God almost blinded them because of this will of courage and let them fall into many horrible errors.

15. do you as a chivalrous Christian, and also burden the driving, which has a color end-Christian way; fear God, and not men. The time of our life is short, and eternity is approaching. You must remain eternally either in God's wrath and punishment, or grace and joy.

(16) Now some find a new way, who turn to the people, and read the words which Christ spake 2c.; in the other hand they have the sacrament, and say: Take, eat 2c., and take it up: which is ever so devilish and evil as the old custom. Cause: Their abrogation is like the old abrogation, and is as abominable as the old, and has all the vices that the old had, and is more mocking, in that they say to the people, Take, eat, and refuse them the bread; and when they have said, Take away the bread, they say, Take away the bread: And when they have said, Take the bread, and offer it to them, they soon turn back, fearing that one will take that which they have offered, and lay aside the bread. So much so that they promise and do not keep their promises.

(17) If we had kept Christ's order strictly, and considered Christ wise and prudent enough to have instituted and ordained his supper in the very best way, we would not have fallen into so many errors. So also of the

The bread of the Lord is food, and his cup is drink, so that we may use everything in remembrance of him, just as the apostles and their brethren did.

018 To whom did Christ command that he should lift up his supper on high, and show it to the people? But if Christ has not commanded it, how are they so bold as to take hold of such a great prince and lord in his order? Could they tolerate such sacrilege to their statutes? when they have neither redeemed us nor reconciled us to God. I must not teach you how the gospels speak of the custom of the Lord's bread and cup; for the text is in itself light, clear and bright enough. Matthew Cap. 26, Marcus Cap. 14, Lucas Cap. 22, Paul 1 Cor. 11, the other apostles in the stories of the apostles Cap. 2, 46. 20, 11. 27, 35.

19 A communion is called a meal, but a meal is put into the mouth. If it is food or drink, which one eats or drinks in remembrance of another, then you must keep it in remembrance. Now Christ has given us his bread and cup to eat, that we should remember him as one who gave his soul for us, putting himself into the hands of the executioners and devils who bound us and led us to death, as you have heard and know well.

20 In this way and in no other must we take and enjoy the bread and cup of the Lord Christ. He that would do better, what doth he but teach and instruct Christ, and despise the wisdom of Christ? You can take this up with you: Behold, if ye had made an order, and there came a poor peasant to mend your order, could ye suffer it without vexation? Or would you not take it for granted that the peasant wanted to be much wiser than you?

21 But is it not true that Paul says Rom. 8, 6. 7.: "The wisdom of the flesh is an enmity against God, and the death of man"? Truly, truly, all our reason, understanding and wisdom in divine matters is our death, for it is against God and cannot be subject to God. Because our wisdom promises God's wisdom and makes God a fool in all the things that our wisdom finds when it wants to serve God better than God has appointed, as you have heard from the above examples. How well the wise man said: "You shall not follow or trust in your wisdom", Proverbs [3, 7]. Item, Paul: "You should not be wise among yourselves", Rom. 12, 17.

22 You know what Peter heard from Christ, when he wanted to do better than Christ told him, Matthew 16:23. Did not Christ say, "You Satan!" only because he was wise according to his flesh and blood? Now no reason could have punished Peter.

How constant and true is this speech of Isaiah 55:8: "My thoughts are not like yours, and my ways are not like your ways. For God's ways stand, but our ways are as slipperiness in the darkness, Jer. 23, 12. He who stands on his thoughts and ways stands, as he who walks in the darkness on a glue-covered, wet and slippery mountain. That is why God has cast down everything that we or others find. Nothing is good before Him but His own alone. All other things must be rooted out, since Christ says: "Every plant that my heavenly Father has not planted must be rooted out," Matth. 15, 13. and speaks the same against human fables or teachings, saying: "Behold, the people want to honor me with the teachings of men, but their heart is far from me. Truly far from me, for it despises divine wisdom, even though the splendor seems good and divine.

24. God must have recognized our recklessness long ago and broken it by forbidding it when He said to the Jews, "If you are in the Gentiles, you are in the Jews.

When ye come into the land, and behold good and hard service, which they do unto their gods, ye shall by no means do so as they do," Deut. 12:29 ff. This is what is said: You shall not let the splendor, nor the hardness of divine service, nor anything move you to serve me differently than I commanded you.

The Gentiles had a harder service of God than the Jews, and burned their children in praise of their gods; but the Jews were not allowed to do this, Deut. 18:10. Therefore neither holiness nor hardness nor anything else must be regarded as God's order.

Therefore it is truly diabolical when you write and say that men are so defiant and foolhardy that they want to destroy the order of our Lord Jesus Christ and order his service better than Christ has ordered it for them. All of them are also fragile 1) in Christ.

(27) If you do not take the Lord's supper at all, I advise you to do so; but if you want to have the Lord's supper, keep it in the order of Christ, which is light and bright and does not need my interpretation.

028 If ye be not satisfied, write unto me your infirmities. For I am willing to serve you?

1) brittle - one who breaks his word, hence: unfaithful.

3. Carlstadt's Dialogus oder Gesprächbüchlein von dem greulichen abgöttischen Missbrauch des hochwürdigen Sacraments JEsu Christi.

Perhaps in August*) 1524.

I wish all believers in Christ God's grace and knowledge.

1) Let no one think, dear brothers, that I am writing of the anti-Christian custom of the most reverend Sacrament in an unheard-of way out of spite and impudence: although I know for certain that the greatest part will respect that I have sought nothing but innovation and strangeness, because this work of mine is set against so many thousands of Christian scholars. Especially since the princes of the high scholars and the scribes have rejected the old papist abuse.

2) Yellowness - yellow-beakedness. Cf. De Wette, Vol. II, p. 381.

The common man runs after them and dances up and down to their whistles, and considers everything they hear from the scribes to be a reason for righteousness, and that they do right everywhere when they follow the same highly learned preachers, or jump after them, or echo them and say yes and amen to all their advice.

(2) But if the bound consciences would cast off some cords, and let the persons and worldly men trot by, and hold to the truth, and think that it is unseemly and unrighteous to direct the truth according to the larvae of men, or to judge the Scriptures according to the likeness of men, they would no longer rely on the arm of man for it.

*) This approximate timing is given by us because this booklet is already mentioned in the sixth paragraph of the paper No. 3 in this volume, which is probably to be set in September.

but on the unconfessed grounds of truth, and obtain an everlasting peace, and drink a drink of the water which Christ giveth, which satisfieth them wholly, and bringeth them unto everlasting life. 1) This I desire, that the truth may be earnestly regarded. I am also without any doubt that many would remember better and receive the named sacrament more worthily than it is therefore received.

3. If you, brothers, could also take to heart 2) how divine love, together with faith, hope and trust in God, cut itself off and, through the misuse of all outward well-meant signs, perish and become nothing, everyone would say: that I was neither invited and brought to this work by folly, nor innovation, nor self-glory, nor anything else, but only this, that through the false custom of the Sacrament, the love of God has gone out, faith has been prevented, and the consciences have been caught with horrible insanity, which they wanted to fortify in God's love and faith through the old custom and make them free of all fears.

God understands all things better than we do, how skillful one is or can become. That is why He often abolished and completely forbade the custom of external things, which He Himself had instituted; because He saw how the simple were offended by them out of ignorance. So God promised sacrifice, fire, smoke, the Temple, the serpent and the ark 3) and said: "Why do I ask for your sacrifice, for your incense? what is it that you say: the Temple of God, the Temple of God, the Temple of God? You shall call the ark no more. Ezekiel took away the erected serpent and broke it because of the abuse, which was also disregarded, that God Himself had erected it and that it was a special sign of the body of Christ, which was to be given into the hands of the wicked to the cross.

5 What do you think, brothers, that we should do? We, who see so many abominable abuses of the reverend Sacrament? We, who understand how the wretched and blind Christians act and behave with the Sacrament in such a way that they fall into the error of believing that Christ suffered for our sin in the Host, or,

1) So put by us instead of: jumpet.

2) In the old edition: "können", "the faith", "well-meant". This last word will probably mean: m good opinion applied. It would be possible, however, that "wohlgenenneten" i.e. "blessed" should be read, because Carlstadt translates, as we see later in this dialogue, benedicere by: wohlsagen.

3) arca - the Ark of the Covenant.

That Christ washes away and forgives our sins in the Host, or that Christ remains with us forever in the Sacrament? We, who see that some make more boast of the Sacrament than of Christ's suffered death?

6. my matter will seem new to you. But I will present the truth to you as if I were to present it before the eyes of God and the strict judgment seat. Therefore I admonish you in your duty of oath that you look neither to me nor to anyone else, but to the reasons of my booklet, and that you measure the truth in itself seriously and wittily.

(7) You must not think that I am scandalizing you or making fun of you, because I have made a booklet of discussions. I am very concerned about your blessedness, and I have been very serious about this matter, and I have called the people who discuss it together brevity for half of this sacramental act, because the arguments can be made shorter in a discussion than in a single speech. Therefore, you should know that I have sought brevity and your benefit, and first of all God's glory and honor, and not mockery or pleasure.

8. it behooves you to put diligence on each one's foundation and to ask God to protect and keep us from all kinds of his dishonor, which is mostly in the wrong mind and will against God, by his known truth. 4. Amen.

Sub-speakers: Gemser, 5) Victus, and Peter, a layman.

Gemser. Dear Brother Victe, why are you so sad?

Victus. What is the use of my complaining to you? You cannot help me.

Gemser. Do you not know that it is written: Ad aliquem sanctorum convertere, you should call upon a saint in times of need?

Victus. This was said by one who was a companion like you, who also wanted to make the afflicted Job flee from God to the creatures. I also think you are more cunning than he, for your counsel is as if I should flee to you as to a saint.

Gemser. What's the harm?

4) So put by us instead of: transfigured.

5) "Gemser", a papist; the name probably refers to Emser. Carlstadt introduces himself under "Victus". But soon the layman "Peter" takes his place and overcomes Gemser. But, as we see from Luther's writing "Against the Heavenly Prophets", especially from § 62 of the second part, Luther's teaching is also condemned by Carlstadt in the person of "Gemser".

Victus. Much; for you are drowned in the sacramental doctrines and consider that a health, which to me is a disease and horrible ulcer.

Gemser. I smell that you doubt the sacraments.

Victus. You have seen my ulcer.

Gemser. We have seven sacraments; which one are you distressed about?

Victus. I do not know about one, nor about seven sacraments.

Gemser. Oho!

Victus. I do not know what kind of word the word sacrament is, much less what it means; therefore it is possible that I am mistaken and straying when Aristotle says: Ignorantes virtutes vocabulorum, defacile 1) etc..

Gemser. Sacrament is a Latin word, not Greek; but the Jews say it is a Hebrew word and in German means a false, lying image. Seker in their language means false, untruthful and useless. Ment is supposed to be an image far away.

Victus. I thought you were a patron of the sacraments, so you are a scoffer.

Gemser. I have told you what the Jews think of the word sacrament and wanted to tell you what it means in Latin, so you fall into my speech as a peasant and want to shame me.

Victus. Your speech and gestures of your face seem as if your mind is of one mind with the Jews.

Gemser. Protect and keep me God!

Victus. But what does the word sacrament mean?

Gemser. Sacramentum is a Latin word and means in good German a sign of a holy thing, as the master of high senses teaches and speaks: Sacramentum est sacrae rei signum. For when the Latin speak: Hoc est sacramentum militare, hoc est castrense; nihil ad propositum.

Victus. You are a master of high senses, who disregard God's word, to whom God also does not reveal many things; whom God also hates and corrupts their senses and wisdom. I want to have a right, clear biblical word.

Gemser. Hoc sacramentum magnum est. [Eph. 5, 32.]

Victus. Rhyme yourself, wolfsbane, to ^den(s) foot! You know that our old translation has a lot of fictitious words, which are similar to the Greek and the Hebrew are inappropriate, that also the sentence of our Latin Bible is at times unruly with the original tongue, therefore you would not reject me with bad words, you must lead me in the tongues, as Jerome teaches.

Gemser. The Christian church uses the word.

Victus. Therefore, I want to know where the word Sacrament has a reason in the Word in which the Church lives, and therefore I want to have a divine and true reason.

Gemser. We have seven sacraments, among which one is the highest and most excellent, the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ.

Victus. God has a pleasure in His words, as the prophet Nehemiah says; therefore tell me: whether God, or a prophet, or apostles have used the word sacrament in the things you call sacraments? God gives His creatures their own names.

Gemser. God brought all animals to Adam and let them be called by Adam.

Victus. Therefore, will you give the church this power, that it may call history and practice, as Adam did the animals?

Gemser. Well and truly.

Victus. Uneven and wrong, because too slow.

Gemser. How so, slowly?

Victus. Christ and the apostles gave names to baptism and communion much earlier than the church of high senses came to earth. You have missed out and were born too late.

Gemser. We have the power that Adam had.

Victus. So I hear that you have power to call that which is white black, that which is evil good, and to punish Christ and his apostles, as you did some hundred years ago, when Adam neither received nor ever used such power.

Gemser. Propter bonum sensum.

Victus. Thus the apostles and Christ would have had an evil mind and spirit; nor would the apostles and Christ have been wise enough to give proper names to the things which you call sacraments.

Gemser. I realize that the names annoy you.

Victus. Not for my sake, but for the sake of the sick and the weak, if you lead them onto the slippery ice with such words and prevent them from continuing and coming to God. One thing must follow the other: Either that Christ has not been wise enough, or that he has not been good enough, since he has not been

1) defacile. This is how it reads in the autotype [original print].

Whether it should'd be called difficile or de facili, or still differently, one cannot decide from it. (Walch.)

The Lord's Supper was instituted and not left behind, so that his bread and cup should be called a sacrament or a sign of holy things. Although in good sense it would be permissible to call baptism, bread and wine signs of things, as the apostles figured them in times past, Rom. 6. 1 Cor. 10. If you papists would leave such an interpretation, it would be without danger.

Gemser. You have discovered your disease.

Victus. Let's hear it!

Gemser. You are distressed because of the Most High Sacrament.

Victus. If you hit me, I will scream.

Gemser. Are you concerned whether Christ is in the sacrament after mankind?

Victus. You have guessed it. For to ask whether Christ is there or thereabouts according to the Godhead is to ask whether Christ is in all creatures according to his Godhead, which is foolish, for God is in hell as in heaven, and fills all creatures.

Gemser. That is why I spoke of the humanity of Christ.

Victus. I truly doubt whether the body of Christ is in the bread, and his blood in the cup.

Gemser. Why?

Victus. Therefore, they say that his natural body, which was conceived in the womb and then crucified, should be as large, wide, thick and long in the sacrament as he hung on the cross.

Gemser. Oportet credere, one must believe.

Victus. Maledictus, qui credit verbis mendacii, cursed is he who believes lies.

Gemser. This is the truth that Christ is as great in the Sacrament as He was when He hung on the Cross.

Victus. I know nothing of the truth, and cannot believe it, you show me God's truthful speeches, which indicate this freely and brightly.

Gemser. You have not been a priest. For the priests have some words (which they call verba consecrationis) which are so powerful that they bring the body and blood of Christ down from high heaven to earth in a little host; if you understood such speech, you would speak more wittily.

Victus. You pretend many things to me, since I should ask you about them. One is this: You say that the priests or monks bring down the body and blood of Christ from heaven, which is contrary to your previous speech and stands when you said: Christ is as great in the sacrament as he hung on the cross. Therefore, 1) you should have brought Christ from

He was brought to the cross in the sacrament when he died and shed blood. In heaven Christ was not formed, nor extended, when he was on the cross; therefore one must be false. For the other, you report some words which you call verba consecrationis 2c., I have not read about them. I also think that the priests invented them. For the third, you speak of a host. Explain this article to me.

Gemser. Host is a bread which the priests consecrate and bring Christ in.

Victus. But I can not understand it.

Gemser. The priests make the bread into nothing, leaving only the form of the bread, and in the same form, instead of the bread, they put the body of Christ.

Victus. So I hear, it is not sacramentum, but fermentum Pharisaeorum; because the shape of the bread remains ever so small .and so large, so thick, and everywhere as before, before the priests breathe over it, or blow and cackle as the geese. Therefore I ask: whether Christ's body, arm, breast, thigh and bone, crown of thorns, nails and spear, are in the bread, which is smaller than Christ's little finger was?

Gemser. Yes.

Victus. Must he then shrink and curl up when the clergy blow out such words.

Gemser. What can you do?

Victus. I have doubts, that's why I'm asking.

Gemser. You should not scold.

Victus. I don't know any other words to use for it.

Gemser. One should not investigate.

Victus. So say you priests, when you are quite uncertain of your things. But I consider it (if it were true what you say), 2) that one should investigate and search the Scriptures, which bear witness of our Lord Christ, because the Scriptures praised the Thessalonians for investigating. For if the Scriptures tell of other things of Christ and teach us how Christ was miraculously conceived by the Holy Spirit in the womb, how he lived and spoke, suffered and died, rose again and ascended into heaven, the Scriptures should also tell how Christ is in the sacrament, which is as miraculous as any of the articles told.

Gemser. As I go, says Christ, you know nothing about it.

Victus. Bock 3) you, you bump.

1) In the old edition: müssest.

2) These brackets are set by us.

3) "Bock" is here from Carlstadt, because of the mockery" called "Bock Emser", set for "bend".

Gemser. Isn't it proper ?

Victus. Like this speech, that one should preach until the carved, cast, or painted idols run out of the church, that one should not lay a hand on them before.

Gemser. You don't have to do research on such things.

Victus. Why then does the truth say: Search the scriptures! and in another place thus: My sheep hear my voice, but the voice of the stranger they hear not; and thus: Ye shall not hear the word of false prophets, but the word of God shall we search day and night? You have never said this to any stone or wood, that Christ was in the host when he was on the cross.

Gemser. Christ's body is so great in the host when he hung on the cross.

Victus. You sing your song like a raven, but I cannot believe it yet. I would rather believe that Christ's body is as small in the host as he is born or conceived; but I believe none, unless you put the word of faith before me; otherwise, if I had to believe your wind, my cause would be worse than a reed's cause.

Gemser. Why?

Victus. A reed has only 12 or 24 winds blowing on it; but I would have to suffer as many winds as there are heads if I were to listen to and believe every priest.

Gemser. He who does not believe is condemned.

Victus. Cry out over your neck. I believe in Christ, in his suffering and all his words; but he who does not believe in Christ is condemned. Show me Christ's word, or a letter of faith from the Bible, that Christ's body is in a small host; and see if I do not believe!

Gemser. You are bound by the Bible.

Victus. I seek God in the Bible, and not Scripture in the Scriptures.

Gemser. What is the purpose of [the] Scripture for you?

Victus. To a testimony of truth.

Gemser. Let us speak Greek, Jewish and Latin.

Victus. Do you know these tongues?

Gemser. In the emergency.

Victus. What need is there?

Gemser. Do you not see the farmer standing behind us, diligently taking in and measuring all our words and speech?

Victus. Is it evil?

Gemser. So evil that the laymen of all first in

The people of the country would come to their Christian freedom and would not give a penny more to a priest for the sake of a sacrament.

Victus. So I hear you have something in your quiver that you could and should pour out.

Gemser. I am not scolding you, for you see that God now reveals to the simple some things that He hides from the wise.

Victus. Do you want to hinder God's power?

Gemser. egg, so no! But I wanted to keep my honor and supreme place.

Victus. Teach me, I will be silent like a water mill.

Gemser. One has understood this text Hoc est corpus W6um a long time thus: The bread is my body; as if it had been written: Hoc panis est corpus meum, which the Latin language does not suffer.

Victus. Is this not the text so that the priests, the new and old papists, want to lap and mend, cover and hide, and maintain that Christ's body is in the bread and his blood in the chalice?

Gemser. You hit it.

Victus. Did you cover yourselves with a shawl?

Gemser. Don't scold me, so I will tell you miracles.

Victus. You are a scribe.

Gemser. I scoff.

Victus. You cannot step back.

Gemser. How so?

Victus. This verse: Hoc est corpus meum, quod pro vobis traditur, is a fully adequate verse, which Christ placed alone in the gospels, although with different words, since he spoke nothing of the sacrament, as Matth. 16, Joh. 3, 6.

Gemser. Prove it!

Victus. Obviously 1) , because the pronoun Hoc has a capital 8. But a capital letter means a beginning of a new sentence and verse. Accordingly, this verse is placed in the speech of the Lord's bread, as one tends to add something that serves to the speech or sermon and yet is a fully adequate speech for itself.

Gemser. But what is the purpose of this verse?

Victus. To whom the disciples learned what their memorial should be, and whom the Lord commanded to eat his bread.

Gemser: But where did Christ say about his body, which he would give and has now given for us?

1) In the original: dissolute.

Victus. In all the prophets and gospels in which his suffering is written.

Gemser. It does not sound.

Victus. The old violin, and the pope's laws and customs, and your honor have filled your ears with creaturely sounds, therefore it does not sound to you. But unstop thine ears, and stop thine ears, and naked ears, unto the words of God, and see if they sound not unto thee, which I have now told thee.

Gemser. It's hard to leave old habit and own honor.

Victus. That is why the path to the Kingdom of Heaven is narrow and bitter.

Gemser. Since you have begun, continue.

Victus. I should learn from you.

Gemser. Drive on!

Victus. The Greek tongue serves this division and also the perfection of the verse, that it is a special verse; because the Greek writing and speech has this verse: Hoc est corpus sto. with punctuation and letters, and better than the Latin.

Gemser. Vide, quomodo omnia rusticus ille perpendit.

Victus. You shall search and read, but I will listen.

Gemser. Τούτο ἐστὶν τὸ σῶμά μου.

Victus. Interpret these words.

Gemser. Istud est hoc corpus meum, quod pro vobis etc..

Victus. I want you to tell me in German.

Gemser. But do you not see how this farmer opens his mouth and acts as if he wants to eat all our speech?

Victus. That is why you should speak German.

Gemser. It is not good that we reveal these things to the laity. For first of all, the peasants will be considered as much as the priests.

Victus. It does not harm me, nor you. I will be your guarantor that the godly man would love you because of the truth; without that you should confess God's justice, even with your harm, yes, even with your death.

Gemser. In such hope I say that I wanted to translate it thus: Tuto is the body of mine, which 2c. And it would be good, that one would have left the Greek pronoun and mixed it into the Latin.

Victus. Why?

Gemser. That one would have read thus: Tuto est hoc corpus meum.

Victus. I ask: Why?

Gemser. So people would have thought: What is the little word Victus. But it would not have been unhelpful to the priests.

Gemser. The better it would be.

Victus. You always want to go the way of the monk.

Gemser. Mock!

Victus. For reasons, because it would have been a question or delusion that a thing had been called, and the same must have been the body of Christ.

Gemser. What would be the point?

Victus. Much; for you priests would have persuaded us laymen that Christ had, I know not what, in the evening, and had changed his body therein, whereon we had hanged silver and gold.

Gemser. You should not believe that.

Victus. Do not believe? I hear what you have made of the chalice, and how you say that you must have goblets of gold and silver, and lure our silver and gold from our bags.

-Gemser. I wanted to have given notice for my person gem and to have known that luto is a Greek pronoun.

Victus. Who knows what you would have done if the old mothers had brought pennies and guilders?

Gemser. I am too pious.

Victus. But the stingy and fools would have actually made a silver or golden box out of the little word.

Gemser. It would have been a fine speech: the body is mine, as the evangelists all say.

Victus. But what do you understand from the Greek lectionary, and what is it in German?

Gemser. Tuto est to soma mu 2c.

Victus. Speak German!

Gemser. The peasant will notice, quia verba sunt apertissime contra nos sacerdotes.

Peter, [a] layman. 1) Dear sirs! With leave that I speak! Do not resent me for asking, for I understand that you are talking about the body and blood, bread and cup of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Gemser. Prius, o Victe, dixi de rustico, quod audiret et ruminaret verba nostra.

Victus. What harm does it do?

Peter. Gentlemen, I notice that you are quarreling over a word that is not too familiar to me.

Victus. Therefore you, Gemser, shall speak German and say what is said in German: Τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ σῶμά μου, τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν διδόμενον. [Luc. 22, 19.] Peter. This also I desire fervently.

Gemser. Is the body of mine, which is given for you.

Peter. That is a strange language.

Victus. Truly a mixed language.

Peter. I want to ask and hear if I would like to become more understanding from you.

Gemser. 1) If it were written like this, or interpreted like this:

If the body is mine 2c.

it would probably stand.

Victus. How? if some had come who would soon have said that a golden loaf had been made when you made the word calix into a golden drinking vessel?

Peter. Gentlemen! Speak more intelligibly, and hat German; for although I understand you in part, I do not understand you completely.

Gemser. In good German the Greek tongue reads thus: This is the body mine, which gave for you 2c. But it seems to me that it would be better to let the pronoun stand than I said.

Peter. But it would read strangely.

Gemser. Every language or tongue has something of its own, which cannot be interpreted into other tongues; and if someone wants to speak of a property of foreign languages, he must use the words of the same foreign tongue; therefore we have many Latin words in our offices. So also now we have fallen into the Latin and Greek language, and are to tell you idiots about the hidden content and sound of both tongues; therefore we have to talk to you by Latin and Greek words.

Peter. Go ahead! Who knows if I would like to memorize something. I have ever been struck on the hand with the Greek, Hebrew and Latin tablets, and have learned less than I have forgotten.

Gemser. Do you understand us? You are unfavorable and ugly to us.

Peter. Speak for yourself.

Gemser. The Greek tongue has articulos and pronouns that teach the genera nominum, and instruct that one can certainly see which word is entitled to the article or pronoun and which is not.

Peter. This wants to be good! talk forder.

Gemser. Τοῦτο is a Greek pronoun indicating a neuter name. Now the word Latin panis, in German Brod, is masculinum; therefore the pronoun Τοῦτο cannot be added to it, nor can the opinion does not consist of those who say: The bread is the body 2c. For the Greek language does not suffer it, as little it would be suitable in Latin, if I wanted to say: Istud panis est hoc corpus meum, or in German: The bread is my body.

1) Here the old original print says Peter, which is an oversight.

Peter. That's good.

Gemser. Do you like it?

Peter. Well, because for a long time I could not find out how it would be possible that the bread should have become the body of Christ. I have always estimated it in the way that Christ pointed to his body and thus said: This is the body of mine, which is given for you. For Christ did not point to the bread, nor did he say, "The bread is my body, which is given for you. But they that say that the bread is the body, speak from their own selves, and lie, or make their wills very small. Listen: Jesus took the bread, and gave thanks to God, and broke it, and gave it to his disciples, saying that they should eat it in remembrance of him, and in the midst of his word he set forth the cause and manner of his remembrance, namely, because of this, and so that his disciples should remember that he gave his body for them. This opinion led Paul strongly, and those who speak otherwise are perverting God's word and are perverse people.

Gemser. Who taught this?

Peter. I heard his voice, but I did not see him, nor did I know how he came to me or left me.

Gemser. Who is he?

Peter. Our Father in Heaven.

Gemser. Oh, I wish I'd learned it from him!

Peter. Didn't you promise his spirit? Aren't you the poor man who gives God's living voice a creaturely form?

Gemser. Weiland, but not now.

Peter. If thou hast a desire in righteousness, as righteousness, and a fervent heart for it; then the Greek Scripture, which thou hast now read over, is a means bestowed upon thee.

Gemser. What assurance could you think of, that you have so firmly laid on your delusion, and have stood in it until now?

Peter. I have not a delusion, but truth and certainty, and can seal that the text is true.

Gemser. That's why I ask from the insurance.

Peter. If Christ should have redeemed us with his body when he was united with the bread, as you say, then Christ would have suffered in the host, or in the bread, or with the bread; without bread he would not have come to the cross, nor could he have suffered except in the bread; which is all obviously false.

Gemser. Who ever said that?

Peter. Those say it (though out of ignorance) who say that Christ's body was united with the bread, or in the bread, or under the form of the bread.

Gemser. How does that follow?

Peter. So they say: Christ said: The bread is the body, which is given for you. Is this not as much as saying, "The bread will be given for you and will suffer?" or, "My body under the bread, or my body, which is the bread, will be given for you? Is it not as much, My body is not given for you before it became bread, or when it is under the form of bread? From this it follows that Christ suffered secretly and concealed, as he is secretly and concealed in the Sacrament; this is contrary to God's truth and all the prophets. It also follows that Christ would not have given his body for us on the cross, for you priests are not able to represent a man who at the same time brought the body of Christ in bread. If you want to show Christ, tell how he took the bread when his hands were nailed to it. If you want to point out an apostle, prove that the apostles consecrated the sacrament at the time you are speaking, when they were all scattered and had fled from their shepherd and were suffering trouble in Christ. As to the third, it will follow that a loaf of bread baked by the baker must have been the body of which the Scriptures write much that it should be given for us; but this would be a strong contradiction of all the Scriptures.

Gemser. If you had been so experienced in your matters, why did you become very cheerful when I told you how the Greek language held up?

Peter. Therefore, that I may hear an outward testimony, by which I may now raise up and edify those who have fallen away, and now quiet and overcome those who resist. For my own sake I should not have the outward testimony; I want to have my testimony of the Spirit in my inwardness, which Christ has promised.

Gemser. Where.

Peter. Again, do you not know that Christ thus said, "The Spirit, the Comforter, will bear witness to you, and you also will bear witness to me? This is what happened to the apostles, who were assured inwardly by the Spirit's testimony, and then preached Christ outwardly and confirmed by the Scriptures that Christ had to suffer for us, and that the same Christ, Jesus of Nazareth, was the Crucified One.

Gemser. This is what is said by the apostles.

Peter. Are we not to be apostles, why did Peter say of Cornelio that he had received the Spirit like them? Why does Paul say that we should be his followers? Did not Christ promise us his Spirit as to the apostles? The Spirit alone leads us into knowledge of God's sayings, therefore it follows that those who do not hear God's Spirit speak do not understand God's sayings. They are also not Christians, as Christ says: Those are Christ's who have the Spirit of Christ. Therefore, God's Spirit alone gives testimony and assurance, Rom. 8. This is the reason that God's Spirit is a pledge and is called.

Gemser. Behold, if the Spirit bears witness, thou also shalt bear witness; why hast thou not brought thy mind to light sooner?

Peter. The spirit did not drive me fast enough; if it had driven and conquered me sufficiently, I would have concealed 1) or hidden much less than if I had had a ravenous fire in my bones. One must [at] times conceal the spirit, by reason of its honor, and fence with outwardly accepted testimonies at times. I almost knew that you and all the world, especially the scribes, would have laughed at me and said, "He would have raved if I had broken out sooner. But now the tongues are much more denouncing and meaner, therefore I push it to the tongues proclaimers in their own knowledge.

Gemser. Because you are so earnest and strict about hearing God's truth, I will also discover to you that this oration: This is my body, which is given for you, is closed with dots, and has dots in front and behind.

Peter. Is that good to what I said? Gemser. Ausbündlich gut.

Peter. Why didn't you say it before?

Gemser. I was afraid of the madness of some princes who claim to be learned in the Scriptures and have read nothing or little in them.

Peter. You shall confess God's words with joyfulness.

Gemser. I lacked the strength of spirit. Even though I didn't take it into condemnation [before], which I now hold in high esteem.

Peter. One should watch and not be hasty in the matter, and look at Pünktlein and everything with leisure and diligence.

Gemser. I must also not restrain you that this speech, this is my body 2c., is begun with a large letter in Lucae, is meant by the verse: This is my body, which is for you.

1) In the original: gehelen.

is not connected with the preceding words, but is a speech for itself.

Peter. How they GOtt has spoken for itself?

Gemser. Yes, yes, and that is why I soon had to stand with you and confess that Christ had said straight: This is my body, 2c. that he pointed to his body and not to the bread.

Peter. If you can raise something against it and outline my reasons, or even move them, do it.

Gemser. Although I cannot speak against it, I cannot remain silent.

Peter. Let us go away and continue to talk about the matter of how to eat Christ's bread worthily and how Christ's body is given.

Gemser. Tell me, what is this said: My body is given for you? when, how and why is it given, if it is a special speech, and not attached to the bread or united, as you and Victus speak, and I must confess it?

Peter. You should have enjoyed the Lord's bread and cup as the dogs eat the grass.

Gemser. Dear! Do not mock me.

Peter. He who does not eat the Lord's bread worthily spits out the body of Christ and becomes guilty of the Lord's body.

Gemser. I am a priest, and I have prepared it for myself and offered it in the Sacrament.

Peter. Oho! With four boots in one misten. 1) Fie you! you forgotten priest.

Gemser. Are you punishing me?

Peter. Freely and joyfully.

Gemser. Why?

Peter. That you are blind as a bat and do not know that the priests killed Christ.

Gemser. We are talking about the worthy reception of the sacrament.

Peter. I meant that we wanted to talk about the surrender of the body of Christ.

Gemser. You said not long ago that we should deal with these two articles in their entirety.

Peter. I let it happen.

Gemser. Why do you accuse me as if I had eaten the sacrament unworthily?

Peter. You pretend to be a good Paulensem and do not know that?

Gemser. I often eat mustard so that my eyes glaze over and sweat, and I still bite it.

Peter. You are a courtier, you can interrogate and keep silent when you are mocked.

Gemser. Tell me, why did you say that I ate the Lord's bread unworthily?

1) With the word "misten" Carlstadt mockingly calls the "fair".

Peter. O Paulensis! But do you not know how all Christianity sings, namely, that everyone should eat the Lord's bread in the judgment and sentence of the Lord's body? But if any man eat without knowledge of the body of Christ, he is guilty of the body of Christ.

Gemser. Cunning.

Peter. How so?

Gemser. I wanted to use these words of Paul, "He who eats the Lord's bread without distinction," against you, and to see you with them and to conquer you severely, so that you would confess that Christ's body is under the sacrament, and that we fall under the feet of the sacrament and show it divine honor, and are obligated to do everything that Christians now do. But you are cunning, and run away from my place of choice, and you dare to beat me with my own weapons.

Peter. Dismiss me the word "cunning", because I fight against you with truth and not with cunning. But that will probably be found in the sweep, whether Pauli's presented words serve you or me and are entitled to.

Gemser. Do not mock me, for I have Wittenberg letters.

Peter. It is nevertheless mocking and shameful to you that you boast of Paul as if he were your own and yours alone, and almost write from him, and carry on with him daily, and do not know what you are dealing with. And if I were to remain silent, the late Quintus Mutius would rise from the dead and say: "It is bad for such a brave man who wants to be like the Gospel, because he does not really look at and understand Paul, whom he carries daily in his mouth and in his pen.

Gemser. Do you think I don't understand Paulum?

Peter. The star 2) means ignorance and blindness.

Gemser. Let me catch Paulum Wider you.

Peter. Hit it!

Gemser. Every man shall eat the bread of the Lord worthily: he that eateth it unworthily is guilty of the body of Christ. He who drinks the cup of the Lord unworthily drinks judgment. 1 Cor. 11.

Peter. What is this new? Solomon said this more comfortably when he said, "Whoever eats the king's bread should eat it with great fear and honor, lest he fall into the king's wrath. If I were to eat with a prince, and eat my own bread, or such bread as I have, I should sit more honorably, and eat more politely, and with greater caution and timidity than in my house. How much more shall I eat with guilty honor the bread of the most high King, my Lord Jesus Christ, who innocently allowed himself to be choked for my sake?

2) Should the word "gestiren" perhaps mean gesturing - making gestures?

Gemser. I shall eat the bread of the Lord worthily, that is: I shall know what kind of bread it is, how it is the Lord's bread, how the Lord is in it and under it, and shall beat my breast, give Him glory, and kneel down, and wait for forgiveness of sins through the Sacrament, and receive it as surely as I receive the Sacrament, and shall throw away all doubt, and rely on it and take comfort.

Peter. You have caught the sword by the edge, and hold the hilt out to me; how [g'e-] fchwinder you fence with it, the deeper you would wound yourself.

Gemser. Why?

Peter. Whoever misuses God's word, needs it for his own harm.

Gemser. I need it right.

Peter. On Pfäffisch and Papal Law.

Gemser. Is it not good?

Peter. It is evil and diabolical.

Gemser. Why?

Peter. Because he steals God's honor and glory and contradicts the truth and destroys Paul's teaching and makes nonsense people.

Gemser. You rave.

Peter. I will gladly swarm with you, so that I may be true and wise before God.

Gemser. You have told a lot of articles now. Tell me why Pope's teaching makes people nonsensical in this case?

Peter. When wise men eat great lords' bread at lords' tables, they are never afraid of the bread, nor do they bow down to the food, but to the Lord, and keep themselves honest and chaste before the Lord, and see not how the bread is, but why and how they eat with the king; this also the pope wants from those who eat with him. But when he speaks of the bread of Christ, he speaks of how we recognize, honor, and honestly eat the bread, though we never remember Christ, which is ever a nonsensical way; therefore the pope makes nonsensical people. He teaches how to bless the teeth, how to rinse the mouth, but how to look at and take care of the body of the Lord Jesus, the end-Christ does not teach.

Gemser. How does he steal GÖtTe's honor?

Peter. Dieblich.

Gemser. Why?

Peter. That he speaks, we are to the figure of bread say: My God, until 1) you are merciful to me.

Gemser. Don't you have anything more?

Peter. The pope makes the suffering of Christ useless and null.

Gemser. As how?

Peter. If Christ forgave and redeemed sins for us in the form of bread, Christ died on the cross for nothing.

Gemser. How does the pope contradict the truth?

Peter. He says that we should remember the bread - but Christ did not tell us to do this - and makes us forget the Lord's body, of which we should be suspicious 2) as often as we eat the Lord's bread. Therefore, no one has eaten the bread of the Lord more unworthily than the papal crowd.

Gemser. Have you not eaten the bread of the Lord after the appointment of the priest?

Peter. Not in twenty years.

Gemser. How do you get so lucky?

Peter. I was under Pabst's spell, for my salvation, and learned that it is written: I will say goodbye to their ban and malediction. 3)

Gemser. How does the pope devastate the teaching of Paul?

Peter. Paul takes great pains to make us understand and suspect the death of the Lord, which the pope overthrows and puts before us his figure of bread and raises it so high that we forget the Lord's body and death because of great fear, sorrow and knowledge of his figure, and then pay no attention to what the Lord suffered on the cross, when we should have the greatest respect for it. Paul, however, leaves us in our senses and instructs us that we should enjoy the bread and wine of the Lord, which we do not see and feel, with the fear of the Lord, as the food of the most high Lord.

Gemser. Now I know that memory makes one worthy.

Peter. You have to add something.

Gemser. I have a delicious memory, because I just remember that the shape of the bread is the body of Christ.

Peter. Did Christ command you to remember? Does he say, "Do this in my memory?" or does he say, "Do this in the memory of the sacrament, or of the form of the bread under which my body is? Have you not yourself confessed,

1) to--be.

2) suspicious --- mindful.

3) Hiemrt is perhaps Zech. 14, 11. meant: "There will be no more ban".

[that the pronoun cannot demonstrate the word? Does not Christ want us to remember his body, which was given for us? Is thy form of bread also given for us? Has it been crucified and died? If we laymen confessed this, we would be as bad as the worst priests. You are a priest, and you feel what you want to encounter.

Gemser. Spare mine!

Peter. Spare yours; we're not bickering about money, but about the truth.

Gemser. For days and days I have heard. How we should prepare ourselves to receive the sacrament and the body of Christ, that I have always held that one thing is to receive the sacrament and to receive the body of Christ; therefore I have held one for the other, as have those from whom I heard it.

Peter. We say neither of your preachers, nor of your hearing. We discuss whether you are right or wrong. If you want to say: I speak right; then you must prove the right with divine justice and truth; without that I believe you nothing.

Gemser. How much I have heard: Prepare yourselves worthily to receive the body of Christ!

Peter. I believe you, but give me one word of Christ or of an apostle who speaks in this way. This I know, that Christ has nowhere given us his body to receive it, which our following disputation will explain. Christ also says, that his flesh is not profitable to us; and so also, that it is profitable for you that I should depart; if I go not, the Comforter cometh not. If all this is true, it is also true that we do not receive the body of Christ, either naturally or sacramentally.

Gemser. Prove that better!

Peter. Did Christ ever say: Receive my body! when he said: Take bread and eat it! 2c.? Therefore your preachers 1) would have preached to you more correctly, "See to it that you receive and eat the bread of the Lord more worthily, as Paul preaches.

Gemser. Is it not written: Unless ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, there is no heaving in you?

Peter. Is this what Christ said when he said, Take bread and eat 2c.?

Gemser. No, but it is written at a different end.

Peter. Yes, at the end when Christ says: The flesh is not useful!

Gemser. Yes.

Peter. So also the reception of the flesh of Christ is not useful. Further I ask: whether Christ does not want to say by the above words that we will not feel life in us unless we eat his flesh and drink his blood?

Gemser. Right:

Peter. If you confess this to me, you must also confess that the eating of Christ's flesh is an inward taste of Christ's suffering, and that there is one meaning, that the Son of Man is exalted, that whoever looks at Him, that is, believes, should not perish but have eternal life.

Gemser. I punish you with not[en].

Peter. To receive Christ in this way is to accept Christ, that is, to recognize Christ warmly and fervently.

Gemser. This belongs on the Sacrament.

Peter. If one does not take the sacrament for eternity, he would still be blessed if he were otherwise justified. But to attain salvation without the taste of Christ is impossible; neither can anyone be justified without the art [i.e., knowledge] of Christ, Isa. 53. The sacrament is not necessary, the knowledge of Christ is necessary. You also know that Christ spoke long before the institution of the sacrament: Unless ye eat the flesh of the Son [of man] 2c. Therefore, you have not used Christ's words correctly.

Gemser. It is a little word, that is sacramentaliter, that answers many questions.

Peter. With the foolish, but with the intelligent it does not work; because the God-denouncers speak with Christ and say: spiritualiter, that is, spiritually we must eat the flesh of the Lord. Sacramentaliter is no more useful than the natural outward flesh of Christ.

Gemser. You pour out everything that is in your criticisms 2).

Peter. It will be better; for those who want to eat Christ sacramentally are worse than those who went away from Christ, or those who wanted to eat Christ bodily, than the unicorns and lions, from whom Christ wanted to be protected, since it is written: Libera a cornibus unicornium, et erue de ore leonis animam. [Ps. 22, 22.]

Gemser. Talk away!

Peter. The body of Christ sacramentaliter is of no use at all, because neither the death nor the resurrection of Christ can be seen in it.

2) "tripe"---intestines; i.e., inside you.

1) Concerning this word "Hutzelprediger" Luther remarks in his writing Wider die himmlischen Propheten: "O schön Deutsch!"

understood sacramentally, he is neither carnally nor spiritually useful, he is also nothing.

Gemser. You have struck the pope on the ear so that his whole face is blackened.

Peter. And all the papists too.

Gemser. And also the new papists. But what must we do to spiritually accept or receive the body of Christ?

Peter. We must leave and not do.

Gemser. This is too sharp for me. Tell me, how shall we receive the bread of the Lord worthily as you speak?

Peter. He who has a fervent remembrance of the body of Jesus Christ, and desires to prove it outwardly in the church by eating the bread of the Lord, is worthy to receive the bread of the Lord, as Christ says, "Do this in my remembrance. He that hath not the right remembrance of Christ is not fit, as Christ would have him fit.

Gemser. Until willing and undaunted to continue talking.

Peter. See! Do we want to bring a speech back often?

Gemser. Yes, it does no harm, because this matter is strange. In which article is the memory thorough?

Peter. You are a master and should answer me, and ask me.

Gemser. Turn to nothing, neither to my worthiness nor to my great clamor, and answer my question.

Peter. The memory has many parts in Christ, but one article is the most important, which we must understand and be aware of, if we want to eat the bread of the Lord worthily.

Gemser. Make him nameable.

Peter. The delivered body of Christ is that which must be remembered by every one who will eat the Lord's bread without judgment. But we will speak of it at the proper time and place.

Gemser. What does Paul call this article and his knowledge?

Peter. Paul calls him the death of the Lord, and he calls the memory the proclamation. But you shall understand this by circumstantial speech.

Gemser. You talk, I want to hear.

Peter. You are doing this out of humility.

Gemser. From Nothdurft.

Peter. The words of Paul are thus: Take, eat, this is my body which is broken for you; do this in my memory. This is the new testament in my blood; do this as often as you can.

you drink it in remembrance of me. Paul says with bright words that we should do everything in remembrance of Christ, as eating the bread of the Lord and drinking from His cup; but by this Paul instructs us that the remembrance of Christ should set us on fire and drive us to take the bread and the cup of Christ.

Gemser. You wipe over there, as a frightened hare over the bush.

Peter. What is it?

Gemser. You are afraid of the little word "broken".

Peter. Why?

Gemser. Paul fixed our opinion, the priest, for he says: This is my body, which is broken for you; but this has no reason, if you will not let the body of Christ come in the form of bread 1); for the bread is broken, and the body of Christ cannot be broken in itself, but in the form of bread Christ's body is broken per consequens.

Peter. Oh poor and unfunny man! Do you think that Christ's body must be broken as bread is broken? Do you not know that it is written: You shall not break a bone of him? Knowest thou not the manner of speaking, that it is said, Thou hast a broken spirit? a broken spirit? Do you want to say that Christ was broken in the form of bread? You cannot obtain that. Tell me, who broke him? Will you say: Did Christ himself break the bread? I answer, "If Christ was not in the bread when he broke it, nothing was broken in his body when he gave the bread to his disciples.

Gemser. There is another nature of Christ in the Sacrament, and outside.

Peter. Therefore you priests have another Christ in the sacrament than we laymen have on the cross. He who has broken limbs has them where he is broken. Now I ask further: Did Christ break Himself without hands?

Gemser. No.

Peter. So you cannot point to an apostle who broke Christ's body in the bread, as you can point to the fact that they ate the bread. It is false that Christ's body was broken in the bread, and false that Christ's body was broken on the cross in the form of the bread.

1) want". This word is required by the context, but in its place in the original print is "nit", i.e. not. (Walch.)

Gemser. Let us remain in the matter we have begun and see with what words Paul speaks of memory and of that which we are to remember.

Peter. Paul calls the broken body and the shed blood the death of the Lord; we are to remember it. But Paul calls the remembrance the proclamation, as I said.

Gemser. Speak more, and give me the words of Paul!

Peter. As often as you eat of this bread (says Paul) and drink of this cup, you shall proclaim the death of the Lord until he comes.

Gemser. Explain.

Peter. It is so clear to me as a bright light.

Gemser. I realize what we need for the worthy reception of the Lord's bread and cup, namely, the remembrance and proclamation of Christ's death. But still I do not understand the proclamation.

Peter. Learn to understand this: In the heart is believed unto righteousness, with the mouth unto salvation [Rom. 10:10].

Gemser. Add this verse to the memory and proclamation!

Peter. The memory of Christ may not be without faith and knowledge of Christ, as little as I could have a memory of my father if I had not known him. Therefore, the memory follows the knowledge or faith, with essence and types. If knowledge is fervent and loud, memory is fervent and loud. If it is by hearsay, the memory is also skillful.

Gemser. Can the memory also justify?

Peter. Why not?

Gemser. Prove it!

Peter. Isaiah paints the mocked and dead Messiah in his horrible bitterness; after that Isaiah says: that the Messiah will make many of his servants righteous by his art [i.e. the knowledge of him].

Gemser. Is this the text: scientia sui justificabit Ipse multos, Esa. 53, 11.?

Peter. You said it.

Gemser. Do you therefore mean that Christ's memory, in the way he was maledicted, ridiculed, nailed and strangled, also makes him just, as his art?

Peter. I want that. For it is written: They will say that they have done this in my memory.

Gemser. What could you rhyme with this clause: With the mouth one believes to salvation?

Peter. The proclamation of the death of Christ. For the proclamation is a speech of faith, which proceeds from the heart through the mouth. Therefore, the outward confession or preaching of the death of Christ is a sign or fruit of inward righteousness, that all those who hear such outward preaching must say: God is in the man who preaches, or God speaks from him.

Gemser. So I understand that the remembrance of Christ must be so rich, so abundant, and so powerful in the one who wants to eat the Lord's bread, that it compels the man to preach publicly before the congregation, or otherwise proclaim the death of Christ, and then to eat (out of great love and remembrance) the Lord's bread.

Peter. You have guessed this; do you not know how Paul preached about Christ in Troada, and the people were driven to eat the Lord's bread?

Gemser. Yes, as in the stories [of the apostles] at the 20th chapter.

Peter. Do you also know that the disciples remained steadfast in the teaching of Christ, and afterward also remained in the breaking of bread?

Gemser. Good.

Peter. Do you know that a proclamation of the death of Christ must always precede the breaking and taking of the Lord's bread? Gemser. From whom? and from what?

Peter. The preaching of the death of Christ is necessary, as Paul says: "You shall proclaim the death of the Lord as often as you take it", which is also indicated by the apostles' stories. The sermons of the resurrection or birth of Christ do not add anything to the reception of the Lord's bread, although the articles of the birth and ascension of Christ may be included.

Gemser. From whom?

Peter. From one who wants to break bread, or from another.

Gemser. But I think it is unnecessary to examine all the recipients, since Christ gave his bread to Jude the betrayer.

Peter. You have now heard me speak a great deal. I also consider it sufficient to understand how Christ's and Paul's words agree, and what man needs, so that he may take and eat the Lord's bread worthily.

Gemser. Good brother, in inexperienced matters it is not a multiplicity that one thing is brought out twice.

Peter. What is it?

Gemser. Again, we will speak of the worthy receiving or taking of the bread.

of the Lord, because I realize that there is still something in the pen.

Peter. What?

Gemser. The word dijudicare, which Paul used, means in German: to judge very well, to estimate well, to judge fiercely. The Greek word δικαπίνων means: to discriminate and to judge.

judge. Whoever wants to distinguish a thing correctly must look at the thing inside and out and consider it completely, which he wants to distinguish.

Peter. What are you talking about?

Gemser. To Paul's speech, which reads: "He who eats and drinks unworthily eats and drinks judgment for himself, so that he does not distinguish the body of the Lord.

Peter. This word we have acted temporally.

Gemser. Be at my service and let's do one more thing.

Peter. I want to hear how you heard me.

Gemser. You say that anyone who wants to receive the sacrament without harm must have the memory of Christ and judge the body of Christ with great diligence and also proclaim the death of Christ outwardly. But all this we priests take from Christ, as you say, and put on the sacrament.

Peter. What do you sacrament? Where did you learn the Word in the Scriptures?

Gemser. Take it for granted that I cannot speak out; and act as if you hear the word "bread" as often as I say "sacrament.

Peter. Stride henceforth!

Gemser. We clergymen, priests and monks say that the Sacrament forgives sin and preach thus: O sinner, if your conscience, because of sin, frightens or oppresses you, and you cannot get rid of your fear and burdens, go and take the Sacrament for your sin, and be satisfied.

Peter. You false prophets! You promise people God's kingdom for a piece of bread; what would you promise for silver and gold if you were not ashamed? You promise peace of conscience to the simple in things that are less than conscience, and that cannot give or make peace.

Gemser. Drive on!

Peter. It is true. I know that even by your secret hissing and hissing you can make the bread neither better nor different. Why do you say that sin can be forgiven when you have blown above? Would it not be as much, [as] if ye thus said, Men! press

If you have sinned and desire peace, take a handful of barley and eat it in God's name, and you will be absolved of your sins and satisfied in your conscience. In this way the pope gave letters of indulgence, and the false prophets of old took wheat and grain, and our priests took sacrificial pennies for sin. Men's consciences were also satisfied with themselves and with the people, but how before God? did they not have a false peace and security, when there was neither peace nor security? Let it not surprise thee that foolish men believe, and are satisfied with lies: for they let every wind that blows upon them pick them up, drive them about, and put them down; but they shall be put to shame in the end, and shall see rightly how they are deceived.

Gemser. Martin Luther gave the advice himself.

Peter. It is a great pity that the simple-minded people sell themselves with respect for some person; for they are not attached to the mere truth, but to the person, therefore they cannot hear or see the mere truth, because they have such a thick foreskin stuck in their ears and eyes.

Gemser. The bread has the body of Christ.

Peter. Even if I confess that Christ's body is united with the bread, it would be false and deceitful if I gave the bread of a little hermit so much power and strength that it would forgive and pacify our sins. What I give to the bread, I take away from the suffering of Christ. Also, Christ's body or death would be of no use at all if Christ had not been God and sealed by God the Father when he was and still is a man, and thus Christ had not recognized his suffering and death in the highest. Now reflect, dear Sophist, and see how Paul also instructs us to recognize the memory of Christ's bitter death, so that we remember, if we go back a thousand and about five hundred years, how well our knowledge and memory should go beyond time and place and be attached to none who do nothing for the forgiveness of sins.

Gemser. I fear that you are just, and that we are playing monkeys as often as we worship the sacrament, that we take it in silver and gold monstrances, that we carry it around our towns and villages, that we want to protect and preserve ourselves and ours with it, and that we want to chase out the devil; because what we give to the external bread, we take from the death of Christ.

Peter. Well, what do you think of it now?

Gemser. I consider it a lousy trumpery and cunning Sin and pain would bear, and that [it] should be sought 2) deceit that one has talked about the sacrament for a when our sins terrified or grieved us.

while. For the sacrament is an external thing that can Peter. You speak well and rightly. John the Baptist neither make us blessed, nor holy, nor pious, nor better, would not have pointed to the mere Christ if Christ, nor righteous, nor free, even if we look at it a thousand covered in the host, were to forgive our sins. Christ would times. I am afraid that the prophet Haggai 1) prophesied also have been so favorable to us that he would have about us when he said [Cap. 2, 13]. They put a piece of consecrated this to us, as we must eat his bread, if we holy flesh on the hem of their garment and say: what they wanted to be sure of the forgiveness of our sins. touch is holy.

Gemser. How then Paul?

Peter. You are more unstable and fickle than a feather Peter. He points us to the memory of Christ's death in the wind. Now you hold all things with me, you shout when we are oppressed by our sins, therefore he says: with the priests; one time you talk papistically, the other "Many have been justified through the obedience of one time truly about your sacrament; sometimes you step to man. [Rom. 5, 19.]

me, sometimes from me, you Proteus you!

Gemser. Resolve!

Gemser. So I am nimble out of great subtlety. It is also Peter. Whoever wants to be sure of the forgiveness of useful to me, because I flee the cross and have good sins and to eat the bread of the Lord worthily and without harm, which you call "receiving," must be sure in the knowledge of the death of Christ, that is, must understand and accept the death of Christ as God our Father promised it and seal it with the heart that God is true. He who is thus skillful is skillful; but he who has a fault in one thing is unskillful and unworthy; it would be better for him to eat the bread of a peasant than the bread of the Lord.

Peter. I believe you.

Gemser. If I could not do this art, I would have been despised long ago.

Peter. However, it is not Biedermännisch, also not who is thus skillful is skillful; but he who has a fault in one Christian. It would suit a careless liar better than you. thing is unskillful and unworthy; it would be better for him to eat the bread of a peasant than the bread of the Lord.

Gemser. I still say that Haggai prophesies about us.

Peter. How so?

Gemser. We say: If the bread is given, it can forgive sin and make everything holy that only adheres to it. So we give as much honor, praise, love, and fear to the sacrament as to the body and death of Christ.

Peter. You have no reason for this in Scripture.

Gemser. Not one letter. Christ said: Whoever loves father or mother more, or as much, than me, is unworthy comes. With this, Paul knocks down all the missal of me [Matth. 10, 37.]. What will he say to us, that we keepers, monks and priests in one heap. For Paul says: honor, fear and love much less a lesser creature, which "When the Lord comes, the Lord's bread will no longer be eaten, nor will the sermon be preached before it is has neither soul nor body, that is, bread, than him?

Peter. He that esteemeth the bread of the Lord, or received; and by this he implies that the Lord will not come feareth, honoureth, or loveth it, as the Lord's bitter death, into the bread or sacrament, but if he comes, the is unworthy of the death of Christ, and incomprehensible; sacrament will die. Therefore Christ cannot come into the and taketh, and eateth the bread of the Lord also Sacrament. He remains above in heaven and holds it until the time of refreshing comes. (Apost. 3:20, 21) unworthily, unto judgment, to his hurt and fall.

Gemser. If it were right that we should worship, or fear, Whosoever therefore shall eat of this bread unworthily, the bread of the Lord, and honor it so magnificently, the and drink of the cup of the Lord, is guilty of the body and prophets also prophesied of the holiness and blood of the Lord.

righteousness of the bread, and foretold us that the bread would be our Gemser. That is frightening.

Peter. Let man examine himself, and so let him eat of the bread and drink of the cup of the Lord.

1) In the original: "Aggaeus" and "weisgesagt".

2) In the old edition: besucht.

Gemser. So I hear that I should be certain of the matter?

Peter. He who is to examine or feel must know and not imagine. He that eateth and drinketh unworthily was betrayed, took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself, that distinguish not the body of Christ.

Gemser. So it is better that we abstain than that we take it.

Peter. You said it.

Gemser. We have gone far into the field, and see the sun is coming to a head; 1) therefore let us turn back, and draw up the matter of the surrender, until a considerable time; then I will hear and learn how Christ is surrendered; to whom he has given himself; from what causes, and for whom, or to whom too well he has given himself; what we are to understand and know therein; and how our spirit must be assured by God's Spirit.

Peter. What do we want to talk about now?

Gemser. Of the matter that is now touched, in that say that Christ does not come into the Sacrament; would be too close to all priests and monks.

Peter. Are you the great warriors [i.e. giants] children of Enakim who can pull down God from heaven?

Gemser. We can do it and do it in the power of others.

Peter. Who gave you such foreign power?

Gemser. Christ, in that he said: This do in my memory. Peter. Did Christ also tell you to bring his body in loaf?

Gemser. Yes.

Peter. I have believed it to be true, and I know that it is true that you priests are lying, for Christ did not command you to force his body to come into your hosts.

Gemser. What?

Peter. Christ says: You shall take his bread and eat it, with the addition that as often as you take and eat it, you shall take and eat it in his memory. As Paul says, "You should do this. And all Christians are able to do this, the unvarnished ones better than the varnished ones. 2) They are truly the female warriors, who by such words have forcibly stolen their supposed and falsely vaunted power, by which they pretend to bring Christ's body in a little bread.

Gemser. Methinks Paul almost and well fortified our power when he said: I have received it of the Lord, which I have given you. For the Lord Jesus, in the night that he was betrayed, took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, saying, Take, eat; this is my body which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. There, there, behold,

Peter, how Paul is saying mass, repeating the words of the Lord, and bringing his body into the bread, and also giving us the power to ask for and bring the Lord's body into the sacrament. Peter. Oho! Egg, how ridiculous is your talk to me!

Gemser. Why?

Peter. Did Paul give you with these words: This does the power to conjure the body of the Lord into the bread and to hold mass? Would that a blind man could grasp this in the dark of the night, that Paul does not do otherwise than to relate the word of the Lord and the time when Christ instituted his supper, and to teach us that we should eat the Lord's bread, not as other bread, but in his remembrance. If you want to take from such repeated words a special power to drive the body of the Lord into a little bread, as Christ is said to have done, as you say, I would like to say that Moses gave us power to create heaven and earth, and that Moses created all creatures when he began to describe the creation of heaven and earth. If you want to take one, you must take the other. If you would prove your creation of a new world by deed, I will also believe that you, or another seedling, can claim and bring the body of the Lord into the sacrament.

Gemser. But what did Paul do with the word of the Lord?

Peter. Much good; for he reminds us of the time of Christ's passion, the skill and manner in which we should eat the Lord's bread.

Gemser. Explain yourself!

Peter. For the sake of time, we are not to eat the Lord's bread as swine, for when he gave us bread in remembrance of him, it was the night in which he was innocently betrayed on our account; therefore it is right that we should stand in the bitterness of our lives when we eat his bread. Because of the suffering, it is evident that we contemplate the greatness and atrocity of our sins, and Christ's exuberant obedience and fervent love. The way stands in the remembrance and proclamation of Christ's death, as much has been said;

3) "more sinful" is probably meant to be as much as: sinking.

1) "Rieß" i.e. Rüste, Rüst, Rast, or Ruhe, here means sunset. (Walch.)

2) d. i. Plate carrier.

This is the reason why Christ pointed to his body and said, "The body is given for you; before there was none given, neither was there any who would have been given; neither will there be any after me, for it is I, and my body is the same, and truly the body which is given for you. Whosoever therefore shall take and eat the bread of the Lord, considering all things, hath cause enough to eat the bread of the Lord more earnestly, though it be neither holier nor better than any other bread.

Gemser. After all, Christ has blessed the bread.

Peter. So it is said: He gave thanks; hear: God, his Father. Therefore, some call the Sacrament a Eucharist, as if the Sacrament alone were a Eucharist, which follows its brain more than God's word.

Gemser. This thanksgiving was ever a real power through which Christ brought His Body into the Sacrament.

Peter. Prove it! You fled from your previous defense and now take another umbrella for yourself. If your first reason had been good, when you let yourself be heard with the word, "This is in my memory," you would have kept the place of election. But because thy foundation hath forsaken thee, and put thee to shame, thou seekest this: Christ gives thanks, but he will keep you as he did before.

Gemser. I have three kinds of ground or sword; when one ground sinks, I flee to the other. Is it not delicious, when I slay one sword, that I catch another 1) and protect myself?

Peter. This is a sure sign that the sunk foundation and the broken sword have not become firm and strong. But he who fights with truth has the very best foundation and the very strongest sword, since truth is the very strongest.

Gemser. I don't care much about protecting myself and barking back at you.

Peter. [Thus you are a born sophist, a deceiver, a deceiver. You should, however, according to your fame, force your cause, coerce your enemies, press them, frighten them and see them with power, and shut their mouths with truths, so that they could not contradict you.

Gemser. My reasons have good appearances.

Peter. You should not only have appearance, but also truth. Now put forth your appearance, and let us see how bright and light your appearance is.

Gemser. One is this: JEsus took the

1) In the original: Herwische.

Brod, and blessed's. The other: This is my body, which is given for you. The third: This do in my remembrance.

Peter. It still seems so far and so dark that I cannot see that one serves the priests for these reasons.

Gemser. You have stupid eyes.

Peter. If you have sharp eyes, lead me into your supposed light. But I fear that you have such sharp eyes that they see with great sharpness that there is nothing there.

Gemser. Jesus took the bread, and blessed it or thanked God.

Peter. Will you hold the Blessing and Thanksgiving for One Thing?

Gemser. Yes. For one evangelist wrote the word bless right at the end when the other wrote the word give thanks.

Peter. But show your semblance that Christ has made Himself into the Sacrament through His blessing, and that you priests can bring His Body and Blood into the Sacrament through Christ's blessing?

Gemser. This is so clear that [it] needs no proof.

Peter. But it is so dark to me that I can't believe anything the priests say.

Gemser. You show that [there is] darkness!

Peter. You have made yourself famous of the light and are not able to show it. Therefore, I am not guilty of showing the darkness. He who is famous of light or appearance must prove his cause with writings or witnesses.

Gemser. Christ gave thanks, and by the same words of thanksgiving He brought Himself into the Sacrament.

Peter. Since you talk so much about thanksgiving, I ask you what Christ said when he gave thanks? When Christ raised Lazarum, he also gave thanks to God, and the form of thanksgiving is included in the same history. But I know neither the manner nor the form of this thanksgiving; but if you know the form, then tell it!

Gemser. I have never heard of it all my life, nor have I paid any attention to it, nor have I asked about it.

Peter. So you boast that you do not understand. It must be necessary for you to know the words of thanksgiving that Christ used when you pretend that through the thanksgiving of Christ you can bring the Body and Blood of Christ into your Sacrament.

Gemser. Do you have more faults with me?

Peter. Much.

Gemser. Pour out!

Peter. If Christ brought Himself into the bread or into the cup by the blessing that you help yourselves, it would follow that Christ would have been in your sacrament before, because He spoke these words: This is my body 2c., and that these words: This is my body, do not serve that you bring Christ into the sacrament.

Gemser. More here!

Peter. If Christ had come into the sacrament, he would have left his place where he was sitting; for Christ always left his former place when he came or went to a new place, as the Scriptures show, John 6:1, 3, 15, 17, 19, 25. Item, when Christ went up the mountain, he left the valley. When Christ also ascended into heaven, he left this world, speaking bodily. Is it not written: I will go from you and come to you again? [John 16:16, 22.]

Gemser. All this is true naturaliter, but sacramentaliter and supernaturaliter it is true that Christ is at the same time in many ends.

Peter. Do you also have a reason for this in Scripture?

Gemser. No.

Peter. You are a liar like that.

Gemser. So the whole bunch has to lie.

Peter. This is possible and human. 3 Mos. 4, 13. 2Mos. 19, 8. ¹⁾

Gemser. Have you poured out your opinion completely?

Peter. No; I keep something in the barrel and in stock. But there is one thing I will not say to you, that this is a sandy reason, when the priests say that the words of benediction or thanksgiving, which they do not know, are so powerful that they could drive Christ into their sacrament. For if their speech existed, it would also have to exist and be that the priests of the old law would also have brought their bodies into the food and drink, yes, even into the people, which they blessed. In sum, it should follow that you priests and monks bring your bodies into your food and drink when you bless your food and drink or read the Benedicite, and that you yourselves and your guests eat your body and your flesh and blood; that you should also bring yourselves sacramentally into the food that you receive blessed or with thanksgiving. For Paul immediately uses the word Eucharist 1 Tim. 4, 3, when he speaks of the common custom of all kinds of food. So you see that your first light and reason is a dark lantern.

¹⁾ Instead of this last passage, which would not puff, it should perhaps read: 4 Mos. 15, 24.

and a sand drive, 2) to you who misuse the bright Scriptures.

Gemser. So the other reason will serve me: This is my body 2c.

Peter. Little; yes, nothing.

Gemser. Why?

Peter. You priests say that Christ is in the bread, or under the bread, or in the form of the bread, therefore the words now reported do not serve you.

Gemser. It is written: This is my body 2c.

Peter. Therefore it is against you. Forasmuch as it is written, This is my body, 2c. this is another saying, Under this, or in the bread, is my body. So if Christ had said, Under the bread, or in the bread, is my body, you would have an appearance.

Gemser. Is it a sin that we add an "in" to it?

Peter. Truly a great sin, for God says: You shall not add to it [Deut. 4, 2]. Yes, a falso) The highest priest would burn you if someone falsified his bulls with such a little word and brought a different meaning into it than you bring Christ into his speech. If you priests wanted to defend your sacrament with such finances, you would have had a better reason in the words of the cup, since the words of the cup are thus: The cup, the new testament, in my blood 2c. From these words you would have had a better reason to say that the cup is in the blood, and must be in the blood by virtue of the words of Christ, if you read them and said, The cup, the new testament, is in my blood. For that ye say, The body of Christ is in the bread, or in the form of the bread, is not right, because there is no "in" in the speech of the cup.

Gemser. Yes, dear, we would have hit the mark.

Peter. Not hit. You would have made a delicious mockery of the written text if you had said straight: The chalice is in the blood, which the text says, and is a new testament to it.

Gemser. What would the peasants have said? Not that: I don't see blood, in which the chalice is; the chalice I see, blood I don't see? Perhaps the peasants would have stoned us.

Peter. Ei, so no.

2) In the original: Sand Trip.

3) d. i. kalsatto - forgery. In the old edition: Falſet.

4) d. i. skirmishes.

Gemser. Ei, so yes.

Peter. I do not believe it.

Gemser. I know it for certain, for they would not have seen blood if the cup had been in it.

Peter. Can you not overstate them, and say: You must see your reason and dull your senses, and act as if you can neither see nor taste nor understand.

Gemser. You mock.

Peter. You have persuaded the laity that they taste bread and wine, and yet they cannot say that they taste bread or wine when they receive your sacrament. Likewise, you would have made them believe that your cup was in the blood, which they could not see. You speak only thus: faith comprehends all things, understands all things, and is able to do all things; therefore faith also is able to see the blood which neither angelic nor human eyes see.

Gemser. I don't know if you are mocking ours or not.

Peter. How may I?

Gemser. But how, if he straightly said: The bread is my body; as Christ said?

Peter. Christ never said that the bread is his body; nor does the Greek tongue suffer us to apply this expression "that is" to the bread as indicated above. In addition it is mocking that one wants to say: the bread is my body 2c. For it would read in this way: the body of the Lord, which was to suffer and be given for us, is bread, and not a natural human body. It is not the body born of the mother Mary, but a loaf made by the baker. Moreover it is contrary to the stream of all the prophets which are written of the giving of the body of Christ, and to all the gospel and apostolic books: for this is ever true, That whosoever is not with the scripture scattereth, and is contrary to the scripture.

Gemser. So let me serve the third reason.

Peter. This one: That does in my memory?

Gemser. Yes.

Peter. I have nevertheless heard great hempputters who use these words "das thut in meinem Gedächtniß" to the sense that they want [da^mit erhalten wollen, dass die Pfaffen den Lerb und das Blut Christi in das Papistische Sacrament laden und bannen könnten.

Gemser. Who are the hemp cleaners?

Peter. Who are called Doctores; who wear round, beautiful and pointed little hats, and go about in long dresses, and stand as the bristling and wooden hemp plasters dressed in beggar's plundery.

Gemser. Gemach!

Peter. How can I speak of them in this way? Because one of them says that the bishops consecrate priests by these words "that do in my memory"; but another one says that the priests are gazing Christ into the sacrament; the third one leads in another way.

Gemser. I mean, Christ has given us by these words "das thut" 2c. Machst given us to demand his flesh and blood into the sacrament, when we read such words.

Peter. O poor blindness! Is it one thing for you to read and to do? Did Christ speak before of reading or doing? or did Christ say before what his disciples should do, before he said: this do 2c.?

Gemser. What should we do?

Peter. You shall take the bread and eat it; you shall do this in remembrance of the Lord, as Paul says, "You shall proclaim the Lord's death as often as you eat the Lord's bread and drink from his cup.

Gemser. Let's continue talking about some reasons.

Peter. From which?

Gemser. From the acknowledgement.

Peter. Do you think that Christ changed his body into bread through his thanksgiving?

Gemser. Yes.

Peter. So you must also confess that Christ changed His body into the five barley loaves, because there Christ also gave thanks, or blessed, as you say, because right there is the word: He said well [beneckixit, Matth. 14, 19. Marc. 6, 41. Luc. 9, 16.].

Gemser. Stay on your track.

Peter. If the blessing or the dedication and thanksgiving of Christ was the power by which Christ put his body into bread, and the power which Christ gave to the apostles, then Christ instituted his sacrament long before the night when he was betrayed, against all the scribes and also Paul. It also follows that Christ fed many thousands with his body; that Christ also gave his flesh and blood before others, except the apostles. You would also have to admit that. Christ thrust his body into Lazarus' body when he raised him from the dead.

Gemser. You make me almost doubt.

Peter. Now suppose that Christ put his body into bread on Thursday, when you were speaking; do the priests therefore have the same power as Christ?

Gems. Equal and greater. Majora his facietis. (Jn 14, 12.)

Peter. Now I hear that the grind-dense parsons can bring the body of Christ into their supposed shape of bread, the Christ cloth could not.

Gemser. No. Christ also changed into bread, but with a bright voice: But the priests bring Christ into bread with silent blowing.

Peter. That's good! Rhyme! Let's clear our throats so that we don't laugh ourselves to death.

Gemser. Christ ever said: This is my body.

Peter. Christ stood present and said, This is my body 2c. Therefore, if a priest says, This is my body; take, eat the bread; and we eat, we eat a lousy priest. But if the priests speak of the body of Christ, and think back as Christ stood, and said of his body, that his body was the body which was promised to be given for us, they speak rightly. But he was not in the bread when they say.

Gemser. Don't the priests have a command to put Christ's body in the bread?

Peter. We read all kinds of command and many articles by which God commanded His apostles all kinds of power but among all of them we do not find one who said that Christ gave the ministers power to put His body into the bread and His blood into the cup.

Gemser. That would be it?

Peter. I say. Yes. For Christ gave his disciples power to preach, to baptize, to cast out devils, to heal the sick, to beat the dust from their feet. To raise the dead. But among all the commands I do not see one that said: You shall, or shall bring my body in a little bread. I would like to see a letter that you ink eaters may boast and base yourselves on, that Christ commanded you to bring his body into the bread or form of the bread. Therefore I say that you have imputed this power to yourselves shamelessly, deceitfully and fraudulently.

Gemser. Shall Christ then remain forever above?

Peter. It has ever been decided by Paul above, also by us, that we no longer need the sacrament or bread of the Lord until the Lord comes. When Christ comes again from heaven, the sacrament and all external things will pass away.

Gemser. Christ comes secretly into the Sacrament; but Paul speaks of the clear and manifest Advent.

Peter. If Christ enters the Sacrament secretly, he must be ashamed of his future or afraid of you.

Gemser. To us priests, Christ comes secretly.

Peter. Truly, he comes so secretly that you yourselves do not know whether he comes into the sacrament or not. For there is no priest who may receive this by his oath, that Christ came into the Sacrament at his request as great as when he hung on the cross.

Gemser. I have said masses often and much, but never felt that he was coming.

Peter. I know that.

Gemser. Wouldn't Christ secretly descend from heaven?

Peter. No.

Gemser. Bring fonts!

Peter. Two men said to the apostles: Christ will come when you saw him ascend. [Christ visibly ascended into heaven, so he must also visibly return. I will not be persuaded any more, for the apostles of the secret Advent neither hoped nor longed for their bread.

Gemser. I don't know who the two men were, so I would much rather hear Scripture.

Peter. Take Christ's word, who thus said: If they say: Here is Christ! there is Christ! (as you priests did for a long time, saying: In the host is Christ, and in that host, and in every corner is Christ); you shall not go out, nor believe. For Christ's future will not be secret, but as apparent and visible as the lightning that shines from the beginning to the end (Matth. 24, 23. 27.).

Gemser. This is what Christ said about the other Advent.

Peter. There are not more than two Advent, one in the form of the cross and suffering, all here on earth; the other in glorious form. The third you must not make up, and you cannot add one of the two to the host. Christ will hold heaven until the day when all things shall be brought to an end; as Peter said in the Histories [Cap. 3, 21.], and we have set above.

Gemser. I think it is hard for you to believe that Christ should be in many places at the same time.

Peter. No. I believe it so easily that you can bring him to many ends and put him in a time when I believe that St. Anne had five heads, and an innocent child had a beard twelve cubits long.

Gemser. Do you not believe that Christ is present in ten thousand places in an instant?

Peter. I don't really believe it. But I believe that you would gladly bring him down from heaven if he were so forgotten and came down.

Gemser. Do you also not believe that Christ stands in many ciboria at the same time?

Peter. In your prisons?

Gemser. What are you doing in prison?

Peter. You are accustomed to shut your God with many iron doors, and to set many iron bars and locks against him, so that he may not escape from you, and thereby you do great mockery and scorn and shame to Christ our Savior.

Gemser. Scornful!

Peter. You have invented a God who is not a God.

Gemser. He is Christ.

Peter. Christ is in heaven bodily; if you show Scripture that he is in your bread, I will speak differently.

Gemser. We bring him down.

Peter. O you powerless priests! Do you want to ascribe such a great power to yourselves? It belongs to a greater power to bring Christ from heaven into the sacrament, to cast out devils, than to throw great rocky mountains into the sea, which you are not able to do, I know, if you would try to cast out devils, that you would be worse off than the seven sons of Skeva the Jew got. Apost. 19, 13-16.

Gemser. What we do, we do in good opinion and in honor of Christ.

Peter. You honor Christ as a cat honors its caged mouse.

Gemser. Ei, no.

Peter. Now even if you mean all things well, to speak from human opinion, nevertheless you should leave your good opinion, if you do not know that God the Lord likes your good opinion, and should think of Peter, who had a delicious good opinion to speak humanly, because it was repugnant to him that Christ should be thus mocked and martyred; and nevertheless he had to hear this: Depart from me, you Satan! (Matth. 16, 21-23.)

Gemser. We thought it would be honest to Christ and good for us to bring Christ into the bread and keep Him in it as in a wonderful temple.

Peter. Where do you have such a noble reason?

Gemser. In the writing.

Peter. Put down the fonts!

Gemser. What shall I put here? knowest thou not that Moses GOD built a tabernacle, and Solomon after him GOD built a house?

Peter. Where is your reason for building a house of bread for Christ?

Gemser. It is arAumsutum a mmili.

Peter. You should probably with such a roll fsmriH) devastate the whole of Scripture and make the dear suffering of Christ quite invaluable.

Gemser. Is it against the Scriptures and Christ?

Peter. There is too much against the Scriptures that you have no reason for it. But it is against Christ that you priests want to make a temple for him, which human hands have wrought. Christ is the highest priest, and has entered the eternal tabernacle through One sacrifice and One death, which God's hands alone have formed, without the action of any creature. From the same temple and tabernacle, you bold men may demand Christ into a thing that is consumed by worms, by fire, by mice and sows, or by fattening pigs, as you priests are.

Gemser. Is that wrong?

Peter. What house will ye build me? shall I rest in your bread? saith Christ; have ye not devised and invented all these things? have ye not chosen such ways and abominations yourselves? Out, out, you dogslayers!

Gemser. The cup we bless is a communion of the blood of Christ. Behold, and take it into thyself that we bless the cup, and that the cup is a communion of the blood of Christ.

Peter. The benediction stands in remembrance and proclamation of the death of Christ, as Paul interprets in the following chapter, and is reported above. Otherwise, I do not know what the form of the benediction has been, and I would like to know it.

Gemser. Answer me that the chalice is a communion!

Peter. In it is the communion that no one should drink the cup of the Lord except he who understands why Christ shed his blood; and out of great love and gratitude and fervent remembrance he should drink of the cup of the Lord, which is not drunk blessedly without the communion of the Lord.

Gemser. Verba consecrationis that act and create.

Peter. Who invented them?

Gemser. Fingere licet.

Peter. Lapidare jus est. How much is the strong words?

Gemser. Five, as five wounds are; he who omits one cannot consecrate.

Peter. How much is the same in Greek? Gemser. Four.

Peter. This is not how the apostles consecrated.

Gemser. Are you surprised at this? Let us increase daily in the knowledge of Christ.

Peter. It is said that Christ spoke Jewish and Syriac mixed together; if this is true, you would hardly have two words left.

Gemser. Our power is expanded and extended.

Peter. That's what I wanted to have.

Gemser. What do you want to do? Do you want to make other words?

Peter. I know this for certain, that the body of Christ, without suffering, would have been useless to us, when Christ said: "The Son of Man must be lifted up, so that everyone who sees Him rise, will not perish (Joh. 3, 14. 15.). Therefore, this clause "who is given for you" is as firmly attached and of equal force as this clause: this is my body. I will prove this by memory, although I do not think nor believe that such words are verba consecrationis.

Gemser. You are stiff-necked.

Peter. Against lies; but to the truth I am soft.

Gemser. Shouldn't Christ come into our Sacrament when a priest reads such words?

Peter. Should Christ then jump on any priest for his stinking breath?

Gemser. Why not?

Peter. After all, the more part of the priests is the Pharisaic generation and viper breed, to which Christ does not want to approach, nor do they have much to do with them. .

Gemser. Christ must come because of the words.

Peter. After all, the Pharisees also had God's word, and so well that Christ said: You shall hear them! (Matth. 23, 3.) Nevertheless he did not want to approach them.

Gemser. He was afraid of them.

Peter... Christ should be much more afraid now, because now the priests tear Christ with teeth, and kill him for three pennies. God says to such sinners: Why do you take my word into your mouth? (Ps. 50, 16.) Therefore it does not help you 2c.

Gemser. I ever meant that Christ should go into the Sacrament.

Peter. Christ has truly troubled days, and is tossed about by priests more mockingly than a log of wood.

Gemser. You're comparing Christ to a lotter wood?

Peter. No. But I say that the lottery boys are much more skilful with their wood than the clergy with Christ; for the lottery boys abstain and remain more sober and speak their rhymes well. But the priests stink early of wine or beer, as a jug of vinegar stinks of wine or beer, and some of them are still so full in the morning that they can neither bear their heads, nor stir their tongues properly, and slur their words, and do not read. Some sleep under the still mass, as one did, who fell asleep and stood in a dream and said, To me! for he dreamed that he sat in the wine cellar. But another stood in the still mass in his dream and said: Shuffle the cards. Now see if the lottery wood is not better handled by the lottery boys than the words of Christ by the priests! But who can believe that such a wine bottle can bring Christ into the Sacrament? But if Christ is in their power, his cause is worse than the lottery wood's nature.

Gemser. I myself do not believe that Christ has fellowship with such priests.

Peter. Why do you call us poor peasants to fall down and beat our chests when you drunkards 1) pick up your idol bread?

Gemser. Decide!

Peter. You priests have printed Christ's blasphemous image on your bread with a branding iron that stains all consciences, and God considers all images an abomination and hates and scorns them; therefore I do not believe, even for this reason, that you are able to change Christ into your sacrament. For he ever did his Father's will here; should Christ now be contrary to the same will? I do not believe it at all. Your bread is idol bread, an abominable and rejected bread.

Gemser. Gemach!

Peter. The image also makes the simple think that Christ has turned into the image, and that Christ's feet are where the image's feet are; Christ's head where the image's head is. Some think that the priests spill Christ's stomach when they turn the image upside down, and so on.

Gemser. We know that images are nothing.

Peter. We also know that they are less than dirt, and ropes laid to the fall.

Gemser. How will it be if we need bread that is not idolatrous [i.e., not marked with a picture 5]?

1) In the original: drunkards.

Peter. Yet you are not able to bring Christ into it and will die at the hands of the wicked; but they do not serve walk in it. For a short time I ask you whether you are able you for your delusion.

Gemser. Therefore, we have only five words, which we call verba consecrationis.

Gemser. Your question is a noose, accused to the train and entanglement.

Peter. But you owe me an answer.

Gemser. Christ is in the Sacrament with his immortal and glorious body.

Peter. Why?

Gemser. Christ died once, will die no more; as Paul teaches to the Romans (Cap. 6, 9, 10.) and the stories of the apostles (Cap. 13, 34.).

Peter. You are a brave Paulensis.

Gemser. That's me.

Peter. But you know little of his teaching.

Gemser. More, because the whole world.

Peter. Are you so learned and do not know that Paul says: The Lord took the bread 2c. and said: This is my body, which is given for you? The mortal body was given into the hands of the Jews and Gentiles to be strangled, and not the immortal.

Gemser. Yes, this is true, when Christ transformed Himself into the Sacrament.

Peter. It is true before noon if you are sober, after noon it is a dream if you are full.

Gemser. What are you mocking?

Peter. Can you bring another body of Christ into the sacrament, which Christ should have brought in?

Gemser. No, but with a different shape and form.

Peter. In which?

Gemser. Christ brought Himself into the bread with a poor form and with the form of a servant. But I and my like bring Christ into the sacrament with a glorious form.

Peter. Where do you have a reason for that?

Gemser. Reason or no reason, so it is. He who does not accept my word will not be saved.

Peter. No. You wouldn't lure me to your cob with such a pipe. The devil take your words in all pieces!

Gemser. How else could we defend verba consecrationis?

Peter. I am also afraid that you have nothing to do with it.

Gemser. Why?

Peter. If your verba consecrationis are right, they have this meaning: this is my body, which is given for you, that is, which is taken away and given to you.

Gemser. Therefore, we have only five words, which we call verba consecrationis.

Peter. Count them!

Gemser. Hoc, est, enim, corpus, meum. [For, this, is, my, body.]

Peter. You leave out the pinned words: Who is given for you.

Gemser. Of course, so that we insist.

Peter. As butter in the sun, and a thief on the gallows.

Gemser. Not so evil!

Peter. A thousand times more annoying.

Gemser. Why?

Peter. Therefore, that you interpret Christ's word differently than he does.

Gemser. Prove it!

Peter. Easily. Christ says: it is the body in the form and shape that could and would suffer; you reverse that and say: it is the body that could not suffer.

Gemser. What causes you to bet so firmly against me?

Peter. Truth and justice of God.

Gemser. If I want to hear it from you!

Peter. Christ wanted to redeem us and lead us out of the devil's kingdom and power, as out of Egypt, into God's kingdom and power. But Christ could not end that, because by his death, as God had decreed. He had to fulfill the figure of the Paschal Lamb and stretch out his hand to the wood.

Gemser. Talk more!

Peter. Christ had to make us, who accept him, righteous from our sins with his righteousness; but he had to accomplish this by dying.

Gemser. What is the same justice?

Peter. Obedience to death.

Gemser. Would you have writings?

Peter. Through the obedience of one man many men have been justified. (Rom. 5, 19.) But Christ showed obedience with his shameful death, when he was obedient unto death, the death of the cross (Phil. 2, 8.).

Gemser. Do we not have this righteousness through the resurrection?

Peter. No. We have the righteousness of our death through the death of Christ, and not through the resurrection.

Gemser. It is written: Christ arose for our righteousness' sake. (Rom. 4, 25.)

Peter. This is the justice of the Auf-

The first resurrection of the spirit, which only has its beginning here and will burst forth after the end of death. The righteousness of death precedes, the other follows.

Gemser. You should sheerly pull me into your orbit.

Peter. If Christ has been transfigured 1) and immortalized in the sacrament, and has come into it by virtue of his words, then we do not have the first righteousness. But he that hath not the first, hath not the other, and shall be false, that his body is given for us. But if Christ's mortal body was in the sacrament, you cannot, by virtue of the words of Christ which he spoke, bring his body into the bread in any other form or shape than he brought himself into it. Thus you must say that Christ's mortal body is in your sacrament, and that Christ dies every day when you offer him, which is contrary to God's truth.

Gemser. I soon saw these snares and realized that you would see me before I would answer you. If I say: Christ's mortal body is in the sacrament, then you witness and see me, and say: Christ is still mortal. But if I say: Christ immortal body is in the sacrament, it follows that we have no verba oov86orationi8, and that our foundation falls, on which we built. Therefore, I do not know what to say.

Peter. Confess the truth and say: Christ's body is not in the bread, nor is his blood in the cup. But we are to eat the bread of the Lord in remembrance or knowledge of his body, which he gave into the hands of the unrighteous for us; and to drink of the cup in knowledge of his blood, which Christ poured out for us; and, in sum, to eat and drink in knowledge of the death of Christ.

Gemser. If I could escape the noose held in front of me!

Peter. Good.

Gemser. But how?

Peter. Christ did not speak of the resurrection when he gave his bread and cup; therefore it is not necessary for the recipients to be concerned with the resurrection. Christ will drink and give us a new and different cup when he brings his resurrection to full fruition in us.

and the bread and wine of death will cease. Therefore Paul said (1 Cor. 11, 26.): You should proclaim the death of the Lord until he comes; as if he said: When he comes, your dying with Christ will have its end. But now, before we sufficiently die to our strength, as often as we want to eat the bread of the Lord and drink from his cup, so often we must confess the death of the Lord with heart and mouth; 2) that is, we must also feel the death of Christ in us, and feel the righteousness of Christ, not ours.

Gemser. God be praised!

Peter. God help us into the heated knowledge of the death of Christ!

Gemser. Amen.

He who can better instruct us, let him do so, and soon, for the sake of his spouse; for we are soft, willing, and eager to accept and honor God's truth, to whom be glory forever!

4) Whoever has the desire to read these matters in a straightforward manner, may read this booklet:

Whether one can prove with holy scripture that Christ is in the sacrament with body, and blood, and soul?

Item, the interpretation of the eleventh chapter 1 Cor.

Item, the interpretation of these words of Christ: This is my body, which was given for you.

Item, that the sacrament is not a sign by which men can strengthen and assure their consciences.

Item, against the old and new papist masses.

Item: the faith in the promise and sacrament, as the new papists speak, is a false faith, gives birth to sin, and does not forgive sin. In which he will also find more, and other reasons.

2) In the original: Muth.

3) "the" of us put instead of "our" in the old edition.

4) The following register of Carlstadt's writings does not originally belong to the "Gesprächbüchlein", but will have been added only in a second edition in 1525, because the writing mentioned in the second place, "the interpretation of the 11th Cap. of the First Epistle to the Corinthians" is identical with the "Schrift vom widerchristlichen Mißbrauch", No. 3 in this volume, in which (§ 6) already this "Gesprächbüchlein" is referred to.

1) In the old edition: declared.

4. John Oecolampad's Sermon on the Holy Sacrament of the Altar. *)

1521.

Translated from Latin by M. Aug. Tittel.

Joh. Oecolampadius [wishes] Bernhard Adelmann von Adelmansfelden, canon in Augsburg, his patron and friend in Christo, Heil!

According to old custom, [I] should have received you with some reverence when you came back from the bath. Since I do not know anything else to offer this time, I ask you to accept this speech as a bad gift, even though it hardly deserves the rain of veneration. And if you like its content, let it enjoy the honor of your protection, and thus come into the hands of others; or else keep you assured that I will not lack the duty to wish you happiness, as much as is in me. Given from the monastery of St. Alton. 1)

Joh. Oecolampadii Speech of the Holy Sacrament of the Altar.

Since the most precious and incomparable and holy treasure, namely the body of our Lord Jesus Christ, is always presented to us for a daily sacrifice and spiritual meal, or even for the special joy of some feast, we must take every care, my beloved, that Solomon's parable about fools does not also apply to us, namely: "What good are riches to a fool who has not so much wit and understanding that he possesses them? Or the well-known proverb: "What shall the cow do with muskets?" or according to the evangelical saying (Matth. 7, 6.): "What shall the pigs do with pearls?" or that we are not scolded by the apostle (which is terrible to hear) "guilty of the body and blood of Jesus Christ. (1 Cor. 11, 27.) We must therefore take heed.' For this is where our much come into great danger, yes, even get lost, as the apostle says (v. 30): "That is why there are so many weak and sick among you, and a good part sleep. And is this no wonder. For it is a secret (sacrament), and the most secret of all, covered with many blankets, and above all human understanding, and a medicine (or antidote) very harmful to evil hearts. We will speak something about it (as the present feast and your desire requires). But you will be willing to listen and pay attention.

(2) It will therefore be well worth the effort to hear and remember my opinion, and indeed the opinion of all pious men and scholars, as in everything else that Jesus Christ, our Master, either taught or appointed, and to accept it well and willingly; not, however, what comes to us first, as most people do, but what Christ primarily had in mind, and what he primarily intends for us. But I take care (as is usually done in a wrong way in all matters) that in this holy action the right purpose is met by very few.

(3) For since there are three things to be observed here: (1) the proper use of the sacramental signs, namely, the bread and wine; (2) the due worship of the present Christ; (3) the secret (or spiritual) incorporation and care for the spiritual body which is given to us through the bread and the true body of Christ; and since each of these things is to be well observed, how many are there who take all this to heart? Many can be found who have to do with godly opinions, business and ceremonies, as often as this holy custom is celebrated, but are not provided with proper faith toward Christ and due love toward their neighbor. There are also many who, in the use of the sacraments, adhere to the head, but do not seem to respect the members at all, i.e., who are completely devoted to the worship of Christ, but neglect the brethren and sometimes even hate them, and thus ridicule Christ more than they venerate him. Behold, this is a perverse

1) Oecolampad lived two years in the Brigitten Monastery Altmünster in Augsburg 1520-1522, then he went to Franz von Sickingen and from there still in 1522 to Basel, where he received a letter from Luther, dated June 20, 1523. (De Wette, Vol. II, p. 352.)

*) This sermon appeared in a single edition in 1521 under the title: 8vrrno äs kucranwuto "uoüarlstias, then also in the same year added to the sermons vs vera rssursrtioue and vo Auuckio FuuxsrtÄtis. We reproduce the text according to Walch's old edition.

Trade, there the sincere love, as the purpose of such a high mystery, is not perceived. We want to talk about these three pieces properly, and as much as serves the matter. And first of all of the sacramental custom, namely, what to think of bread and wine, and with what unity¹⁾ one must come to this table.

(4) Therefore, we need a special and deaf simplicity here, so that we avoid presumption and trust in the omnipotence of the Word of God more than in the weakness of our intellect. Our presumption is always repugnant to God and dangerous everywhere, but [in God's word and divine things]²⁾ is the most dangerous. Weak eyes are blinded by the sight of the sun; and he who investigates majesty (or high things) is oppressed by the glorious clarity. In vain we try to add a cubit to the measure of our intellect given by God. Our mind is like the Ark of the Covenant, which is made not by the whole cubit, but by the half cubit. God has also set limits to the mountains and hills of the mind, beyond which they do not rise. We may be elevated like hills by the pinnacle of reason, or as high as mountains, but we cannot go beyond the set limits. Therefore we believe without a doubt that under this bread the true body is present and under the wine the blood is contained. It should be enough for us to know as much as we learn from the Holy Scriptures. But otherwise our mind must be captured for the service of faith.

(5) How he who sits at the right hand of the Father above the heavens is also present on the altars is incomprehensible to us, but it need not mislead or distress us. Although the Almighty holds the throne of His Majesty in heaven, He is not lacking in presence in the mysteries and in our faith. Even the lineaments³⁾ do not leave my face, and yet they give their full and complete form in many mirrors, in which way Basil calls this mystery a counter-image or pattern.

6) Whether, by the way, the essence of the bread and wine ceases to be, and the accidental qualities exist for themselves, or whether it is transformed into the body of Christ according to its greatness⁴⁾ and perishes, or whether it contains Christ in itself, so that it can at the same time

1) Instead of "unity", according to what is said in § 7, it should probably read "purity".

2) These bracketed words are inserted by us instead of the word: "everywhere".

3) i.e. the trains.

4) So put by us instead of: become.

Bread is what it seems to be, and must be called bread, is none of our business; idle schools may deal with this. What if we do not know how this bread is transformed into the flesh of Christ, since we do not even understand how common bread, which we eat at home, becomes our flesh? Yes, what wonder is it that our dull senses are also astonished at the denial that the essence does not perish, and that the accidental qualities cannot endure or take place without a body, and on the contrary say that the body of Christ is present, although the essence of the bread remains? What, I say, is the miracle, since we do not know how the child Christ was born without violation of the virgin womb, or how he came to his disciples with the doors closed after his resurrection? This, I say, does not concern us; it may be possible in whatever way it wants. To ask in unbelief about the sacraments, how they are done, deserves a very hard answer, as the examples show enough: namely to Nicodemo, who did not understand the mystery of regeneration; and the Jews, who quarreled about it: "How can this man give us his flesh to eat? (Joh. 6, 52.) Let us have enough of the angel's word, who said to Mary, who asked him, "The Holy Spirit will come upon you, and the power of the Most High will overshadow you," for here also everything insists on the power or might of God, who speaks, so it is done, and who does everything he wills in heaven and on earth according to his good pleasure. So then our presumption must not prevail here. There may always be bread and wine, but here we seek nothing less than bread and wine. We do not ask here for that which feeds and satisfies the body, but for that which refreshes and fills the soul. We do not look at the visible, but at the invisible. What we worship, what we hunger for, what we see with the eyes of the mind and in faith, a blind Homer sees as little as one who has lynx eyes. They are fools who want to run from one altar to another and make noise. Such bread may or may not remain wheat bread after the blessing, but it is not wheat bread for us, but heavenly bread; whether it is leavened or unleavened, we still have an unleavened Easter, namely Christ. We leave aside here everything that the servant of God puts on the altar, and stick only to that which is from heaven, and which the Holy Spirit has blessed and sanctified. Whatever it may be, it is only for us, instead of a sign and image, that the true body of the present Lord is to be found.

Christ covered with a sheath. I do not mean a mere image or figure, such as the first sheaves of Abel, or the sacrifice (offering) of Melchizedek, or the paschal lamb, the manna, the shewbread, the toasted bread of Elijah, and other figures of the Old Testament. Away with such blasphemy, that we should attach as much to the shadow as to the light and the truth, and to the same figures as much as to this most holy mystery. For this bread not only signifies the body of Christ, but is really the body itself. In this we believe Christ, the supreme truth, who cannot deceive, and has said, "Take and eat, for this is my body." So we confess badly that Christ's body and blood are present and contained, but how and in what way we leave unasked, because it is neither necessary nor useful. Every Uzzah [2 Sam. 6, 6.] must not touch the ark with unholy hands, nor must every one (of the people) come to the smoking mountain.

The rest, which the mind worships with devout silence and holy wonder, a joyful heart should accept and embrace with all inward and outward adoration. Let us bring to this sanctuary a chaste heart, and a body free from all impurity. This custom must be celebrated with respectable modesty and an adornment that befits Christian modesty. For everything that is blessed and sanctified must be acted upon in a holy and godly manner, how much more so that which the Lord Himself has blessed (or consecrated) in such a way that the One who blessed it is Himself present and revered. Therefore, where something unworthy takes place, it undoubtedly brings contempt and disgrace on Christ. Therefore the fathers have justly decreed punishments against those who do wrong in this. For he who is dissolute and careless in these high things will certainly be of no use in any good work.

(8) That Christ did not actually command us anything about ceremonies in this use is because he brought to our minds the higher and more important things, against which the enjoyment or use of this sacrament and the reverence to be paid to it, as well as our zeal and effort to send the heart to it through confession, fasting, and the like, are to be regarded as quite insignificant. Not as if this should be put aside, but because the more important things must come first and not be omitted. Therefore Origen in Matthaeum counts the frequent communicating among the tithes of cumin, mint and anise, which the Pharisee takes away. For the more important thing, which must never be refrained from, is judgment, barmcordiality and faith. That is why the customs and ceremonies are not always the same in all churches, and many things are and will be changed in the following years. In former times, when St. Jerome was still alive, they ate the body of the Lord in common (or individual) houses. Today, however, it would be a great abomination to take such things other than in the temple or from the altar, unless sickness or some other need required otherwise. Before this, communion was held after the Lord's Supper, and especially on Green Thursday, which was still held this way at the time of the Carthaginian Concilii. Today, healthy people must enjoy this heavenly bread only sober. Before this it happened every day, now of the year any time. This is certainly a great sign of cold love, and a proof of a terrible ingratitude. Unfortunately, the priests are usually blamed for this; while they should call the guests to frequent visits to this holy table with godly exhortations, they often push them away, and thus grieve the eager souls, who are so eager for it, as unworthy, who are not subject to any canonical punishments and are excluded from it. On the other hand, at Easter, they let the most diverse people join them together with the saints without distinction. But each one may bear his own judgment!

(9) Before this, these mysteries were not offered in gold and silver, for Peter said, "I do not have silver and gold" (Acts 3:6). Therefore Exuperius, bishop of Toulouse and martyr, carried the body of Christ in a basket and the blood of Christ in glass chalices to the sick. Today (namely in the papacy) this is almost the most noble concern, that only the vessels are pure and precious, about the souls it may stand, as it will. In the past, everything that was precious was sold to feed the hungry and redeem the captives. Today, church property is increasing because the poor are suffering from hunger, and it is distributed least among those to whom it belongs most. Before this, both figures were given; which custom has nothing criminal, and still takes place in some places. Today, however, the laity must make do with one figure when enjoying this great mystery. Yes, it is desired that, with the permission of the popes, 1) the northern peoples use only the one form of bread in the Lord's Supper. The northern peoples take only the single form of the bread in the Lord's Supper. 2) From this it is clear that the main work of godliness is neither in the constant sacrifice (mass),

1) Should probably mean: arrangement.

2) As it seems, both priest and people. (Walch.)

nor in the reverence that one otherwise has to show to these high mysteries, but in faith in Christ and in love towards one's neighbor. "I want," he says, "mercy, and not sacrifice." (Matth. 9, 13.)

(10) From this, then, let us move on to what is more necessary and what we want to say about the other. Let us then consider more closely what the high, majestic, holy, inestimable thing is that is hidden under such a cover. It is, however, the highest thing, to be admired before heaven and earth. For here is the pearl, which we all must use our possessions to buy. Here is the box of graces and truth, so full of these jewels. Here is the most precious fruit, not from the cursed earth, but sprouted from the Blessed Virgin Mary. It is here of which David says, "There shall the little wheat stand on the height of the mountains." 1) Or as the .Ours 2) read, "There shall be a stronghold on the earth, on the heights of the mountains, its fruit shall be exalted on Lebanon." It is here the living, life-giving bread, "the bread that came from heaven," thus bringing us into heaven and making us heavenly. It is here the sacrifice of all sacrifices, the chief burnt offering (or whole sacrifice) of the most pleasing and sweet savor before God, pleasing Him above all, thereby making sufficient for our sins, and thereby pleasing to God what is pleasing to Him. And what the same is, we have said, and say it again:

It is "the true body and the true blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Body, which in Mary, the virgin, was assumed by the Word into the unity of the Person, thus suffered and died for us, also afterwards transfigured again by the triumph of the Resurrection and Ascension. What higher thing can be said or considered? The body of Christ is there, therefore Christ himself, God and man, is there. We worship him, we bend our knees before him, we long for him. Him we praise on earth, whom the heavenly hosts praise in heaven; and whom they behold in glory, him we have before our eyes in faith. He is with them with his face unveiled, but with us with his face veiled. He feeds them and us with the same bread, and there is no other difference between them and us, but that they have come to the full glory.

We are assured of the same glory through such a pledge. We are both incorporated into Christ through eating. We both enter into the Spirit of the Lord, that no other will of the Lord be but in us. We are conformed to Christ through grace here, as they are through glory there. We are conformed to Christ here by virtues, those there by rewards. But we still have to wait for bliss until we finally, after this life, enjoy it with others, as is right. This is the right heavenly bread and heavenly drink, when one gulps down the recognized God in certain and undoubted faith into the bowels of the heart. Who will always give us such bread? Who will give us (or would God!) that we are always satiated by His flesh? Away with all small faith! "Believe (says Augustine), and you have eaten." Faith makes GOD present before us; faith feeds, for one need not take Augustine's word, or the 6th Cap. Johannis, as if one had to believe that Christ is present and to be eaten only when we see or feel the holy bread present, but we eat Jesus, the Son of God and of Mary, the Savior of the world, always truly, as often as we believe in him at any time, no matter in which place it may be. St. Chrysostom also speaks to this effect in his interpretations of the Epistle to the Hebrews, when he says: "Do those enjoy the supper who come to it once or more or less in the year? No! Neither those who go once a year, nor those who go several times; but those who come with a pure conscience and chaste heart and blameless life, they always go to communion, but those who are not of this kind, never at all."

This is the most blessed meal, from which no pope will keep us, and from which only unbelief will exclude us. Of course, this is the greatest comfort for us, that God always dwells in us, if we are obedient to His word and willingly listen to it. It is well for us that we can become children of God if we believe in Christ. But if in the sacrament of bread the flesh of Christ is miraculously and supernaturally present (although the spiritual meal goes far beyond the sacramental), the spiritual meal becomes somewhat more respectable. 3)

(13) For how can it not be great that the most beautiful of the children of men should be present, and that the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, should present himself? Now if we always

3) Should probably mean exceedingly glorious.

1) Ps. 72:16: The grain will stand thickly on the top of the mountains.
2) The preceding is Oecolampad's translation. By "ours" he refers to the Vulgate.

say that if we had lived in Christ's time, when he visibly walked among the Jews, we would certainly have done everything to be worthy of his most gracious sight and to see him: what will we fail to do, since he is really present? Why do we not humble ourselves? why do we not worship him? why do we not implore his help and mercy? Do we regret that we do not see him with bodily eyes? Oh, it does us no harm; we have no harm but benefit. By faith we see much more blessedly, even more surely, than the Jews with bodily eyes. Those who have not seen and yet believe are more blessed than those who have seen and believed, not to mention those who have seen and yet have not believed. For they are wretched and miserable.

There are three kinds of people who have either seen Christ blessedly or still see Him. Blessed are they who have seen with their eyes that which kings and prophets were not privileged to see. Blessed are those who look closely at the Word made flesh and turn their eyes to the heavenly things. But the most blessed and perfectly happy are those who see and praise the King in His adornment, as He is more glorious than all angels, with unwavering and tireless eyes. Our condition is like that of the middle window: we are worse off than those in heaven, but better off than those who have followed the body after Christ. They surpass us in glory, but we surpass them by faith, if we have but hoods, and are not more drowsy in them than they, and do not fail in our duties on occasion. We hear how eagerly and cheerfully the shepherds from the neighboring pastures or drifts ran to the child who had just been born in Bethlehem, and even the wise men hurried from the distant Orient, and how cheerfully, eagerly and hurriedly the people followed him, with great effort and difficulty, in the villages and towns even into the solitude, and almost before the sun had gone out, when he taught and performed miracles, so that they were sometimes in front of him, sometimes behind him, sometimes at his side, pressed him, fell at his feet, listened to him, and asked partly for themselves, partly for their own; some have been carried to him on beds, others have been lowered through the roof to his feet with the ceiling torn open; some have asked him to come to them, others have been afraid to ask him. But we also have such love and desire for Christ. Immanuel or God is also with us. Ex

Will also do wonders for us. Why are we so unmerciful and unjust to ourselves that we do not seek our own salvation through spiritual attendance (or submission)? Why do we not go to the invisible One because of our weakness? Do we doubt that this is his body, which he himself confesses with his mouth that it is his body? Do we want to cook the lamb by parables or interpretations, and (which would be sin) burn the bones of the king of Edom?

(15) Let us gladly make ready an inn for Christ, and let us often prepare a feast for him. Let us invite and refresh him often. Christ, in turn, will be hospitable and will feed us splendidly. He invites us and calls: "Come to me, all you who labor" (Matth. 11, 28.). He sends his servants and even forces us with threats to stay with him (Luc. 14, 23.). He prepares a meal (Matth. 22, 2.) and offers Himself to us as a fatted calf. He refreshes us so that we neither hunger nor thirst forever. How shall we depart from the Lord? "He has words of eternal life" (John 6:68). Let us be impudent with Magdalene, and pass through to his feet, fall down there, wet them with tears, and kiss and anoint them in godly devotion. Let us at least touch the garment with the bloody woman, and power will come from her (Luc. 8:46). Through the touching, which we either do in faith or which happens to us out of his mercy, we will be healed. He will heal leprosy by touching, enlighten the eyes by touching, drive out all diseases, cast out all devils, raise all the dead. Let us touch the Lord in faith, and he will touch us in mercy. The LORD thirsts for our faith, that he may water us with the water of life. He hungers for our righteousness, that he may feed us with the fruit of his merits, which his hands have made. Our righteousness creates faith; I say freely, faith is our justification. Our faith makes this mystery either powerful or ineffective, wholesome or unwholesome. For the Lord also calls it especially the mystery of our faith. Without a pledge, you would not have believed that your wounds would be healed, your wrongs cleansed, your sins forgiven. Therefore he gives his body as a pledge, so that all doubt and unbelief may be removed from the mind. It matters not how fatal, how various, how obsolete the disease may be. Whether thou

If you already stink and rot and perish, believe, for then of all pleasures and of all happiness, the most lovely you will live for the sake of this bread. So by the treasure happiness itself and the most abundant fullness of all of faith we can become more blessed than those with goods, the most certain peace, the most constant truth, whom Christ walked on earth. For this cause he hath the most correct justice, the purest holiness, goodness withdrawn himself from before our eyes, and hath gone and love itself. And what is said or thought to the highest, to the Father, that our faith might be strengthened yes, quite incomparably more than can be said and thereby, and not weakened or diminished. But if we have thought. This is the true bread of angels, the manna, neither, and see him neither with the eyes of the body nor which Christ presents to the angels and the blessed, but of the mind, we are justly counted more wretched than gives to us in secret; but which, as faith grows, becomes they. We must therefore see that our mind becomes purer more and more evident, and as we sigh for it more and from day to day and increases in faith in such a way that more in our hearts, our hearts are more and more it not only sees more than they do, but also attains to the refreshed and filled with sweetness.

glory of the angels and heavenly spirits, from which we 16 What shall we repay the Lord here? With what kind remain so far removed as we are or deviate from the of submission does he want to be honored? What does he worthy knowledge of Christ, the God. For when this cover give in such a high matter? Here, too, one can feel the is removed, that is, when the imperfect knowledge is ordinary kindness of God. He is always equally kind, the transformed into the complete vision of God, we will also sweet Jesus. He does not give anything heavy, nothing be like the angels. Since we must strive at all times, but hard; he does not urge people not to eat for many days, especially at the hour when we are awaiting such high to make heavy journeys, to cry out certain psalms (or mysteries, that not only Christ may descend to us from songs), to confess and count their sins fearfully, or heaven, but also that we may seem to ascend to him in anything else that can make things difficult and heaven, in order to praise him all the more fervently discourage people. "Do this," he says, "in remembrance among the angelic hosts and to extol him with blessed of me." What is easier? what is cheaper? what could he songs, His light is presented to us more clearly, and we have asked for that is easier? Who also does not want to are permitted to see the splendor and glory of the most think of it once, what should he start once? Who does not beautiful body, which was formerly so disfigured that like to think of a friend? What is easier than that? There is nothing beautiful was seen in it, and suffered so much nothing more common among friends than that they shame and disgrace of the worst death, but is now always think of each other. And friends have a good endowed with the highest glory and blessedness. And memory of this, especially if they have become fond of since this is the greatest joy, to see such things, one may one another through some strange virtue or good deed, also get to know the most wise soul of him, since the as all such things are in Christ toward us. The treasures of wisdom and knowledge of God are no longer remembrance is probably the least part of gratitude, and hidden, but are revealed and shown. And through this, as that is what Christ requires of us, nothing else in the least. through a door or way, one comes to truth and life, yes, But if we do our duty well even in this bad thing, we shall the same is suitable for life, through which we are not fail in any other of our duties; we shall willingly take it gradually brought to higher things. There, however, all upon ourselves, and in no thing be tardy. We will, as it everything attracts our eyes in the highest perfection and were, be forced to love him; we will thank him, serve him, makes them so happy that then all the glory of our great and sacrifice ourselves to him completely and voluntarily, Master lies clearly before our eyes and is discovered. He submitting to all danger, being joyful in adversity and shows Himself to His creatures without all mystery and affliction, going into death and all pain as it were dancing. darkness, namely in that which we have neither known Such a glorious and drunken cup is the cup of the Lord. nor 1) recognized of God, or have only guessed, as the "This shall ye do," saith Christ, "in remembrance of me." the source of all being, yes, the being itself, and the source The benefits of Christ can be remembered with pleasure, of all life, the life itself, the origin. but Christ Himself is remembered with even greater pleasure. The benefits would not be half so pleasant if they did not come from Christ: but Christ, without all such benefits, is not only to be remembered, but also to be remembered.

1) Thus set by us instead of: as.

worthy of all love and honor; even if he showed the creatures nothing good (that we put such an impossible case), but all kinds of evil. Let us first remember [him,] through whose majesty and excellence it happens that his good deeds must be dearer to us, especially since he wanted them to be so great that through them he would be even dearer to us, and through their remembrance his memory would always remain fresh with us. And we should not forget any of them, because they are not only great in themselves, but also come from him who is the greatest of all.

(17) But we are always forgetful, especially when we are well; we do not remember Christ and his benefits. But the unceasing goodness of Christ has also counseled us in this. For in addition to innumerable good deeds, he has also done this unheard-of one, and has offered us the tokens of his miracles. For he has given us his flesh for food and his blood for drink. Therefore the ingrates' shame must be the greater, but the pious' fruit and benefit must be the richer. In such a great heap of good deeds, however, he especially wanted to solemnize the memory of his death, because even hearts as hard as a diamond can be melted by it, and in it are many other great good deeds, such as the Incarnation, the Resurrection and the Ascension 2c. Thus Paul says, "As often as ye shall eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, ye shall proclaim the death of the Lord, until he come."

18 He also established it in such a way that nothing would be lacking to preserve and promote its memory. At this time he chose the last supper, which bordered, as it were, on death and life. He calls it a new testament, so that the memory of death, which confirms a testament, would be all the more sacred and unbreakable. For this he uses strange words and signs; for the signs of bread and wine rhyme well with suffering. No bread is made out of ground grains, and before the flour is mixed (or kneaded) with water and baked by fire. Nor is any wine made except from pressed grapes, which therein are a true image of Christ and of those who belong to him. These signs may still be obscure, but Christ himself reveals the secrecy of them in his words, when he blesses the bread and says: "Take and eat of it, all of you; this is my body, which will be given for you. Likewise also he took the cup, saying, This is my blood, which shall be shed for you and for many for the remission of sins."

Why does he commemorate the surrender and shedding? namely that he pressed the memory of suffering firmly into our hearts.

19 This is also indicated by the customs and offerings of our sacrifices. For they are nothing else than souvenirs or memories of that one sacrifice, which was offered on the cross for us. It is always only one sacrifice through all times and oers, because it is only a memory of the one sacrifice. And this memory is our thanksgiving. For since we can do or offer nothing else, we at least do what is offered to us and what we can still do, so that for so innumerable and great benefits we only cherish one memory as grateful people. Hence the name Eucharistia, which means thanksgiving, has been attached to the mystery. So you see that everything depends on the fact that we hold the memory of his good deeds above all precious and valuable. Therefore, let us be careful and always keep the words of the testament in mind. If we now, like Moses (Deut. 6, 6. ff.) we are commanded by the commandments (that they should always be in our hearts and told to our children, that we should remember them when we sit in our houses and when we walk, sleep or watch, and bind them, as it were, as a sign on our hands, so that they may speak, If, I say, we also bear the good deeds thus engraved as it were on marble and indelibly inscribed in our hearts, the remembrance of them will not be idle or unfruitful for us. For under the spruce the fire will burn.... And Paul reminds his Timothy of these things: "Remember," he says, "that Jesus rose from the dead!" (2 Tim. 2, 8.) For it will compel us to love Christ, so much so that even death itself will not be as strong as our love; and if we can rid ourselves of everything, yet it will not be possible of the love of God. There we will be unspeakably willing to do all godly works. There we will burn with eagerness to give thanks. Sweet tears of joy will flow. Then the heart will become fiery with holy ardor, and a joyful mouth will utter these generous words: "My heart is ready, God, my heart is ready". (Ps. 57, 8.) "Thy will be done, O Lord." (Matth. 6, 10.) "O Lord, what wilt thou that I should do?" (Acts 9:6.) "What shall I repay the Lord for all that he has done for me?" (Ps. 116, 12.) Therefore they are not foolish, but everything earthly.

The man also denies himself and offers himself to God as a complete sacrifice; he does not want to keep anything from his former will; he tolerates everything that has to be tolerated and does everything that has to be done. Then the yoke will be easy and all the burden of the Lord will be light. He does not care much that the body is mortified, that the inheritance and wealth are distributed among the poor, that evil is repaid with good, that enemies are appeased with benevolence, that one rejoices in tribulation, that one suffers death for the sake of the truth and the confession of faith. Yes! He is thus united with Christ and One Spirit with him. In this way the blood of Christ adorns the chaste cheeks of the brides, as Agnes said. Thus the flesh of Christ makes strong arms of His fencers (or fighters), in that from the heart of Christ goes juice and strength into the veins of the souls, and moistens (or refreshes) the marrow of His joyful Spirit, and consequently also fortifies the bones. There the flesh drives away the leanness of the minds, and the blood the dryness (drought) of the same. The flesh makes fleshy, fat and strong, the blood makes moist, cheerful, fresh and drunk. There the unleavened bread of the heavenly Adam makes the dough (lump) pure and alive, which before the leaven of the earthly Adam had spoiled. And in such delicious and cute food the ingratitude of the people cannot be described. Oh, what stupidity and wickedness it is that they are disgusted and repulsed by it, as by something abominable, and almost have to be forced to this table, from which, if one were cast out, it would be as terrible as being cast out of paradise. Who are we? and what is the house of our fathers, that God acts so graciously and together with us and draws us to His table, but we, as a proud Vasthi, would rather not come to it than taste His love and kindness, would rather eat all the porters than be satisfied by the angel bread?

20 But let us proceed to the third part. There remains, then, what we need not pass over, which Christ may well have seen when he instituted the sacrament. For although the things of which I have spoken are great, namely, to treat the sacred signs with godliness and devotion, and not to leave out of memory the benefits of Christ and of Christ himself, still not enough has been done with such a high mystery. For this is still necessary, which is to be observed especially according to the times, namely the care for the secret body of Christ. Let no one reject this teaching as something new, which is nevertheless as Christian as anything else. For this is what bread and wine teach with their images, and the body of Christ itself. For Paul says: "So we are all one bread and one body, who are partakers of one bread and one cup. Cup." (1 Cor. 10:17.) For as One Bread is made of many grains, and the true Body of Christ is made up of many members, so out of many believers there is One secret (spiritual) Bread, and One spiritual Body of Christ, of which He Himself is the Head. We do not deny (as someone might object) that Mary chooses the best part, and that the life that consists in looking is better than that which consists in doing. Which Paul also gives to understand, since he desires "to be dissolved and to be with Christ, which (as he says) would be much better. (Phil. 1, 23.) Nevertheless, he preferred to remain in the flesh for our good. Paul would rather miss the heavenly glory for a while and be satisfied with it, and we want to be annoyed about it, if we suffer a little misfortune in our Christian idleness (if I may speak like that) for the sake of our brothers? Christ is not deprived of his service, as he would rather have mercy than sacrifice. We never sit so close to Christ at table, and never serve Christ so sacredly, as when we lose something in Christian leisure (or rest) for the purpose of serving His spiritual body and brethren in Christ's name: As we deal with one of the least of His own, whether mercifully or cruelly, Christ will accept and judge it as well as if we had done it to Himself. Therefore we must not complain that Christ is not seen. We often meet a hungry man, and Christ himself meets us; why then do we not feed Christ? We meet a naked man, and Christ is before us; why then do we not clothe Christ? There is a sick man lying down, a prisoner in jail is all taken away. One of the brethren is mistaken; why do we despise Christ Himself? Christ so often appears to us, and is not respected. Then see if our whole life is not all hypocrisy and pretense of godliness. For true godliness and holiness must show itself in love and mercy. But what kind of love is this if we do not know and do not want to know the one for whom Christ did not refuse to die, in whose soul the image of the Godhead is expressed? He had his most holy flesh, which he took from the Virgin, beaten with rods and scourges and crucified, so that he might save and preserve the spiritual body. When the soldiers attacked him and wanted to capture him, he said: "When

If you seek me, let these go. (John 18:8) Think not, therefore, that Christ will be angry with us if we prefer to do godly business than to sit still, to think rather than to be silent, and to eat more holy food than to fast. Of this custom he says, "Do it in remembrance of me." But he does not give so lightly of our neighbor, for he wants us to love our enemies and to make them friends with good deeds. Therefore, one cannot deny anything to the fellow believers and right members of his body. He taught this when he washed the feet of all of them and preached the glorious sermon of love. This one commandment he gave, that we love one another as he loved us. But he loved us unto death: what shall we not do for brethren, for whom, according to Christ's commandment and example, we ought not to spare death itself? And as Cyprian says, "As often as we drink the cup of the Lord, we must always be ready to shed blood for the brethren."

This is the secret of the peace which the priest so often gives and receives in prayer; not the peace which the world seeks, but the peace which Christ bequeathed to His own, that neither by cunning nor by force, neither by fortune nor by misfortune, shall we allow ourselves to be turned away from the love of God or of our neighbor, nor shall we ever let go of such a principal commandment. The apostles and the first Christians, after they received the Holy Spirit and became citizens of the city of God, were always well aware of this, since they remained united in the temple, or broke bread in all the houses, and the multitude of believers was one heart and one soul. Where did such unanimity come from? Certainly, the hope of earthly gain did not bring them together, since they had abandoned everything and regarded their wealth as dung. Nor was it danger and its fear that brought them together, since they were glad to be considered worthy to endure danger for the name of Jesus. Nor were they bound together by any fleshly relationship, since for Christ's sake they knew neither father nor mother, brother nor sister, nor respected such things, but the founder of their friendship was Christ, who made all the members stick together among themselves. Therefore they knew of no deceit, trickery, mischievousness, arrogance, conceit, envy, strife, slander. They harmed no one and helped everyone. And this was no wonder, because honor and service were the same, everything was common with them; they did not seek to live tenderly and well; they did everything according to the law of love,

They sought only the common salvation. All their spirits burned with the same fervor, so that the number of believers increased. These taught, those prophesied, spoke with various tongues, healed the sick, or performed miraculous signs; the others served, and each contributed something to the common good; no one sought his own. For as we are so created by God's wise government that one needs another for help; one has wealth but no strength; the other has strength but no money; these are strong to serve, those wise to rule; and in a word, no one has enough in himself, no one is born for himself alone, so also no one is born again for himself alone, but each needs the other's help and support.

(22) This is the communion of saints, which is written in our creed; this is the most holy assembly, since those who live in the uttermost parts of India and Britain, whether they know Rome or not, whether they are pleasing to men or detestable to them, are nevertheless, if they only cling to Christ in faith and hold fast to the head, united also with us, if we are otherwise members of Christ. For Christ is common to all; he is the one head, and is of all One baptism, One faith, One sacrifice, One table, One inheritance, One city, toward which we are journeying: why then are not the lesser things equally and one to all? why have we not happiness and unhappiness, joy and sorrow, in common among ourselves? why do we not also put good and blood, fortune, counsel, and action, yea, all things together? If our love is without falsity, how should we begrudge earthly happiness to those whom we divine the heavenly? and how do we not want to help out those from our bodily goods to whom we heartily wish all good and well-being? Oh, it is all false and lying what many say: they wish all the salvation of souls to those whom they hate, but they would like to see them afflicted with some temporal misfortune. Such people, whoever they may be, either do not think enough about what great joy will be there one day, or they lie with a bold face. For envy cannot withhold or begrudge the lesser when it shares the greater. For it is far from true love to give the highest, and yet, if there is opportunity, to refuse the lesser. The apostle severely chastises the Corinthians that, since they should have shown the greatest equality, they were so unmerciful to the poor, and when others complained of hunger, they filled themselves with wine. When others complained of hunger, they filled themselves with wine and were heated by it.

would be. By what hardness they were not a little guilty of this so high mystery. True holiness is tested by love. This is a certain proof of a worthy communion, if after it one becomes more inclined to meekness, more willing and long-suffering to bear other people's vexations (or insults), and more ready to serve even one's enemies. On the other hand, it is safe to say that the meal will be unpleasant for those who still harbor resentment and suspicion, who carry bitterness and poison, who are slanderers, who love quarrels and strife, who cannot tolerate the weaknesses of others, and who are not willing to serve their brothers. Let it be, however, that at the renewed remembrance of the Passion of Jesus you felt a strange inward sweetness and shed the sweetest tears of joy, almost being enraptured like a Franciscan: it will be of no use to you if you do not extend yourself in love.

Now let those examine themselves who go down from the churches, as it were justified, and despise the humble with high eyes, harshly attack the miserable, and advance laziness and idleness to the beggars and the poor with defiant and threatening words. The preachers and teachers may be responsible for this, who much sooner and more forcefully persuade the people to build many altars, to come occasionally to supper in large crowds, to sacrifice often and much, to endow rich annual memorials of the dead and vigils, than to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to redeem the prisoners, and to give alms to others. O of avarice! O of the theft of the church! O of mischievousness and intrigue! Alas! to what does not the wretched and accursed avarice bring men! The fellow priests may hear this gladly or unwillingly, so it is all one. But I beg and beseech that they will gladly hear what is written there: "Mercy is better than sacrifice" (Matth. 9, 13.), even than the 1) fruits of the other kind, which the absent and the dead receive through our praising. And they do not have to make do with Iscariot's grumbling: the delicious ointment, which was poured out on Jesus by Mary, could have been sold for 300 pieces of silver (or pennies) and given to the poor, who nevertheless was punished because of it. For Judas would not only have been excused, but even praised, if he had been so minded in his heart as he was with his mouth.

1) So put by us instead of: "also to the fruits", which seems to us to give no sense. Our correction should say: mercy is also better than vigils and masses.

pretended. Our priests, however, take care of Christ just as Judas did of the poor, unless the latter had more faith. I do not like to say it in German; but what I conceal, their indulgence and laziness constantly speaks loudly enough, and almost the whole world sighs over it, and in such a way that it does almost nothing more about anything of the kind. But for now to be silent about the evil customs of this time, Christ does not speak against, but for the poor. "You always have the poor with you, but you do not always have me" (Matth. 26, 11.). For since this time he wanted to have something special because of his person, so that the memory of his death would be all the more famous and glorious, he only wanted to precede the poor in this and not always, and to be esteemed above them. But if he had said: "You will always have me" (as he said afterwards: "I will be with you until the end of the world" (Matth. 28, 20.)), then one might have thought that he was pleased with such an effort. But he says: "You do not always have me. Be now always content with the woman's doing, henceforth I will deal with you no more. Henceforth the poor shall not be deprived of the least thing by me. And they will not suffer any particular harm, since I have so far commended them to you with such diligence. Do them good afterwards, as much as you want. I will not only gladly let it happen, but also praise and accept it, just as if it had happened to me myself. But did Christ say to the rich, "Go, sell all that you have, and give to the priests and monks, and follow me? Will he ask at the last day: How much did you hire priests? because they are pressed. How much money did you spend on the altars? Oh, how good it would be for us then! But now he does not remember the priests with a syllable. But he gives everything to the poor, and in the day of his wrath he will reproach those who have not fed him in the hungry.

(24) But the money-minded have their little helpers and their little bundles, and though they cannot do it in their own name, yet they gather together in the name of the poor, and in the name of Christ.

(25) This, too, does not belong here at all, which is otherwise said quite truly: there is nothing more precious than the sacrifice of Christ, and no higher merit; which we gladly confess and admit, and are also glad about it. But it does not follow from this that one always earns more with divine prayers than alms. I do not want to say anything about the causes now. But it is not at all proper to see to it that the people are More impels to heap up the masses than to give alms diligently. Those who feed the hungry out of love and remembrance of Christ are nothing less fortunate, and often equal in merit to those who serve the altar.

(26) Let them likewise examine themselves who judge life and morals! What kind of equity is it among them to consider it a monstrous crime if some priest, who is not so careful, misses something in the ceremonies, or spills a drop, or a layman touches the chalice with his hand? But this must be a small mistake, if he does his work in arrogance, lust, envy or unbelief, and defiles the name and altar of God.

(27) Let all hear it and shun it, who at every little occasion or cause separate and separate themselves from the faithful, as unfortunately happens to the irreparable harm of Christendom. The world is divided, and most countries are torn into different sects. Their disunity is either because of different customs, or for the sake of some doctrines, which are neither sufficiently confirmed nor rejected in holy scripture. This country needs leavened bread in the blessing, that unleavened; this 1) communicates under one, that 1) under another form. The former keeps Easter according to the time and custom of the Jews, but the latter wants to have nothing in common with them. Such things and the like are not of such importance that a partition should be made among us. Those who are burning in true love will not be the ones who-

If they cannot put it on a better foot, they will tolerate and overlook it rather than let themselves be separated and divorced from someone who adheres to Christ in faith and love.

(28) Let our defectors and apostates tremble and be terrified, who seek their part with the false and heretics, and drink the wine of error from the vine of Sodom, and eat the bread of mourning, and go over to the secret body of their chief, the prince of darkness, but clothed with the sheepskin approach also to the holy table, that they may rage the more and do harm in the simple host.

29. We, however, who are nourished by the evangelical truth, do not want to rely on our works, but place our hope and salvation in Christ alone, holding nothing more dear than love, by which we stand in good understanding and harmony with him and all his people, that if we serve him under this excellent sacrament, or otherwise in right and godly faith of the Spirit, we also have his love toward all, and thereby become worthy to come to the heavenly table with all the blessed and saints, and to be conformed to his glorious clarity; In such a state we may not only see the very brightest, truest, and most spiritual body manifestly and clearly, but also recognize more closely its most blessed soul and most blessed Godhead, which it has in common with the Father and the Holy Spirit; to whom be glory and praise! Amen.

1) So put by us instead of: "these" and "those".

5. Joh. Oecolampad's letter to the Swabian preachers.*)

Before October 1525.

Translated from Latin.

To his brothers, beloved in Christ, who preach Christ in Swabia, John Oecolampadius wishes grace and peace from God.

You yourselves know, beloved brethren, how sacred and how precious love is entrusted to us by the Lord Jesus Christ, and with what great cunning.

and violence, persecution and temptation, the old and cunning enemy endeavors to invalidate and destroy them, especially among the ministers of the Word. For he sees well how much harm is done to the church when, instead of one shepherd, many rule over it, that is, when those who are the shepherds of the church are the shepherds of the church.

*) This letter of Oecolampad is attached to the writing which he published in 1525 under the following title: Os Muuiuu vsrdoruru Ooiuiui, lios 68t Corpus M6UM, fuxta V6tu8ti88iiu08 autorss 6xpo8itions livsr. This writing is reprinted in the ^otu st Kriptu puvlioaa soolssius ^irtsruUsrAious, rss. O. El. DkutNus, p. 41 sau., our letter ibid. p. 150. Hereafter we have improved the old translation. The letter is to be placed before the month of October 1525, because the preachers did not meet in Schwäbisch-Hall until the end of September. Compare the introduction.

If the shepherds are unanimous, they will be divided among themselves, so that the sheep will go astray without a shepherd and be exposed to the fury of the ferocious wolves. You yourselves know that nothing is so detrimental, nothing is so harmful, nothing is so distressing as this kind of trouble, you yourselves who, I do not doubt, will take all care with prayer, work, patience, gentleness and steadfastness so that the enemy does not have the upper hand, even if he has it in mind. He tries well, and in some cases he does something; but I hope that the Lord Jesus, who fights for us from above, will rebuke him and keep the victory. At least, as far as I am concerned, I would much rather die blessed than live in unchristian discord with one of my brethren, even if he were inferior to me; and for this very reason I will not refrain from anything that may serve to restore and maintain Christian friendship, although I do not see how it could be avoided that some minds should not be drawn away from me by false brethren who seek to confuse everything, if they have not already been drawn away, as I have long been told. For why should I not take care of absent ones what sometimes happens in a house, however much one tries to keep peace? Or how should a beloved brother not have to be careful not to cause offense to others? Offense to others? And it would certainly be lamentable if I should be separated from you, whose faith and godliness I have tested for a long time, and with whom I have lived in closer friendship, and as much as there is in me, and as long as the Lord Christ will be dear to both parts, I will not permit this sin.

2 There is a rumor, and the letters of certain people explain this sufficiently, that zealous people have been offended by it, who have heard that I have not joined in sermons here in the matter of the Lord's Supper to most of those who have a great reputation and are even considered pillars of the church. That it happened, I do not deny; nevertheless, love should rightly have remained unharmed, because I did not do anything untimely or other than out of love for the truth. But I will not suffer that honest hearts are angry with me for a long time, if they are otherwise angry, if Christ does not leave my groaning unheard. For why should "they be angry with a friend who loves them dearly, is innocent, and, like them, eagerly seeks Christ's honor without sparing any danger? If they are angry with me, they may also be angry with themselves, because they understand the truth, as they understand it, with the same, or with a different, attitude.

perhaps with even more burning zeal. Among Christians the saying of the comedy writer has no place: Truth makes hateful. For, as the apostle says, 1 Cor. 13:6: "Love rejoices in the truth"; and the very God who is love is also truth. Just as one does not act contrary to love through love of the truth, so also for the sake of love the truth remains unharmed. Now nothing must be done more diligently in the church than the investigation of the truth, through which one grows in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus. But we all can still grow. For the Father of lights leaves many things hidden from our eyes, which he reveals in due time and discovers to those who diligently investigate, if only envy and vain glory are far from us. For the apostle writes to the Philippians [Cap. 3, 15.], "And if ye hold anything else, let GOD reveal it unto you." And again [1 Cor. 14:30.], "If a revelation be made to another sitting there, let the first be silent." How can a peace-loving person be ill pleased with this, or a "truth-loving" person take it spitefully, if one is devoted not to strife but to truth? That would be to repay good with evil. For we can create no greater benefit than if, following Christ's example and through his grace, we do not hold back the truth, especially in necessary matters, but want to communicate it to others. But whether I have done this, I leave to your judgment. Truly, you will not be able to reject such my attitude (animus); you may also examine my words as sharply as you wish. For I do not arrogate to myself the mastery of arrogance, but I must be mindful of my office; and just as I am intent on truth with all diligence, so I also want to leave nothing to love.

3. Therefore, in order that no one may be offended by a malicious and unfounded rumor, I have written this document, which was forced from me by the insolent cries of some, in my defense, and I now hand it over to you, beloved brethren, so that you may see from it whether ours is more justified or what others say; whether I reject the church fathers as they accuse me; whether I seek that which serves the glory of God or the glory of my own name. But do not judge, as you are accustomed to do, by reputation. Perhaps some think it would have been better if I had not spoken of the matter itself, what the Lord's Supper is and how the bread is the body, but only of the use of the sacrament before God.

my people. But it was not possible for me to accept their good opinion, because the papists and others imagined such nonsensical things in people's minds that it would be the greatest impiety to keep silent about it. My listeners were waiting when I would finally present my opinion. Letters from my friends arrived daily, in which they earnestly demanded an account of faith on this point from me. Yes, I still do not see how one can have the holy and pure use of the Lord's Supper, as long as the ingrained highly dangerous superstition remains untouched. I had no desire to start a quarrel, but in order to make the seed good, I had to hoe the field, which otherwise would have become full of weeds. If only others had made use of such a composure in their speech, perhaps most things would have been settled in some places, although my modesty in words did not help me at all, so that my adversaries became even more furious and mocked me in a thousand ways. Therefore, I thought it worth the trouble that I dealt with the matter, which does not shy away from the light, in public writings, such as

The good people, whom I have tried to appease but not to provoke, may be angry with me and accuse me. It is therefore pleasing to the Father in heaven to put his children to the test, so that the truth may shine forth all the brighter. He uses the sins of men according to his wisdom for the glory of his name: but let us all, brethren, take care that we be not found among the vessels of wrath, and that if ever any offence arise, it be without our fault. Let us watch over the herd against the wolves; but let us also watch over ourselves, for whom a far greater danger hangs over our heads, especially if love is not to be found among us above all things. A fault can easily be overlooked if only faith in Christ is present; but we will not reconcile discord even with our blood. For God loves those who live peacefully together in one house, and is in their midst; who also keep us always in unity through His Holy Spirit, and grant that we may have one mind in Christ, and with one mouth praise His heavenly Father. Amen. Basel, Anno 1525.

End of the twentieth part.

The first part of the book is a list of some of the rare or obsolete words in Luther's writings.

The numbers indicate (unless otherwise noted) the volume and column of our edition. Many of these words have been replaced in the text by those now in use. In order not to make the directory too large, the uncommon expressions in the opposing writings have not been included, but where we have been able to give an explanation, they have been explained in the writings themselves.

but -- again. 18, 1002. 20, 197.	Bachant - unlearned man. 22, 1496.
buteins - once again. 19, 1084. 1092. 20, 243.	Banketen - Banketiren, holding banquets. 20, 2137.
abspannen - to deprive someone of something (Leipziger Ooncordia , p. 477, e manidus auferre). 10, 82. 84. 20, 1858. Erl. 47, 199.	bannig (bennig) - belonging to the bann, Witt. (1554) 7, 397.
wagon - wagon off. 22, 1033.	Barne - barbel, a fish. Old edition 8.1455. .
efern - repeat. 20, 593.	merciful - pitiful. 20, 1794.
Aglaster - Magpie. 22, 1588.	Bear Wolf Man Wolf. Erl. 47, 205. jen. (1562), 8, 241.
Ain, Amen - tips of the ears. 20, 235. 1000.	22, 848.
Alb - white chasuble. 18, 1361. 20, 185.	baurkündig - haughty, associated with a coarse nature. 19, 1349.
alfenzen, alfenzen - to juggle, to perform antics. 18, 962.	be mindful of - be mindful of. 19, 777.
19, 248.	Bechtlein - Spänlein. 13, 749.
Alfenzen, Alfanzeri - jugglery, jester antics. 18, 1461. 19, 246.	bedes both. 19, 1735.
alleding - quite. 18, 1331.	Begme - a kind of nuns. 19, 853. s. Pegine.
all-thirtieth-all-merciful. 19, 421.	certified - authenticated. 19, 1898.
Ammern (emders) - glowing ash. Jen. (1568) 6, 112b.	comfortable - pleasing, at will, pleasant. 19, 1116.
an (pronounced: ahn) - without; of:	take to heart - make hearty. 22, 664.
an - to get rid of. 18, 296.	Beißdrein - dirt. 19, 1402.
Devotion - attention. 20, 216.	beiten - wait. - distributed-missed. De Wette III, 47.
The word concipere (Luther). 13, 2668.	click--blank. 20, 768.
presume - measure, adjust. 12, 85.	announce - to make known. 18, 1300.
Armenia, a poison. 19, 1287.	Bellitschier - (bona sciera) - good standing (donum. vultum). 22, 298.
Arstultus (for Aristotle) - Archnarr. 18, 1328.	1677. .
Asperges (from adspergo)- Zuthat. 19, 1904.	repent - repent. 18, 305.
to make a fuss about, to make a burden of. 18, 1341.	Report - Communion rich. 19, 1289. 1392.
aufgehoben - held out, moved up. Old edition, vol. 7, 1160.	Reports - Communion (xxxxxxx) (Luther). 19, 1292.
unbutton - unbuttoning. 20, 222.	toast - to make someone warm. 20, 31.
to nail - to lace open. 20, 791.	make called - make famous. Old ed. 8, 675.
put on - make a fool of. 18, 1511.	to be called - to have the reputation. 19, 722.
Appearance - Anhalt, Zuflucht. Old edition, vol. 7, 674.	Professions - Occupation. 20, 166.
Aureola - gold florin. 19, 1946.	modestly assigned, communicated. Old edition 7, 1559. 1708. 2164.
Lust (Carlstadt) - rutting heat. 20, 204.	resolve - overcome by reasons. 19, 268.
to make a boast - to shout out boastfully. 12, 89; also: to make slander.	make burdensome. 18, 949.
outShear - to eliminate. 19, 613. 22, 1102.	beselben - to sully. 19, 1701.
Ausschnetten - to cut out, to cut away. 19, 853.	consist with - are based on. 18, 1518.
auswestern - auswersen. 22, 1487. Cf. entwestern.	bestricken - to take a vow from someone that he will not move away
Disassociation, separation. 18, 1015.	from the place. 22, 1033. It must be read there "bestricken" outside--out. Old edition, vol. 7, 1291. let be outside. ibid. 1240.	instead of "beschicken". Compare the introduction to this to take off - to take off, to reserve something for oneself. 18, 306. 1014.	volume, p. 57.
Excerpt - Exception. 22, 1504. 1506.	Betlin Prayer. 19, 1122.
	amount - tolerate. 20, 76.
	Bettrrß -a paralytic (paralyticus). 22, 1896.
	hives -to offer for exchange. 18, 308.

to prove - to test. 19, 1703. proven - it can be proven. 18, 942.	Credence - credentials. 22, 1398.
bewandt - related, friendly. Alte Ausg. 7, 2434. to let tame - to let rule and reign. Old ed. 7, 1735.	Curtisans - courtiers. 18, 1302.
bidmen - quake. 11, 2264.	Dale--Dohle. 20, 2267.
Bildung - Bild, Bildniß. Alte Ausg. 8, 88.	Giving thanks - thoughts. 19, 1734.
Bireth (Bareit, Banneth) - beret. 11, 487.	Jannen (dirmen, linen) - consecriren. 20, 993.
Biretlin - Barettlein. Old edition 8, 463. to - be. 18, 1341. 20, 42.	Darbloser - Darbender. 19, 1053.
Bißlin (from Büß) - Küsse. 19, 1931.	Jaumeln - to stagger. 20, 265.
blank - white. 20, 188.	stretchy - ductile, tough. Old ed. 7, 2263.
Blanketeu -- Blank; paper, with own signature and seal, but not inscribed. 19, 1900.	Dimung - Consecration. 19, 1204. conversion 20, 332. discipliniren - to chastise. 19, 1682.
Blaßtücker - cheater, deceive 19, 925.	Docke (Tocke) doll. 19, 1094. 22, 903.
Leaf - the disc. 20, 931.	Dockenwerk - Puppetry. 13, 1288.
scroll - chat. 18, 1306.	Dod -- Pathe.
blecken - to look at, to let see. 18, 1337.	Dohn - sound, vocals. Jen. (1562) 8, 140.
stay - let stay. 18, 1301.	dohnen - to sound, in the compound: to listen and to dohnen. Jen. (1585) 2, 236. - Auch- voll sein, old ed. 7, 763,--dunen. Cf. 19, 416.
Bleuel - a flat wood provided with a handle for beating. Witt. (1553) 3, 467.	Double-cross - fraudulent dice game. 20, 2093.
bleuen - to plague, to drive. 19, 1670. blinzlings - blindlings. 20, 1008.	Dreckel, Drecketal - Decret, Decretal. 22, 1516. 848.
Mere, one - lay - shamefully fall. 11, 1806. Erl. 47, 203.	Thirtieth s. Trigesimä.
Bombart - a dull, deep sound. 19, 1933. bören - to burn. 19, 522.1908.	Drue - chest, box. Jen. (1566) 4, 316.
Evil (bosses) -- post. 20, 279.	Druckpfenning - Pfennigdrücker, Geizwanst. Erl. 44, 205.
Boßleich - bowling alley. 22, 23. (Fürstemann, Neues Urkundenbuch, p. 354, is to read "Boßleich" instead of Bogleich").	Drums - drums. 18, 1292.
Bötel (Böttel) - beadle, henchman, war servant. 19, 1175. fire tail - a fire that still smokes a little. 19, 963.	dunen - to be drunk. 19,416.
Brazil - red dye oil. 20, 819. breakable - frail. Erl. 29, 83. break - to grind, to bite the teeth firmly together. 19, 1722	Dünkel - To think in favor of. 18, 943.
Fracture - pants. 19, 1027. 22, 734.1431.	Dunkelfeiner, Dünkelgut - a thin-skinned person. Jen. (1568) 6, 145b. Erl. 44, 269.
Bruntz shards (Bruntzschirbel) - chamber pot. 22, 1700.	meager - lamentable. Old ed. 7, 1313.
Book guide - bookseller. 19, 530. letters -- buchstabiren. 20, 782. buff -- puff, push. Jen. (1566) 4, 499 d. Busse - jack. 18, 1044.	Durst s. Thurst.
Bufferei - Büberei. 18, 1007.	thüftig (thürtig) - impudent, presumptuous. 19, 1668.
Frets, from the - (and from the -) = flush. 18, 963.1274. 20, 911.	Dutten teat. 20, 53.
Bundwerk - edging with fur work. 18, 935.	Adventure, on - on the unknown. 11, 1641.
Penance - Kiss. Jen. (1566) 5, 268b.	ebmsteuern - driving into the unknown. 20, 775.
atone - to punish. Erl. 47, 129.	ebenteuerlich - strange. Old edition 8, 1240.
Caballen - horses. Old issue 8, 901.1002.	before, else. 18, 1446.
Carnal (carnalis - carnal), mocking for Cardinal, 19, 716, and Carnalhut - Cardinal's hat 19, 716. These two words should not have been resolved in the text; the resolution has been accidentally taken over from the old edition.	marital - substantial. 18, 1354.
carnal - cardinal. 19, 774.	Ehehalt -- servant. 13, 162.
Carnöffel - the jack in the deck; Cardinal. 19, 774.	Eyern - Aehren. Jen. (1568) 6, 1341).
Casel a chasuble. 18, 1286.1361. 20, 185.	ehrgyttig - ambitious. 18, 1264.
Cavat - altan-like porch of a house, bay window. Old edition 8, 948.	Ehrnhold - Herold. Jen. (1564) 1, 441.
Cavillation - evasion, sophistry. 19, 1861. cavilliren - to engage in sophistry. Old edition 8, 470. collation conversations - table talk. 22, 296.	own - to give to one's own, to appropriate. 18, 1040. also: to be one's own. 19, 1143.
Comment - Fündlein, Erdichtung. 18, 973. 1047.	something - anything, anything at all. Old ed. 7, 1022.
Corporal - a white linen cloth for covering the hosts. 18, 1493. 19, 949.	Einrösser - the one who rides a horse. 22, 1271. also: Landreiter, Gendarm. (Fürstemann, N. Urkundenbuch, p.354b.)
	Einsiedel - Hermit. 19, 1169.
	retract - restrict. Old ed. 8, 774.
	Vain, a - a nothing. 20, 852.
	Eli singen - to sing a farewell song. 20, 282. 22, 1367 "Heli singen". Ant - Ant. Jen. (1562) 8, 21.
	emperen - to spare. Witt. (1553) 3, 465.
	sensitive - sensitive. 20, 240.
	endlich (Luc. 1, 39.) - hasty, hurried. 13, 2737.
	end - lead out. Old ed. 8, 1097.
	finally - definitively. 18, 1441. once and for all. Old ed. 8, 1253.
	Angel notes - English gold coins. 19, 412.
	enhandicap - back. 18, 881.
	Erne - fool (?) (Dietz). 19, 269. According to the context, it seems to mean a mad man possessed by the devil.
	de-completed - incomplete. 19, 1943.
	To make a eunuch out of a person. Erl. entheffen - to deprive of help. 20, 1858.

to bring in the right direction, to teach. 20, 256. 1051.
 to be seated - to be elevated. 11, 1645.
 escape - to escape, to escape. 11, 1809.
 to wash away the chrism and oil (Bucer). 20, 418.
 Epulo - Schlemmer. 19, 1892.
 He--Lord. 19, 658. 20, 272. acquire --eramen. 19, 1400. old ed. 8, 406.
 to behold, to -- to show oneself, to reveal oneself. Old edition.
 7, 2130. (With Walch: to occur.)
 Erbeis - pea. 20, 952.
 Deferral - reverence. 19, 1157.
 erbidmen - earthquake. Old ed. 7, 2464.
 to please -- to compensate for something. 13, 701.
 get - get. 12, 91. to make merry (erlöstern) -- to enjoy, to delight. 13, 2755. slay -- to smash (afflictus). 19, 1142.
 erseuchelt - hunted. (Cf. geseseuchelt.) Jen. (1568) 7, 224d. ersucht
 - sought. 20, 178.
 consider - trust. 19, 442.
 to consider - to be prepared for. 13, 701. bold - confident, defiant, audacious. 19, 1716.
 Archstultus - Aristotle. 18, 1338.
 about or sthan - earlier. 18, 1535.
 stho -- somewhere. 20, 949. 1009.
 Facilet - Sweat towel, handkerchief or handkerchief. 13, 2761.
 (Missing in Dietz.)
 Farch mother -- piglet mother, sow. 20, 1950.
 almost very. 18, 934.
 lazy, to let oneself be - to let oneself be morose. Alte Ausg. 8, 442. lul thun - to be peevish. ibid. 8, 1249.
 Purgatory soul - soul in purgatory. 18, 950.
 enemies - hate. 19, 778.
 feisten--farts. 20, 1994.
 fern (fert) - in the previous year, in the idiom: Heuer wiefern. 13, 660.
 Fire, the sacred -- the rose, the red run. 20, 2014. fiedern (fiddern) - to feather, to decorate.
 19, 1913. old ed. 8, 1166.
 Felting - clumsiness. 18, 1326.
 Finance -- intrigues. 18, 1537.
 Finance - intrigue, fraud. 10, 83. 19, 1762.
 fitzeln (shred) - to tear to shreds. 20, 778.
 Flegel -- flagella, Geißeln. Erl. 47, 190.
 fodder -- demand. 19, 1103.
 Claim - promotion. 20, 166.
 Frauenh't - Women's guardian, eunuch. Erl. 26, 62.
 free -- make free. 20, 153.
 alien - to alienate, to withdraw. 18, 1309.
 fretzen - to feed, to feed. 20, 2000.
 Frohnfasten - the fasts on the Quatember days. Alte Ausg. 7, 766.
 Frumen - that which is pious, useful. 11, 1649. lead - to guide. 20, 232.
 Advocate -- advocate, representative, advocate. 20, 44. gach -- abrupt, hurried. 20, 889.
 Gack - Kaak, pillory, pillory. 20, 998. In De Wette I, 569 erroneously "sack". Seidemann in De Wette VI, 670 has improved this, but explains it as "gallows".
 Gauls -- the priests of Cybele. 19, 1483.
 Galrede -- Gallerte, 19, 422. 20, 2035. old ed. 7, 771. 2152.
 gan (Jen. (1568) 6, 1121.,) -- gönnne. 19, 413. 20, 1999.

Ganerbenhaus (Janerbenhaus) -- a house in which "every" man has a right and which is open to everyone. 19, 510.
 Garen - yarn, nets. 22, 1281.
 Garst -- Malice 19, 1854.
 Gauch (Gauff) - joke, foolishness. 18, 1356.
 Gauch (name of cuckoo) -- Narr. 19, 1842.
 Gäucherei (Gäuchelei) - foolishness. 18, 1358. 19, 1887.
 20, 793.
 gecken (geckzen) -- cry of the jackdaws. 19, 776. 1865.
 Geckism - mocking name Luther gives to Agricola's Catechism. 20, 1654.
 geel, gel - yellow. 19, 630. 20, 883.
 dangerous (gefehr) - hostile, leprous. Old ed. 8, 457. 761.
 Countercaster - object (objectum). 18, 953.
 Geher - ridicule, mockery. Erl. 44, 318. Old edition.
 7, 2311.
 gehnemäulen -- to open the mouth yawning. 20, 837.
 Drool -- empty talk. 18, 1356.
 Horny - testicles. Witt. (1553) 3, 459.
 spiritual - at the bottom of the heart. Erl. 37, 359.
 rummaged - bought. 19, 1762.
 strived for - ardently strived for. Jen. (1568) 7, 224.
 gelterr - to give payment, to pay. Old ed. 8, 1234.
 kröchtzet krächzt. Jen. (1568) 7, 224.
 deliver -- coagulate. Old ed. 8, 978.
 Solved -- lot, lead, bullet. Jen. (1562) 8, 249.
 gem - against dem. 19, 627. Instead of: Dem Türken read: Gem.
 gemeiniglrich - like all people in general. 18, 1301.
 genemäulen s. gehnemäulen.
 Genetter (ital. ginetto) - light horse. 13, 1748.
 enjoyable - profitable. 18, 1523.
 discussed - put in place. 20, 13.
 Geplätz -- Patching. 20, 778.
 Blaring -- Dazzle. Alte Ausg. 7, 853. 1914.
 geramen -- to target, to take aim at.
 19, 1941. cf. De Wette VI, 222.
 gerathen - to deprive, to dispense with. 20, 189.
 gereden - to vow, to pledge. 19, 720. Old ed. 7, 1908.
 Geren - Rockschooß. (Hes. 16, 8.) Old ed. 8, 1404.
 Business - Creature. Old ed. 8, 1096. order. ibid.
 Geschicht, the - the thing that has happened, the factum. 20, 277.
 1007.
 accelerated (Hos. 12, 5.) - given the victory (?). 19, 866.
 Geschlepp--Gefolge. Erl. 44, 131.
 smoked - smoked, burned. Erl. 26, 69.
 pushed -- pushed, pushed. 19, 816.
 swiftly! - swings. 20, 52.
 schwoll (geschwal) - swollen. 13, 2393.
 Ulcer - a large swarm. 19, 831.
 Gesell, a good - hypocrite, godless man. Old edition.
 7, 2286. 2340. 2515.
 disgusted - strived after. Jen. (1568) 7, 224.
 Clamp - clasp. 22, 1686.
 tense -- imprisoned. Erl. 47, 171. 170.
 Rafters -- entablature, rafterwork. 19, 1881.
 Gespügniß -- spook, empty appearance. 18, 962.
 Geströde -- Spülicht. 19, 1389.
 Getas (Getæ) - Gothen. 10, 342.
 Getzen. 22, 1588. s. gecken.
 Getzung - tongue, language. Witt. (1553) 6, 481.
 Geuchelei (smokehouse) see Gäucherei. 20, 793.
 geudic - wasteful. Witt. (1553) 6, 591.
 Geuße - abundance (in our edition: "sufficiency").
 10, 402.

2394 Verzeichniß einiger seltenen oder veralteten Wörter in Luthers Schriften. 2395

Guarantee possession (Luther). Erl. 26, 93.	Hoffet - Planer. 18, 956.
Rifles - weir, dam. 19, 693.	to fetch, to close in the hollow - to make a conclusion from silence. 18, 1425.
wean - to wean off, wean off (from the breast). 20, 53.	holhippellen - mean scolding of a solder. 18, 1253.
desired (adj.) - for which I have a desire. Old ed. 8, 1484.	Holhipler - a meanly scolding lotterbube. 18, 955. Zwingli uses the form: "Holhüppen" (20, 1205. cf. 20, 1189), Emser: "Holhüppen" (18, 1253, note/5), people who fetch the Hüppen>, i.e. the Abhub. - Kawerau, Agricola, p. 112, explains (because he confuses "Hippe" [Abhub] with "Hippel" [Wäffel]) "Hippenbube": a boy who offers baked goods for sale. In Förstemann, N. Urkunden-., p. 294a, we find: "Hippenträger".
Tools. 19, 639.	Hell Oven Corner. 22, 777.
Tides, the seven - horae canonicae . 19, 860.	Holzschuher - Barfüßermönche, Franciscan. 22, 683. 18, 1418 f.
Producer - Witness. 18, 1329.	Horä - the seven Gobetz times. 18, 1552.
Gezeugniß - Testimony. 18, 954.	Hülfen - Gehülfin. 19, 1733.
gezwagen - pinched, head washed. 11, 1226.	hützelig - shriveled, like baked fruit. 22, 1984.
Equal purchase - lawful purchase. 20, 792.	Hutzelprediger, ein Scheltwort Carlstadts wider Luther" . 20, 258.
Equal - Gleichniß. 20, 1967.	ichtes, ichts - anything. 18, 893. 20, 959. 22, 8. always, evermore - ever. 18, 1493. 20, 797. fervor - rut. 19, 1155.
Equality. 20, 281.	Island - infula , bishop's cap. 18, 1490.
gleichzu - straight ahead, without beating about the bush. Alte Ausg. 8, 673. gließe - gleißete. 12, 1283.	irtzen (Jen. (1568) 6, 544b) - "your" name (like dutzen). 10, 1015.
milder - lenient. 11, 1842.	them, themselves - to speak of themselves in the majority. 20, 2223.
Göckelmännlein - little juggler, little fool. 20, 2195. göcken (köcken) - to spit, to vomit. 20, 866.	jach (gach) - swiftly, hurriedly. 20, 889.
Göckler Gaukler. 19, 413.	jachen/jagen. 20, 1915. Old ed. 8, 1229. 1304.
Goldfasten - Nothfastm, the fasts on the four days of Quatember. 19, 601.	Yacht baptism - emergency baptism. 19, 1227.
Gorre - bad horse. 20, 973.	Janerbernhaus s. Ganerbernhaus.
Idolater - idolater. 20, 776.	Jauf - Gauch, joke, foolishness. 18, 1356.
Grepelmarkt - a marketplace. Erl. 26, 19. gro -grob. 19, 629.634.	Jenitser - Janissaries. 22, 1604.
Grumpen - crumbs, Brockm. 18, 1287. 20, 1847. Gründe - foundations (fundamenta). 19, 1119. grunts, wrong reading Erl. 27, 238 instead of: Grumpen. Gugel (Kogel) - hood, cap. 18, 1552.	Jope - jacket. 20, 747.
Hence: Gugelfritz -a monk. 18, 1533.	Juche - Jauche. Witt. (1554) 7, 250b.
Guldenstück (gülden piece) - gold jewelry, gold embroidered robe. 10, 346. old issue 7, 851. 2120. 8, 1224. gumpen - jump. 13, 1097.	Jew, a red - the Turk. 22, 858.
Hair loss - to suffer a severe defeat. 20, 1016. 19, 417. Also: to prepare for defeat. 20,2072.	Jüdischheit - Judenschaft. 20, 1826.
Hadeln (Haddeln, Hoddeln) - rags, rags. 19, 1412. 1902.	Jungherren, Junghern-Junker. 13, 2662. 20, 875.
Handfan - Manipel. 20, 390.	Kanden (Kandel) - Kannen. 19, 823. old ed. 7, 2021. 2482.
Hamen - net. 22, 1442, also in the idiom: to fish before the Hamen - to chase away the fish that are before the net.	Kasel s. Casel.
Hanpotzen - Scarecrow in hemp. Alte Ausg. 8, 1307. Erl. 27, 321.	Kemnotes - chambers. 20, 955.
Hare (hair) - hair, fur. In the idiom: Are you of the hair, i.e. are you so constituted? 20, 165. 830.	heretic - to make a heretic. 18, 1299.
Harns - Harnisch. Erl. 27, 291.	Keutel - bag in the middle of the net. 22, 1656. kick - poke, hit. 20, 167. 223, 799.
Urinary sherd - chamber pot. 19, 1263.	Kielkropf (Kilkrob, Kilkropp) - changeling, an idiot. 19, 1296. 20, 258. 1982. 22, 757.
Harre, die - the Long Time. 22, 1489.	Kinckernel - Mandate (?). 19, 1927.
häubist - hauest. 18, 1341.	to grind - to grind one's teeth. 19, 1722. to make a piercing sound. Old ed. 8, 1475 f.
Haufe, der Verlorne - the troop of the army. 20, 2178. Seidemann, Münzer, page 84, explains it: "der erste Schlachthaufe".	Kläret - sugar water or another flavored potion. 13, 142. Old ed. 7, 2077.
Heie -- Schlligel, wooden hammer, ram block (Grimy). heisch heiser.	Click blob, blemish. Old issue 7, 1571.
Old ed. 7, 600.	click - blot, smear. 20, 768. be unclean. Old ed. 8, 889.
Heroes - leg irons. 19, 1682.	Cliff - a trap that collapses. Alte -Ausg. 8, 454.
Helekeplein - Hehlkäpplein. 20, 2112.	klitzschen -- clap. 20, 779.
Heli sing s. Eli.	jingle - ring. 20, 904.
Hempel - Dummkopf. 20, 956. 970. unpolished man. Erl. 44, 332.	Gag - unpolished man. Erl. 44, 332.
Autumn harvest. Alte Ausg. 8, 1247. herwieder - dagegen. 18, 1450.	Kobelbad - Teufelsbad (Kobel - Devil [Grimm]). 12, 1415.
Hofrecht (Hoffrecht) - Hoffe recht, Gutdünken, Dafürhalten. 20, 285. 1062.	KöMei, KöckereiSpeierei. 20, 800.
planing - höfeln. Old ed. 8, 358.	köcken disgust to vomit, vomit. 20, 800.

2396 Index of some rare or obsolete words in Luther's writings; 2397

Köcken - The Spied. Erl. 26, 21.	Solution. 19, 627, 999.
Kogel s. Gugel.	Lotter - Lotterbube. 22, 1650.
Kogei apple - tip of the hood (liripipium). 18, 988. 19, 1813.	Slut paners --- vagrants who go on the lottery. 13, 2736.
Kolde - head, also the plate. 18, 1553. 19, 1354. in the idiom: mit der Kolde lausen, Kolde means a beating. 20, 214.	Lungm, with - to throw out - to chase away with disgrace. 13, 1224. 20, 780.
headstrong - stiff-necked, obstinate. Old ed. 7, 2417.	lurtfch futsch, verloren. 20, 991.
Körestein - a selected stone. Old issue 7, 2194.	Magister noster, title of doctor at the university. 18, 1502.
Körkinder - adopted children. 20, 2081.	moravian - stirring around. 19, 278.
korre - kirre, zahm. 10, 382.	mal an, in the expression: pfui dein mal an, or: pfui dich mal an - Pfui dich doch! 20, 965. Old ed. 7, 302; also: Pfui dich Maul an. Old ed. 7, 1929 - Pfui dein Maul an. Old ed. 7, 2108. 2363.
körm - bold, audacious. 20, 1765.	Malstatt - place of gathering. Erl. 55, 122. malvasia - a delicious wine. 18, 1024. 1340.
Corso - Corsican wine (?). Erl. 26, 128.	mäkeln - to stain. 18, 1302.
Köten, der Koten spielen - to deal with someone as one pleases. 20, 2088. - Köhde - the ankle on the horse's foot.	Manipel - hand flag, a piece of ecclesiastical regalia. 18, 1490. 20, 390.
Vomit -Whore. 19, 1887.	Maran - a complete unbeliever. 22, 851. 1609.
Krank (Krenck) - weakness, lack of strength. Old ed. 7, 1291.	Martens - occupied by Marderpetz. 20, 226.
krauchen - to crawl. Erl. 24, 54.	Marderschaube - a delicious, marten-trimmed, loose outer garment. 13, 1298. Erl. 47, 212.
Krausen (Kroos in Low German) - Krug. Erl. 55, 67.	to moderate, to - to mast, to conform to. 12, 85, Maul - muzzle animal. Old ed. 7, 1262. (Erl. 45, 243 wrong: "Gaul".)
Herbs, (dealing) with herbs - sorcery. 22, 1781. crying - (ears) ringing. 19, 714.	mulen - to pull the mouth. 20, 786.
Kretschmer (Kretschmar, Kretzmer, Kretzmaier) - Krämer, Wirth. 18, 306. 19, 820. Wirthshaus. Erl. 47, 71.	Martyrdom == Martyr image. Old edition 8, 60.
Crown Prayers - Prayers of the Crown of the Blessed Virgin. 22, 1319.	mausen - to play a game in the dark. Erl. 26, 50. 87. 299.
Krötengerick - Toad breeding (Gerick - the young brood). 13, 1265.	mausen - to moult, to throw off the shell (from crab). Erl. 47, 38.
krump -krumm. 20, 30.	mehe - more. 19, 628.
Coolable - crib. 13, 1084.	Mehrde (Meerde, Merde [merda]-mash, Gemengsel. 10, 1944, Koth. 20, 2094.
kündig - apparently, universally known. 19, 241.	meijsche Butter - May butter. 19, 1264.
Kürñß (Kuruß) - Panzer, Harnisch. 22, 191. cf. old ed. 7, 2174. 2308. 2412.	menkeln - to find fault with, to find deficiency. 20, 775.
Kürisser - a soldier protected with a Küraß. 18, 1272. 1326.	noticeable - to be noticed, to be observed. Erl. 37, 364.
Kux share in mine. 22, 812. Kützel - ticklish. 20, 2225 ..	Metze - a maiden. 18, 1483.
Lactuke - lettuce, herbs. 19, 434.	mild - inept. 18, 892.
Ladüinkel (Tentzel I, 211 Laßdüinkel, supercilium) - who lets himself be a bit thin. 22, 689.	Minor penitentiary master - sub-penitentiary master. 19, 773.
Lamprete - Bricke, a delicious fish. 18, 958. long - long lasting, 19, 1166.	minders - in the least. 20, 490.
lappen - to put on lobe, to mend. 20, 234.	disrespectful - disreputable. 18, 948.
Latwerge - sauce. Old ed. 7, 763.	Mitzbietung - disrespect, blasphemy. 18, 968.
Lauer (Lawer) - a rogue. 22, 1316. (lons - after wine, spent grains, marc wine) bad wine 19, 539.	mißhallen, mißshellen - to contradict. 18, 964.
Arbor - Permit. 19, 258. 601.	Mithaller - who votes with someone. 18, 966:
honest - alone. Erl. 37, 358.	Newt, the colorful - [the poisonous animal], "since all poisonous worms fetch poison" (Luther). Old edition 7, 272. - 22, 1045. 1047.
lcken (lick) - to jump, to lash out behind. 20, 799. 2031.	Morche - morels, a fungus. 20, 578.
Leich, the -skittle alley. 22, 665. old ed. 5, 1182. leichtferfergen - light-weight. 20, 234.	Morff -Schwel". 22, 1713.
leit -lie. 19, 1119.	Moshei - shell. 20, 213.
lenden - steering, turning, guiding. 18, 1268. 20, 201.	Muhme - aunt; also sibling, sister's daughter. 22, 1142.
Reader - Lector (at the university). 18, 1053.	Mundbügel, Erl. 56, 120, is wrong reading instead of: "Winden und Bülgen". Cf. De Wette VI, 487, amn. 6.
Letze farewell. 20, 2015. 2149.	Mussen - leisure. Jen. (1566) 4, 304b.
leugen - deny, and lie. 20, 175. 183. 814.	indifferent - indifferent, without validity. 20, 678.
Libell - lampoon. 19, 1930.	sewing - nearly. 18, 1273.
licentiously easy. 19, 1850. ed. 46, 317.	nehrllich, nerlich - almost, hardly. 19, 1302. low. Old ed. 8, 197.
leftward - to wrong opinion. 18, 9M.	more honest - more to mow (talk). 11, 1642.
Liripipium - a cocktail tip, an appendage on the hood. 18, loddern - to plod, to lead out in a boyish manner. 20, 203. lörlen - to hear, to wail, to whine. 19, 1251. lören and dohnen. Jen. (1585) 2, 236.	Niclasvischöfe - Child's Play Bishops. 19, 675. 1358.
	Niederwad - Hosen (Bruch). Old ed. 8, 177.
	riveting, itself - itself suffering. 19, 1910.
	Niftel - Nephews. Erl. 56, 107. 111.

2398 Verzeichniß einiger seltenen oderveraltetWörterin Luthers Schriften. 2399

- nigern - curious. 20, 2228. Erl. 55, 119. nöthigen, sich - to force oneself. 18, 955.
- Odern - veins. 19, 725.
- Oeß - Aas(?). 20, 315.
- open - apparent, clear. 19, 827.
- ömen - to make assumptions. 20, 744.
- Ongeil - without testicles, eunuch (Luther). Witt. (1553) 3, 459.
- Order --- Order. 18, 307.
- Order - ordination. 19, 1146.
- Place of the clothes - the extreme ends. 18, 965.
- örtern - to interpret, explain. 18, 1272. determine. Old ed. 8, 618.
- örtern - to bind to a place. 18, 1350. 20, 1353.
- Ostiarus - doorkeeper (the lowest consecration). 19, 1284.
- Pacem (euphemistic for podicem) - the posterior. 20, 1968, also: its incense. Erl. 26, 127.
- Pallium - bishop's insignia (Bishop's Mantle 18, 1008, explains Witt. [1554] 7, 610b). 10, 289.
- pampeln - to fidget. 20, 851. Old ed. 8, 349.
- Panetb, Pänet - beret. Witt. (1554) 7, 263. panketeren - to hold a banquet. 20, 2138.
- Poppy flowers. 18, 296. Also: Hie im Herbst herumfliegenden wolligen Sämlein. 19, 1505. 18, 254.
- Parable (bargello) - the captain of the guard in
- Parteke a begging piece. 11, 1743.
- Parteken, go to Parteken --- go begging. 22, 47.
- Paten - host plate. 19, 1053.
- Puff - bulge, full, be thick. Jen. (1566) 4, 506.
- Pegme, Begine - Begins, a kind of nuns. 13, 2612.
- Pellitschir 22, 1677 s. Bellitschier.
- Pearl Island s. Island.
- peulen - to do dirty work (?). Old edition 7, 1817.
- Pen - shit. 19, 1406.
- Pfinnchen---Pinnchen, Nägelchen (Grimm). 20, 1904. pfindt--feels. 18, 1349.
- Care, a - exist - buy revenue from customs and pensions by annual levy. 13, 2300.
- Pirzel - Bürzel, Schwänz. 20, 1968.
- Pletting - plate carrier, monk. Witt. (1553) 3, 500b.
- pletzen---patch. 20, 847.
- plixen - flash. Im. (1556) 3, 176 b.
- Plöche - Blocks. 19, 1967.
- Ploderment - fictional chit-chat. 18, 1442.
- Pobel, Pofel, Pöfel- -pöbel. 20, 143.
- Pöckler - Schild' 22, 1044.
- Pomp - Bombart, Fart. 20, 1983.
- pomp - fart. 20, 1994.
- Penalties. 18, 1527.
- Pötzen - Scarecrow, Popanz. 18, 1289. Old ed. 8, 1275.
- Potzenhut - hat of the scarecrow. Im. (1568) 7, 428 b. prallen - bale, mtt full cheeks scream. 22, 896.
- Presence - monetary gift for saying mass, also for listening to it. 19, 1173. 1186. Erl. 44, 353.
- praten - fry. Jen. (1568) 6, 230b.
- Proceß ---- Procession. Old ed. 7, 897. 903.
- Psittacus - parrot. 18, 1338.
- probiren-beweisen. 20, 1660.
- Publican - Publican. 18, 936.
- Püsch -Bushes. 20, 224.
- Puseron - disgraceful boy, sodomite. Witt. (1554) 7, 633b.
- Pusille - infant, small child. Erl. 56, 122.
- Cleaning s. Potzen.
- quad -- evil, bad. De Wette VI, 689. V, 792.
- Squares - ashlars. 22, 657.
- Quästm (quaestio) - questions, disputes. 18, 1297.
- Quat---dirt. 18, 1287.
- Quatern --- Bogm of four leaves. 18, 1256.
- Rabe, Rabm, mocking for rabbi and rabbis. 20, 2093. 2103.
- wheel breaking - wheels. 20, 270.
- raffeln - to riffle. 20, 252.
- ragen Erl. 27, 207. wrong reading instead of: "erjagen". Cf. 20, 1258.
- Ram (Rham, Rhom) - overburden, excavation, soot, dirt; in the idiom: Rahm fahm - to tarnish. 19, 1875. 20, 1890. old ed. 7, 368. 8, 842. 1190.
- Rant - throat (?). 13, 1029.
- Rapus, Rappuse, to give into the Rappuse ---- to give something into the big pile (as a booty) for free. 11, 2284. Old ed. 8, 432.
- Rastrum (grid) --- Leipzig beer. 18, 1024. 1047. 1340. smokeless -- smokeless. Jen. (1556) 3, 343 b. 344. space -- spacious. 20, 2092.
- Reffenter - Refectarium, dining room. 19, 1683.
- Birds of prey -- decoys. Old issue 7, 1465.
- ricey -- mounted. 18" 1272. 19, 1092. brave. 18, 982. chivalrous. 20, 2255.
- Riebe--Rib. 20, 792.
- Riege --- Rerhe. 18, 876. 20, 1074. .
- Giant - Hero, Warrior (Luther). 13, 2625.
- Rimlin - Riemlein. 20, 167.
- ringers - reduce. 13, 1109.
- Robunten - Scouring. 19, 855.
- rochzen (rochsen) - to belch, to spit out. 19, 356.
- Snotty, for Cochläus. Witt. (1554) 7, 572. rüchtig - fam. 19, 1165.
- Dog -- male, hunting dog. Witt. (1553) 3, 479.
- rugen - to rest. 19, 699.
- rugiglich - ruhig. 19, 676.
- quiet-idle. 11, 1771.
- Rüplin - Räuplein. 20, 264.
- rüffeln - to pull the mouth (from astonishment). 20, 218.
- (out of disgust). 20, 179.
- rusty (?). 19, 276. Sooted. Old edition 7, 574.
- Rutte --- Ruthe. Witt. (1554) 7, 574 b.
- full - enough. Erl. 46, 311.
- Infantile potion - Pork potion. 20, 270.
- Scapular, Schepler --- shoulder dress. 13, 2427. 22, 908.
- Shabab -- the refuse, sweepings. 19, 6Ä0. 20, 341. shabab -- there, past. Old ed. 7, 2160.
- schüfen - sheep-like. 20, 842.
- scharrm - to defy, to throb, to speak hopefully. Old ed. 8, 1193. 1198.
- Schaube - a wide outer garment. 20, 226. 22, 1496.
- Schaubhüte - a type of large straw hat. 22, 1623. show-hats- lurking down. Witt. (1553) 3, 462.
- The "Scharnützlein" - a container for keeping valuable things. Old edition 8, 1338.
- Schaufalt -- Schauspiel. 20, 341.
- Schele - hanger in the wreath. Jen. (1566) 4, 408b. schellig --- impatient, angry. 20, 170. old ed. 7, 1932.
- Schemes - Schattm. 20, 854.
- Schepler, Scheppler-Scapulier, shoulder dress of the religious clergy. 19, 631. 22, 1406.
- Scherganten - Schergen. 13, 2601.
- Scherrn, Scherrm - butcher stands. 20, 841. 867. scheubet - pushes. 20, 2125.

2400 Verzeichniß einiger seltenen oder veralteten Wörter in Luthers Schriften. 2401

Scheuchter -Scheuche. 19, 855.	disturb - irritate. 18, 952.
Schilling - Ruthe, Strafe. Old edition 7, 1613.	Strape chords. 22, 1637. Strapechorde. 22, 1634 - a cruel torture,
Schimpfe Scherz. 18, 1005. 20, 780. schimpfen -scherz. 20, 37. 19, 941. 721.	Strauesgütlem - waster. 22, 228.
Umbrella strokes - fencing strokes. 22, 735. feints. 22, 1276.	Stremen - appearance, shine. 12, 252.
Schirr (on schirr go Jen. [1566] 5, 266b) - dishes, i.e. everything needed for living. 10, 739.	Ströde - Spülicht. 20, 270. 10, 1944.
Schlangengerick - young brood of snakes. 11, 1809.	Stocking - hull. 22, 7, 1086. 1508. 20, 2172.
bad - plain, simple, straightforward. 18, 950,953. all right. 22, 473.	Step year - every seventh year of life. 22, 1553.
badly --beats. Jen. (1566) 4, 503 b.	Chair Robber - Wealth Robber. Old issue 7, 1898.
schleffe - to sleep. 20, 133.	8, 257. chair - Capital, Vorrath (Kaltschmidt).
slip - to be slippery. 20, 848.	Stützet - support. 20, 846.
Schmitzen - Wischer, reprimand. Old issue 7, 2068.	support - stützen. 22, 913.
Snotty! - schnöbe Aussonderung, snot. 19, 1848.	to soil - to contaminate. Erl. 44, 320. old ed. 7, 1817. 2552. wühlen (im Unflath). Old ed. 8, 328.
Schock, one old - sixty groschen, worth one gold. 22, 1645.	Tägen - to hold days, to meet. 22, 1248.
schochter - shy. 19, 682.	Taig -Teig. 20, 754.
already - beautiful. 20, 175. 11, 20 should be read: It is beautiful evil - the shiny is evil. 20, 2186.	Pocket market - gossip society. 22, 642.
Writings --Writings. 18, 1288. 1292. 20, 793. 841. 1957.	Täuferichen - little Baptist (little John). 13, 2736. 2738.
schuchtern - to shoo. 19, 855.	temmen, demmen - to indulge. 20, 267.
Pupil - school teacher, scholastic. 18, 972.	Temmer - Schweiger. 13, 2765.
digging - digging for ore on the surface. 22, 1532.	Tendel, Treudel -Trödel (Förstemann, N. Urkundenbuch, p. 319, is the wrong reading: "Tendet") s. Treudelmarkt.
Sagittarius - beginner, ABC student. 22, 1496. weld - bleed. 13, 490.	tenniniren - the begging of the monks; of it.
schwensten. 20, 2243.	Terminirer - mendicant monks. 19, 677.
Schwerichen - Schwäre. 13, 2613.	Tham (Jen. [1568] 6, 91) -- Damm. 19, 1246.
seelzogen - are in their final throes. 13, 1878.	thar - dares. 18, 1256.
Soap - Drool. Witt. (1554) 7, 172.	tharn, thüren - may, dare. 18, 304. old ed. 8, 1444.
very - more. 11, 1807. .	Thesem - a fragrance. 20, 1772. Old ed. 7, 301.
Seiger - Sun pointer. 19, 1092.	Thesemapfek, a perfume. Erl. 26, 127.
shallow - shallow. Jen. (1556) 3, 381b.	Theriac - Medicine Against Poison. Old edition 8, 1315. 1384.
to be - to sow. Erl. 54, 345.	Tholen--Dohlen. 13, 2156.
Set - to set captive. Erl. 53, 377. 413.	thon -thun. 20, 55.
Sesto - printed sheet of six leaves. 18, 1268.	thüren - to be allowed, to dare, to dare. 18, 1507.
sider - meanwhile (intedrim). 19, 1158.	Thurm - Gefängniß. 22, 463.
sidermals - since. 19, 1706.	Thurst - presumption, insolence. 20, 183.
sink - to drive a shaft vertically. 22, 1532.	Thvmien - thyme (as incense). 12, 95.
Sod, Sotten - boiled, brew, impure mixture. 18, 298.	kills--sucks. 19, 417. 20, 787.
to let - to let deal with. 13, 1886. shall - become. 22, 445.	Tocke s. Docke.
Speck, a grove near Wittenberg. 22, 198.	Töcklein - little doll. Old issue 7, 2039.
spenstig - unruly. 19, 900.	Todeske (tedeschi) - German. Erl. 26, 207.
Spikenard water - fragrant water (spike - lavender). 13, 2762.	Toppeler (doubler) - cheating dice players. 20, 943.
spittelisch - belonging to the hospital, sickly. Old ed. 7, 600.	Tostblume - the dost, Wohlgermuth. 22, 847.
Spitzknecht - knave. 22, 1650.	Tracheit - Inertia. 18, 1342.
Spugniß - spook, ghost. 19, 855.	Tramyuder, a delicious wine. Erl. 29, 83.
flush - rob, plunder. 20, 1944.	Trau - faithfulness, faith, trust. 18, 1278.
Ständerling, Ständner - standing still to chat. 22, 642. 13, 2737.	Trebesand - driving sand. 20, 862.
starchless -- powerless. 18, 1278.	treit -trägt. 19, 629.
Stecklin - Splitterlein. 18, 1278.	TreudelMarkt - Flea Market. 22, 881.
Steft -- pen, spike. 20, 777.	Trigesimä - thirty masses for the dead. 19, 1136. 22, 773. 908. 1393.
control - support. 18, 1448.	Gannets--Gannets (?). 20, 261.
stumble, poke - tumble, swing. 20, 12.	Drip - the drop in the brain that causes disease and death. 19, 644. 22, 1476.
Sting, to give into - to plead guilty to. Erl. 26, 241. 243.	tropfen (Jen. [1556] 3, 512) - to make tropes. 20, 986, Trotzian - medicinal cake, cookies, incense. 22, 523. chug, chug - duck. 20, 160. 19, 1349.
Embroidery, for - on hair. 19, 1373.	tügten - were good. 20, 283.
vote - to determine, to separate out. 20, 1045.	tunkelt's (Jen. [1568] 7, 364b) - darkens it, hides it. 19, 1916.
Stiplin - Pünktlein. 19, 1412.	Tütel - Tüttel. 18, 1294.
Stole -- a piece of the clergy's regalia. 18, 1490. stönen -- to support. 22, 1245. 20, 72.250.	Ueberbund - Ausbündigkeit. 18, 1326.
	overbearing - exceedingly highborn, presumptuous, proud. 19, 689.

2402 Verzeichniß einiger seltenen oder veralteten Wörter in Luthers Schriften. 2403

Transfer - Addition, which exceeds the measure. 18, 901. 20, 2149.
super-evil - to be exceedingly evil, also: to surpass in wickedness.
20, 2156.

overcome - to defeat, to hold down. 22, 1308.

exceeded - surpassed. 18, 972.

Umschläger - usurer. 22, 1528.

careless - inconspicuous, difficult to notice. 11, 6. irreverent - disrespectful, insulting. 18, 938. uneß (vneß) - unappetizing, inedible. 20, 1788.2039.

13, 2766. Erl. 45, 176 Höck has read "dieß", for which the Erl. has put "Viehs".

ungeheiet - unmolested. 19, 1879. 1896. uncreated - unskilled, untalented. 13, 1218.

unequal - unjust, not according to faith. Erl. 55, 22.

Unlust - unpleasant thing, annoyance. 20, 157. unsöt - rude, harsh.

Erl. 55/100. old ed. 8, 1314. unstümig.- impetuous. 18, 1335.

incomprehensible - incomprehensible. 18, 953.

unwavering, unmanageable - without wavering, unshakable.

18, 954.978, 20, 74.

Urgicht - Confession, especially on torture. 19, 1905.

Old ed. 8, 917.

Urständ - Resurrection. 20, 491. 22, 993.

Veit, brother - the war servants. 20, 2204. spend - accomplish. 19, 1125. 1709. caked - covered. 19, 825.

We owe you our full gratitude. Old ed. 7, 2545. forgiven - poisoned. 19, 626.

poisoned - toxic. 18, 1010.

compare - equal respect. 18, 1581.

compared - made equal. 18, 1500. grudge - begrudge. Old edition 7, 1751.

behavior - reserved. 19, 1091.

to impose - to follow, to give space. 13, 1316. bewitch - represent [the place]. Erl. 44, 22.

lump - mutilate. 11, L.

degenerate - to forestall, to resist. Old ed. 7, 869. abandon (vorlafsen) - to refrain from. 18, 307.

misplace - refute. 18, 1041.

Publishers - Refusers. 18, 297.

Transfer - Refutation. 18, 296.

verlippen - to poison. 20, 891.

verlipt - poisoned. 18, 934. 1273.

The "Verlorne Haufe" - the army's supply train. 22, 1438. verlüstern s. erlüstern.

measured - agreed upon, stipulated. 18, 1445.

to be on good terms with someone. Old ed. 8, 644.

pitched - sealed. 19, 1065.

verposteiet - fortified. Erl. 26, 223.

verrohrt - stirred up, spilled. 10, 2187.

crazy, mad (by a woman) - weakened. 20, 1802.

assembled - total. 20, 172.

procure - to dispose of. 19, 700. wear out - worship, spoil. 13, 1300.

gobble up - devour. 19, 1173.

protected - provided with a shooter. 19, 693. provided - overlooked. Old ed. 7, 560. 8, 47.

Versisex - verse maker. 18, 1258.

promise - to deny. 19, 828. To speak disparagingly of something.

Old ed. 7, 1305. 1487.

Rejection - contradiction, rejection. 12, 85. Coiled - ethane, discarded. 20, 368. 369. demonized - deepened, sunk. 20, 1766. 1780.

Everything is geared to the best. Old edition 8, 674.

Orphan - an outcast. 18, 1032.

audacious - to consider it, to be prepared for it. Jen. (1566) 4, 488 d. to forgive, to abstain from a thing, (repudiare). Old ed. 8, 759. 764.

1125.

visirlich - possirlich. 19, 267. foolish. 22, 767. old ed. 7, 1968. 2140.

Full word - consent. 18, 941.

"before" as a prefix often for: "ver"; and conversely, "ver" for "before". Jen. (1566) 5, 3430.

(degenerate) occur (degenerate). 18, 1299.

former - before. 22, 495.

dare - to tackle. 20, 781.

wahen - to wobble, to waver. 20, 267.

Wahl (Wal) Welscher, Italian. 22, 1627.

Delusion - empty. 19, 928.

Währe duration. 22, 1089.

Forest brothers - hermits. In the St. Louis edition, vol. 10, 326, § 116 read: "Waldbrüder.

Forest rights - make forest right, slam. 18, 957.

Wallbrüder pilgrims. 10, 327, § 117.

wältigen - exercise violence. 19, 722.

transform - change. 19, 816.

changeable - changeable. 22, 132.

waver - doubt. 18, 1562.

when -denn. 18, 305.

tub, an exclamation of astonishment - Ei, seht doch nur.

18, 936.

Wapen, arms - weapons. 18, 1296. what -was. 20, 61. 22, 1295.

Laundry - orphans. Erl. 37, 385.

waserlei - any. 18, 950.

weger (also double comparative: wegerer) - a better way. 20, 455.457.

wegern - to refuse, to deny. 18, 1337.

Wegzeigen - Signposts. 10, 340.

Wehetage, the - pain. Old issue 7, 2125.

Weibling - female human. 18, 1301.

Weichmuth - female essence, incapacity. 18, 963.

weimeln - to teem. 20, 342.

Wenden - Vandals. Old edition 7, 2506. few - make less. 18, 1276.

10, 340. if then - an expression of astonishment and challenge: Ei was! 18, 1444.

work-related - according to the craft. 22, 1401.

werrig - confused. 19, 830.

Being - to be (existere). 20, 783. 2058.

Western shirt - baptismal shirt, symbol of purity. Erl. 47, 38.

countermeasured. 20, 202.

Widerspiel - Gegengentheil. 11, 2277.

resists - refuses. 11, 1779.

wingen - to wring. 20, 1837.

wöllen - dressed in wool. Old ed. 7, 2412. 8, 55. wuschen - to wipe.

Erl. 44, 262. 281. 47, 80.

Zang Zank. 20, 765.

sign - bezeichnm. 20, 1007. 1008.

to accuse - to blame. Erl. 44, 225. Old ed. 7, 715. 8, 1221.

to break - to smash, to frighten, to drive. 11, 2277.

crushed - crimped. Erl. 26, 237.

zerloddert - torn, corrupted, ruined. Witt. (1554) 7, 149. Old ed. 8, 1263.

zermerkeln - crush. 20, 1970.

Pulverize - turn into dust. 19, 1871.
 Zisra (Ziphra, digit) - zero. 10, 289. Also: number sign. 20, 1978.
 2045.
 Zippeln (Zwippel) - onions. Jen. (1562) 8, 39. Old ed. 7, 1249.
 Zoten, in the idiom: to go to Zoten - to adhere, to take root. Old ed.
 7, 2278. to as a prefix - zer.
 Breeding - Reproduction. 20, 1797.
 Coincidence - incidence. 18, 1347. consent. 22, 468.
 Trains, zun - to die. Old edition - 7, 2364.

Listening - accessories. 18, 1361.
 zwagen - zwacken. 18, 898.
 Zwarg dwarf. 20, 246.
 Zwecken - Nagel, Centrum der Scheibe. Erl. 44, 175.
 two half - one and a half. 20, 969.
 zwiesen - in two columns. 20, 2082.
 twelve articles [of the Christian faith] - the apostolic symbolum. 19, 797.
 Twelve messenger - apostle. 18, 1495. 19, 776.
 Twelve messengers' evening - the evening before a feast of the apostles. 18, 1516.

Supplements and corrections.

To Volume 18.

Introduction, p. 10, Z. 20 v. o., read: 2 Thess.
 Introduction, p. 20 d, line 4 v. o., read: Pabstes.
 Introduction, p. 4d, line 5 v. o., delete the quotation marks.
 Introduction, p. 47b: Other authorities state that Erasmus had been Lector of Greek at Cambridge and had already left England permanently in 1513.
 Introduction, p. 48, line 7 v. o. "read: July 12.
 Col. 613, line 4 b. u., read: Palestine.
 Col. 928, note 2, read: lib. VI.
 Col. 929, Z. 4 v. u., erase the punctum.
 Col. 934, last line of text, read: torture through.

To Volume 19.

Introduction, p. 27, to note 4: The same error, only in somewhat milder words than in Köstlin, is also found in Kolde, Martin Luther, vol.
 II, p. 26.
 Introduction, p. 51 d, line 15 v. o., read: Ine. instead of: v.
 Introduction, p. 51a, line 4 v. u. in the text, read: 9901 Masses. Col.
 115, at the end of the first paragraph, can, according to the interpunction of the Latin Wittenberg edition, also be translated as:
 "like the Gauls (Galli), the priests of the goddess Cybele, cut themselves and with one", etc.
 Introduction, p. 36, we have taken the references where "Christi Ablaßbrief" is to be found in the editions, unfortunately! from the Erlangen edition. These are all wrong. It should read:
 "Eislebensche Ausgabe, Vol. I, p. 147; Altenburger, Vol. II, p.
 344; Leipziger, Vol. XVIII, p. 456." - The words "in den Hallischen Theil, p. 135" are to be deleted.
 Col. 124, line 2 v. u., read: diapason.
 Col. 346, last line, read: Papum.
 Col. 627, line 21 v. u., instead of: "Dem" read: "Gem", which is: against which.
 Col. 1418, Thesis 2, "in the fourth way" is a scholastic expression, which denotes that the statement (praedicatum) refers only to the One object, and only to this. The note, which is set to it, is to be deleted.

Re Volume 22.

Eii'eituna, p. 51, para. 5 v. u., penultimate line, read: "[d. i, take^" and erase the square bracket at the end of the paragraph.
 Introduction, p. 51 d, para. 3 v. u., line 1, read: para. 6.
 Introduction, p. 53d, line 3 v. o., read: which.
 Col. 29, lines 2 and 3 v. u., erase the brackets.
 Col. 429, § 44, line 1, read: 1537 instead of: 1541, which the old table speeches offer, because the theses in No. 31 of this volume are mentioned.
 Col. 830, § 71, line 1, read: an instead of: von.
 Col. 924, line 2 v. u., read: "Naumburg" instead of: "Neubruck" in Cordatus. On April 8, 1532, Naumburg burned down so quickly.
G; Langii Chron. Numburgensia at Menchen S. S. II, 78.
 Col. 925, §150, Z. 1, read: 1533, which is missing in the old table speeches. See the introduction to the 19th volume, p. 23 d.
 Col. 1010 has Cordatus erroneously 1521 instead of 1522, because the meeting of Marcus with Luther took place only (after Luther's return from the Wartburg) in early April 1522.
 Col. 1026, § 29, in the note, read: Cap. 45, § 58.
 Col. 1032, last line, delete parenthesis.
 Col. 1033, § 37, line 2 from the end, read: "bestricken" instead of: "beschicken". It follows that this speech belongs to the beginning of May 1540. Cf. the introduction to this volume, p. 57.
 Col. 1036, §41. The last paragraph is not spoken with reference to D.
 Jakob Schenk, but it refers to Agricola. It is contained in Col.
 1720, No. 160.
 Col. 1042, line 12 v. o., read: "auf dem Convent" instead of: "auf der Synode", because after the Schmalkaldic Convention the princes met in Zeitz, March 11-17, 1537, concerning the hereditary union of Saxony, Brandenburg and Hesse. Kawerau, Agricola, p. 173.
 Col. 1044, line 6 v. u., read: "Cyrсило" instead: Christo. The words objected to there belong in the text. Cyrsilus was stoned by the Athenians. Kawerau, Agricola, p. 200.
 Col. 1047, § 60, line 2 of text, delete: 1) .
 Col. 1081, § 124, line 10 of the text, read: "Hyperaspistes".
 In the first line of the annotation there, read: "the ablative" instead of: "erroneous".

Col. 1091, §148, line 2 of text, read: "that the" 2c.

Col. 1148, line 6 v. o., read: Eustochia.

Col. 1294 at the end is inadvertently omitted the following: On this day, the feast of Nicolaus [Dec. 6, 1538], he divided a nut according to the rule of Pliny [Hist. nat. XVII, 10, sect. 11, § 64] that the nuts turn (se vertant) on the shortest day and at the solstice. Thus also the plague tends to cease. Christ was born at the solstice, but he suffered at the time of the equinox.

Col. 1301, § 5, line 1, read: "Anno 38, den 21. December." For this exhortation occurred after the 37th sermon on the first four chapters of John, which was preached on "Saturday before the birth of Christ." Cf. Erl. Ausg., vol. 47, p. 77 ff. The plague did not appear until the end of November. Table Talks, Cap. 9, § 15.

Col. 1362, Z. 7 v. o., read: "1535" instead of: "1533" in the old table speeches. For on Nov. 7, 1535, Luther went to Vergerio. Cf. Walch, old edition, vol. XVI, 2292 ff. Seckendorf, Hist. Luth. lib. III, p. 95 (1). In 1533 in June the papal nuncio was.

Hugo Rango in Wittenberg, but did not get to see Luther. Walch, old edition, vol. XVI, 2280 and (duplicate) vol. XXI, 1406. According to this letter of Luther to Hausmann of June 16, 1533, also the date in Cap. 54, § 1: "am 21. Tage Martii" is wrong, because Rango was in Wittenberg about June 12, 13 or 14. Cf. Köstlin, Martin Luther, vol. II, p. 292.

Col. 1367, line 19 v. o., read: "sing" instead of "sink. On the idiom "Heli singen" compare No. 5 in this 20th volume, Col. 282, § 204.

Col. 1713, line 1, instead of: [Was Herz, was Hand] read: [Was Hirsche, was Hindinnen]. We owe this improvement to the kindness of Dr. theol. A. Zahn in Stuttgart.

Col. 1875, No. 466, read: Cap. 14, 27.

Col. 1880, no. 548, line 1, read: [Jan. 22].

Col. 1910, No. 857, read: Cap. 66, 62.

Col. 1918, No. 951, read: Cap. 51, 3.

Col. 1962, No. 1481, line 5, read: "Da" instead of: That.

Col. 1973, No. 1575, read: Cap. 74, 1.

Col. 1991, note 1, line 1, read: sic, or sicut and delete the comma after sicut.